Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If this motion is carried, would it be in order later on, if the substitute should be voted down, to offer an amendment to the pending resolution of the majority of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It would not be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS]. The Speaker has just said that if the previous question should prevail, it will not be in order, if the substitute should be voted down, to offer an amendment to the original resolution. Now, we would like to have an opportunity for such amendment; and I ask the gentleman to frame his motion in such a way that there may be that opportunity.

Mr. ADAMS. We will meet that question when we come to it. I can make no agreement now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the Chair says that if we do not make the agreement now we shall be cut off from making it afterwards.

Mr. ADAMS. I can make no agreement now. I have moved the previous question.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] has moved the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, it was agreed to; there being on a division (called for by Mr. BAILEY)—ayes 183, noes 129.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments in order to state in as proper a way as I can and in a manner becoming the dignity of the question now confronting us some of the reasons which actuated the Committee on Foreign Affairs in submitting this resolution to the House. But in deference to the universally expressed opinion on our side of the Chamber, I will refrain from doing so at this time and will give gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber an opportunity to express their views; and I will close in answer to their positions. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be no other method of getting the views of the minority before the House in the report submitted by them, I desire to read for the information of this body, in my own time, what they have presented on this occasion.

REPORT.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, having considered the message of the President of the United States, which was transmitted to Congress on Monday, April 11, 1898, and referred to said committee, submit the following report to the House of Representatives:

We recommend the following resolutions as a substitute for the resolutions submitted by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States Government hereby recognizes the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

"SEC. 2. That, moved thereto by many considerations of humanity, of interest, and of provocation, among which are the deliberate mooring of our battle ship, the Maine, over a submarine mine and its destruction in the harbor of Havana, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to employ immediately the land and naval forces of the United States in aiding the Republic of Cuba to maintain the independence hereby recognized.

"SEC. 3. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to extend immediate relief to the starving people of Cuba."

In support of the first resolution, guided by motives of humanity and of interest, influenced by divers provocations, among which are the deliberate mooring of our battle ship, the Maine, over a submarine mine, its ruthless destruction in the harbor of Havana, and the death of 266 seamen, we submit the facts to the House, to our countrymen, and to the world.

For more than a quarter of a century, with short intervals, a revolution has been in progress in Cuba, destroying our commerce and causing great financial loss to our citizens and unprecedented mortality among the contending factions.

For more than three years the Cuban patriots have struggled for freedom with courage, fortitude, and self-abnegation unexcelled in the annals of the human race. These people are our near neighbors, closely connected with us by ties of business and of friendship. In their aspirations for liberty they have been animated by our example and have modeled their form of government upon ours.

During these three years the Spaniards have butchered these people, starved helpless women, children, and old men by hundreds of thousands, and have wasted the island by fire and sword in violation of all the rules of civilized warfare. These acts of barbarous cruelty have filled the American people with horror, and they are practically unanimous in favor of recognizing the independence of the government established by that brave and heroic people by the expenditure of so much treasure and so much blood, and our people will be satisfied with nothing less.

The government which the Cubans have established has all the forms of a republic, and is a republic in fact, based on manhood suffrage, with legislative and executive departments in full operation, and with a judicial department so far perfect as the exigencies of the situation permit.

They levy and collect taxes, disburse large sums of money, conduct a postal system, maintain an army of 30,000 men in the field, have defended themselves successfully against 225,000 Spanish soldiers, 135,000 of whom are in hospitals or in their graves, and are now in undisputed possession of three-fourths of the island. Outside her picket lines Spain possesses not one foot of Cuban soil. Within her picket lines three-fourths of the population are insurgents at heart, who will cordially participate in the republican government as soon as the Spaniards evacuate the island.

With these facts staring us in the face, we must realize that Spain can never conquer Cuba, and that ultimately we must recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic. This being the case, the sooner we act the better for all concerned, thereby putting an end to the sacrifice of human life and the destruction of property.

We urge the unequivocal recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic, because the Cuban patriots merit such recognition by their valor and prowess in arms; because recognition is the plain, honest, courageous, manly course, and will remove from the minds of all men any suspicion that we are preparing to wage a war of conquest and to annex the island from motives of sordid greed, or as the beginning of a policy of imperial aggrandizement. We urge the recognition of the existing republic, because, under international law, only an existing government can be recognized, and because by recognizing the present republic we lift from the minds of the Cuban patriots the fear that we will force upon them a government which they do not want; we urge it because without such recognition, in the event of war between Spain and the American Republic, it would be a war against Cuba also, for until the recognition of her independence she is, in the contemplation of international law, still a part of Spain.

Recognizing the independence of their republic will give the Cubans credit among the nations of the earth, thereby enabling them to use all their resources to the utmost, and will influence men of other countries to reenforce the Cubans with the assurance that they will be treated as soldiers and will not be hanged as traitors, filibusters, or pirates in the event of capture.

We urge the passage of the second resolution, providing for armed intervention, as a necessary and logical sequence to the recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic.

Facts must be considered as they actually exist, not as we would have them, and one of the most potent and patent facts of the situation is that Spain refuses to realize what all the rest of the world knows to be true, that Cuba has passed from her control forever. This being the case, she will hold on with the strength of despair to fragments of the island as long as possible, thereby perpetuating the process of starvation, arson, and extermination wherever she can, and by occasional forays ravaging the country adjacent to her garrisons and stockades. We have no doubt that our simple recognition of the Republic of Cuba would enable the Cubans themselves to ultimately expel the Spaniards from every portion of the island.

Armed intervention on our part would end the agony of this brave people, save thousands of them from death, and speedily close the most disgraceful chapter in the history of the Western Hemisphere. We owe this duty to ourselves no less than to the Cubans.

We recommend the adoption of the third resolution, to feed the famished Cubans, as an act of mercy and humanity.

Mr. Speaker, I regret as much as any gentleman on this floor can regret the manifestation of partisanship that has transpired here this afternoon during these proceedings. It appears to me, sir, that if there was ever a period in the history of this Government that calls for statesmanship, when patriotic dignity should have characterized our conduct, and partisanship should have been subordinated to statesmanship, that period is now. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

We are confronted by the most critical situation witnessed in in very many years by the people of the United States. Our people have long recognized that this point would ultimately be reached, unless those who represented the people in the Congress of the United States performed their full duty and took the courageous stand dictated by prudence and statesmanship and common sense. [Applause.]

As has been well said by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], it has been and is now my conviction that if we had done our duty, if we had taken this position a year ago, this matter would have been settled, Cuba would have been free, and the sailors of the Maine, who sleep now in a watery grave, would have been alive to bear their arms and carry to victory the flag of our country. [Applause.] Throughout all of the history of the Government Spanish civilization on the American continent has been a menace to us and to our institutions. Throughout the whole history of our past it has presented to us great embarrassment and difficult problems with which we had to deal.

In all the various Spanish settlements and colonies on this continent we have had the same perplexing problems that we have met with and are meeting now. We have taken those colonies by the hand in the past and inducted them into the glorious field of statehood. And so again to-day, after all of these years of Spain's government of Cuba, with the patriots struggling for liberty and to protect themselves from oppression, with courage and heroic devotion to the cause of liberty, we extend our hands to them who for thirty years have fought Spanish oppression, Spanish brutality, Spanish butchery, and Spanish wrong. [Prolonged applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we do not say to them to-day—I speak now for my colleagues on this side of the House—we do not say to the people who for years past in an unequal fight, have been compelled to see their wives and children suffer and starve in the cause of liberty, we do not say we are coming with an army into your territory to establish a government which in our judgment will be a "stable government," which will be a possible government and a peaceful government. "We shall give you permanent peace, but we must judge of the permanency of that peace ourselves, and we must judge of the stability of that government."

We say not that to them. But we present a very different proposal in the views submitted by my colleagues and myself. We say to them we recognize the fact that you have an organized government, a constitution, a cabinet, officers duly appointed, the revenues being collected in the territory that you occupy, and we are not going to force upon you a government that may be a "carpet-bag" government, run by somebody else outside of your own dominion. [Applause.] But we propose to give you a representative government of your own people, by yourselves, by officials chosen in your own way. [Prolonged applause.]

There are many reasons, Mr. Speaker, why we should do so. You can not recognize a people. A people, except in an organized capacity, is not recognizable in an international way, but when organized into a government we may rationally and properly acknowledge them as a free and independent government. But, sir, the people of Cuba, when we do recognize them in that way, acquire some benefits to themselves, and the government which they represent, and they will not of necessity be considered as enemies of the United States in case war shall be declared by the United States against Spain.

What are they now? Are they Cuban belligerents? Have you ever acknowledged that they were? What are they now? Are they citizens of a republic? By what action of the American Government have they ever been recognized as such? To-day in international view they can only be considered as Spanish subjects, and when the armies of the United States go down to Cuba to meet the Spanish forces, they go there to war upon Spain as represented by her soldiers there and her subjects in Cuba, who are the Cubans themselves.

This, Mr. Speaker, is cruel. This is not in accordance with the sentiments which have characterized the expressions of gentlemen in this House for so many days, so many weeks, and so many months that we have been here. We talk about liberty. Then, let us give to the Cubans liberty. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We talk about freedom. Let us give to themthe right to establish a government which they think will be a free government, and which does not reserve to us, the Government of the United States, the right to say, after it is established, "Ah, this is not a 'stable' government; we can not turn it over to you yet; we must look after this thing."

And, again, Mr. Speaker, there are questions of debt to be considered. There are questions of bonds. I do not accuse the gentlemen opposing me of having this in view and of desiring to make our Government liable for those bonds. I only mention this as a possibility.

I understand it was stated by Senator FORAKER in the Senate to-day, asserted as a fact, of international law, and I have thought myself all along that there were substantial grounds on which to base such an opinion, that in case we intervene in Cuba, without giving recognition to the government which there exists, we thereby become responsible for the payment of the Spanish bonds which have been floated on the credit of the revenues of Cuba and which are hypothecated upon those revenues. Shall we do this? Gentlemen of the majority, meet us upon the grounds contained in our resolution!

We heard the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] say the other day that Cuban independence was going to be recognized. Cuban independence! There can be no Cuban independence except in the independence of its government in the hands of its own officials. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], being the friend of the President and supposed to voice his sentiments, says that the President of the United States is in favor of the independence of Cuba. Did he demand of Spain the independence of Cuba? Oh, no; we were made to believe so, but he did not. His minister told the Spanish cabinet that the President did not demand independence. His Attorney-General, it seems, thought that "stable" was the diplomatic word for independence, and in his message to Congress the President, to be consistent with his demands upon Spain, only asks that a stable government be given to the Cubans. Oh, the pity of it! Oh, the humiliation to all true Americans! Long and anxiously in this House have we waited for some message or expression from the President of the United States conveying to our anxious ears the glad news that he believed in the independence of Cuba. When did it come? He sent us the message which was read in the hearing of all the members of this House. Notwithstanding the statements which have been made in trying to bolster up that document since, you all know how it fell like a wet blanket upon that side of the House, upon the patriotic men over there whose hearts bled for the suffering Cubans, struggling for the liberties that every American believes every God-born individual has a right to possess.

Mr. Speaker, I for one have become convinced by deliberate consideration of the testimony brought before a legally constituted naval court, composed of officers who have honored commissions, who have been honored by commissions of the United States Government—without going into details, for that time is not permitted to me—I believe that the Maine disaster was the result of deliberate official action of the Spaniards. [Applause.]

Not that Blanco knew it, not that he ordered it, but that it must of necessity inevitably have been done by some official of the Spanish Government familiar with and having the secrets of the submarine mines deposited there for the protection of that harbor.

Now, Sir, in conclusion, the grave responsibilities of this situation are to be discharged by every member in the House in accordance with the allegiance and the duty which he owes to his own country and his own flag. We ought to do that which would be an honor to the American colors, because if we impose a wrong on Cuba it redounds to the dishonor of our own Republic. Our people have become irresistible in their demands for the action of this body, else we all know that this action could never have been brought about.

We offer to you and to the country our substitute for your resolution, and appeal to the wisdom, patriotism, and judgment of our fellow-citizens, and for the rectitude of our intentions, the integrity of our purpose, the justice of our position, to that higher court which must pass upon the actions of all men and all nations,

Our fathers' God, from out whose hand
The centuries fall like grains of sand

[Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I must ask the other side to consume the balance of their time, and then this side will close.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the other side to use their time before I reply.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to use the remainder of his time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He reserved it until they use some on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman on the other side desires to close.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have used all except three minutes and the majority have not used any scarcely.

Mr. ADAMS. I propose to use the balance of the time in closing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is very unusual to compel the minority to take eighteen minutes of the time and not use any on their side.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. He proposes to use it all himself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course you have the right to close debate.

Mr. ADAMS. I will call for a vote at the close of my remarks if the other side do not conclude their time.

Mr. BAILEY. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is his purpose that all the remaining time be consumed by one gentleman?

Mr. ADAMS. It is, certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, that being true, of course, having the right to conclude, he has the right to insist that this side use all their time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to use his remaining time?

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is ready for a vote, we are.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. All right. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House——

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman will excuse me; did I understand the gentleman to say that at the conclusion of what we had to say on this side the gentleman from Pennsylvania was going to call for a vote?

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. I said I asked you to use the balance of your time because at the close of my remarks I would call for a vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I concede that right. I simply misunderstood that you were going to call for a vote now.

Mr. ADAMS. If you will use the remaining three minutes I will close. [Cries of "Vote!" and "Go on!"] Mr. Speaker, I will ask——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to use his remaining three minutes?

Mr. DINSMORE. We are ready for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas does not desire to use the remainder of his time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House but for a few moments while I shall endeavor to present in a very calm way the views of the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in support of the resolutions which have been submitted.

For a period of thirty years the political and financial interests of the United States have been unsettled by the misrule of Spain in the island of Cuba and the consequent protest, to the extent of armed resistance on the part of its people, against injustice. This state of things has been the cause of protest on the part of our Government through the Administrations of Presidents Grant, Arthur, Cleveland, and McKinley. President Grant, in a special message, June 13, 1870, said:

> The properties of many of our citizens have been destroyed or embargoed, the lives of several have been sacrificed, the liberties of others have been restrained. In every case that has come to the knowledge of the Government an earnest and early demand for reparation and indemnity has been made, and emphatic remonstrances have been made against the manner in which the strife has been conducted, the wanton destruction of material wealth, and the cruel slaughter of civilized warfare.
> We are under the necessity of interposing continually for the protection of our citizens against wrongful acts of the local authorities of Spain and Cuba, and the public peace is every moment subject to be interrupted by some unforeseen event. In short, the State of Cuba is the one great cause of perpetual solicitude in the foreign relations of the United States.

In the sixth annual message of President Grant, 1874, he recites:

> The attention of this Government has been frequently called by the citizens of the United States to the wrong done them by the embargo of their property by the colonial authorities of Cuba for alleged disloyalty. In virtue of a decree of April 20, 1866, their properties have been seized by arbitrary act without judicial judgment or hearing, and in manifest violation of the treaty of 1795. In many instances the seizure has been made with such improvidence that the property of one person has been seized for the alleged offense of another.

In his seventh annual message he states:

> The protracted continuance of this strife seriously affects the interests of all commercial nations, but those of the United States more than others by reason of its close proximity, its larger trade and intercourse with Cuba, and the friendly and intimate personal and social relations which have grown up between its citizens and those of the island, and the absence of any reasonable assurance of the near termination of the conflict must of necessity soon compel the States thus suffering to consider what the interests of their own people and their duties toward themselves may demand.

President Cleveland, in his message to the Fifty-fourth Congress, said:

> Spain's sovereignty over Cuba is extinct for all purposes of its rightful existence; the hopeless struggle for its reestablishment has degenerated into a strife which means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict itself.

President McKinley, in his message to the Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, said:

> The existing conditions [in Cuba] can not but fill this Government and the American people with the gravest apprehension. We have only the desire to see the Cubans prosperous and contented, enjoying that measure of self-control which is the inalienable right of man.
> The cruel policy of concentration was initiated February 16, 1896. The productive districts controlled by the Spanish armies were depopulated. The agricultural inhabitants were herded in and about the garrison towns, their lands laid waste, and their dwellings destroyed.
> This policy has utterly failed as a measure of war. It was not civilized warfare. It was extermination. The near future will demonstrate whether the indispensable condition of a righteous peace, just alike to the Cubans and to Spain, as well as equitable to all our interests, is likely to be attained. If it shall hereafter appear to be a duty imposed by our obligations to ourselves, to civilization, and humanity to intervene with force, it shall be with out fault on our part and only because the necessity for such action will be so clear as to command the support of the civilized world.

These protests of our Executives were not without good grounds of complaint. Our citizens had during both wars been imprisoned and refused trial in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty of 1795 and of the Cushing protocol. Their property was unprotected, and in consequence laid waste to the extent of $20,000,000—claims which remain unsettled to this day to the extent of $16,000,000. These losses are composed of sugar and tobacco plantations and some $8,500,000 invested in iron mines, and the necessary machinery employed on both. Our commerce, at the beginning of this war amounting to $76,000,000 of imports and $17,000,000, of exports, has been nearly wiped out.

The present stagnation of trade has seriously affected the material interests and welfare of our country. The loss in investments in mortgages, railroad securities, and mercantile accounts in Cuba has been estimated at $25,000,000. Our Government reports an expenditure by the Department of Justice and the Navy of $2,500,000 in patrolling our coast to prevent the departure of military expeditions, and their prosecution when caught in the endeavor, to preserve our neutrality obligations.

Our country was on the eve of a great era of prosperity—confidence was restored, internal traffic was growing, new enterprises projected. The disturbed state of the Island of Cuba and the overshadowing necessity of our intervention have, according to our trade reports, greatly retarded this improvement, and in many cases caused its cessation. These facts, so detrimental to our welfare, justify our intervention to restore peace on that unhappy island.

The convention at London, October 31, 1861, between Great Britain, France, and Spain was defined to be "to demand more efficacious protection for the persons and property of their subjects, as well as a fulfillment of the obligation contracted toward their majesties."

> The convention contemplated an armed occupation of Mexico until the people should have adopted such a government as in the opinion of the allies would be responsible and stable. (Wheaton, page 126.)

Phillimore holds:

> The right of self-defense incident to every state may, in certain circumstances, carry with it the necessity of intervening in the relations and to a certain extent of controlling the conduct of another state, and this when the interest of the intervener is not immediately and directly, but mediately and indirectly, affected. (Volume I, page 554.)

> Interventions for the purpose of self-preservation naturally include all those which are grounded upon danger to the institutions, to the good order, or the external safety of the intervening state. To some of these no objection can be offered. If a government is too weak to prevent actual attacks upon a neighbor by its subjects, if it foments revolution abroad, or if it threatens hostilities which may be averted by its overthrow, a menaced state may adopt such measures as are necessary to obtain substantial guaranties for its own security.
> The state which is subjected to intervention has either failed to satisfy its international duties or has intentionally violated them. It has done or permitted a wrong, to obtain redress for which the intervening state may make war if it choose. If war occurs, it may exact as one of the conditions of peace at the end that a government shall be installed which is able and willing to observe its international obligations, and if the intervening state may make war, a fortiori it may gain the same result in a milder way.

On February 15 the United States battle ship was destroyed by an explosion while lying in the harbor of Havana, on a friendly visit. This fact is emphasized, as our Government had previously asked if such visit would be acceptable to the Spanish Government. By this explosion the ship was destroyed and the lives of 2 officers and 264 American seamen were sacrificed. A court of inquiry was at once appointed, composed of naval officers of unusual ability and experience, and after a most thorough and careful investigation reported that the battle ship Maine was destroyed by an outside explosion from a sunken or floating mine.

While this court failed to report the actual responsibility, the facts show that Spain is respensible either directly or by criminal negligence for the loss of the ship. A vessel entering the harbor of Havana is under control of the authorities. An official pilot takes charge and anchors the ship at the place designated by the officer of the port. The Maine was attached to a buoy not accustomed to be used, as set forth in the testimony. It is beyond credence that a private individual could obtain the material, construct a mine, or place it beneath a ship of war and explode it without the connivance of the Spanish authorities or such negligence of the usual vigilance of those in authority as to make them responsible to the Government to which said ship belonged for its loss.

The utter lack of zeal on the part of the authorities of Havana, with all the means at their command to ferret out and prosecute the perpetrators—the extraordinary fact remains that no effort was made, which indicated a conscious guilt on their part. Thus it stands, that our ship was in a harbor under the control of Spain. A war ship, next to an ambassador, is entitled to especial protection under international law, and the exclusive right to govern implies the responsibility to protect. Spain disclaims responsibility. It is our right to enforce it, by force of arms if necessary.

The relations of merchant vessels and ships of war with the "exterritoriality" of the latter are well defined by writers on international law, but no case of a treacherous attack on a ship of war in a friendly port has ever occurred, and such a probability was so far beyond the ken of possibility that no authority on the subject can be found. Of course, positive proof of hostile intent would be a casus belli, but lacking such the principle above stated must hold good.

Mr. Speaker, the gallant men who perished on the Maine did not die in vain. The same spark that lit the torpedo that sent those American seamen to the great hereafter lit the flame on the torch of Liberty for the Island of Cuba. That flame has cast its benignant rays across that benighted island. Those of the 260 that lie in peace in the cemetery of Havana will ever be a monument to those people for all ages to come of the glorious rights of self-government.

Those who were carried with friendly hands to rest in their native soil will forever stand as an example for our people of men who know how to do their duty and die in the service of the country, and those who sank beneath the waters of that supposed friendly harbor, though their graves will be unmarked, their names will ever live in the hearts and memories of their countrymen as examples of a sacrifice in order that human liberty may live.

The inhuman conduct on the part of Spain in subjugating Cuba during the insurrection from 1868 to 1878 is a matter of history, culminating, so far as our relations were concerned, in the illegal execution of fifty-three of the passengers and crew of the Virginius, some of which were American citizens, the method of execution of these latter being in contravention of the treaty of 1795 and of the Cushing protocol.

This is but another instance in the long catalogue of the defiance of the home Government by those intrusted with authority in Cuba, and adds another page to the dark history of bloody vengeance and cruel disregard of the rules of civilized war and of common humanity which the military and other officials in Cuba have but too frequently made part of the history of Spain's government of its colony.—Secretary Fish to Minister Sickles, November 12, 1873.

The course of Spain in her endeavor to suppress the present insurrection has been even more cruel, culminating in the terrible military order of General Weyler, driving the noncombatants from their homes in the country to the cities and there leaving them to starve until over 200,000 have died for want of food, as has been well authenticated by both Cuban and American testimony, including that of our own Senators and Representatives. This fact alone would justify our own or other civilized countries in intervention to stop such cruel warfare.

Calvo quotes Arntz:

When a government, acting entirely within the limit of its own sovereign rights, violates the rights of humanity, whether by measures contrary to the interests of other states or by an excess of injustice and cruelty which deeply wounds our customs and our civilization—

Arntz goes on to say—

the right of intervention is legitimate, because, however inviolable may be the rights of sovereignty and the independence of states, there is something more inviolable still, and that is the right of human society, which is not to be outraged. (Calvo, ed. 1896, pages 274, 275.)

Wheaton cites with approval the intervention of the Christian powers on behalf of Greece as—

A further illustration of the principles of international law authorizing such an interference, not only where the interests and safety of other powers are immediately affected by the internal transactions of a particular state, but where the general interests of humanity are infringed by the excesses of a barbarous and despotic government. These principles are fully recognized in the treaty for the pacification of Greece, concluded at London July 6, 1827, between France, Great Britain, and Russia. (Davis's Wheaton, page 113.)

Heffter gives as a third reason for intervention:

For the suppression of a civil war threatening the existence of one or more countries, or treasonable to the common interests and outraging the principles of humanity. (Le Droit In de l'Europe, Bergson, 1883, pages 108-114.)

Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word now in direct answer to some of the propositions advanced by gentlemen on the other side. The gentleman from Texas says that he was glad that the Republican party was ready to act at last. I would have him know that more than two years ago a Republican Congress passed resolutions of belligerency and sent them to the Executive, a Democratic President, and he, spurning the expression of the American people, cast those resolutions into the wastebasket.

Mr. SULZER. Why did you not pass them over his veto?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir; I have not time.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas as to why we do not recognize the present legislative government of Cuba. Mr. Speaker, our country must proceed in order, under the rules of international law, if we wish to preserve our standing among the nations of the earth. Our President has pursued a consistent course. As soon as he entered the Executive chair he made propositions to Spain, all of which have been granted. He had not been in office sixty days until every American citizen, native born, or those bearing the official stamp of our courts, was set free to breathe that air of freedom which God meant we should enjoy.

The alleged Republic of Cuba has my sympathy. I believe that the men who have struggled so long to obtain their freedom are entitled to our sympathy, and, if possible, to our recognition. But they must first have a standing, such standing under international law as will justify the executive department of our Government in giving such recognition. The conditions now do not fulfill those obligations. It would be impossible for our Government to recognize the insurgents in Cuba. The very fact, if you wish to send an envoy there, you would have to send him by force through the Spanish lines, or you would have to land him on a beach, the same as the insurgents and filibusterers have to land their munitions in that country, is enough to show that they have not standing for recognition.

They have not that stable government which is entitled to recognition. They have not power to carry on civil government. They have no capital or permanently located seat of government. They have not a single port in their possession. They have not a single ship on the high seas. They have not a government under civil authority that can enforce its laws.

They are surrounded entirely by the Spanish army. And it is a principle of international law which will not be disputed by any man who knows anything on that subject that until the parent country has practically ceased to enforce its government against the rebellious subjects, no other nation can give the insurgents recognition as a government, because they do not have it as a matter of fact. No man can question that principle of international law. We have fully committed ourselves to it as a nation. No South American republic was recognized by us until years after Spain had yielded all active effort to put it down.

What is the condition in the Island of Cuba to-day? Spain has a large army there. She occupies every seaport. She is still endeavoring to enforce her authority over that island. For this reason the Executive of this country and the Republican members of the Foreign Affairs Committee can not bring themselves to falsify the diplomatic history of our country and place themselves in a position antagonistic to the recognized principles of international law, for the country that dares to do this puts itself beyond the pale of the great family of civilized nations.

Mr. Speaker, having thus stated some of the reasons which actuated the majority of the Foreign Affairs Committee in adopting the action embodied in the pending resolution, let me say a word in conclusion. We stand, as I believe, in one of the greatest and most momentous eras in the history of our country; and as an American Representative I want to make a strong appeal to the men of this House without respect to party. When the roll is called and the demand is made upon them to defend American honor and American rights, which have been assailed by the Spanish nation, I ask that one and all rise in their places and cast their votes to show the world, as we did a few weeks ago, that however we may differ upon matters of detail, we are Americans one and all and that politics cease at the seacoast. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitution of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] for the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to ask the Chair whether it is in order now to present an amendment to the substitute?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to offer as an amendment—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask that I may have this proposed amendment reported to the House.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. BERRY and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 190, answered "present" 2, not voting 13; as follows:

Brosius,	Hitt,	Sulloway,
Codding,	Livingston,	White, N. C.

The SPEAKER directed the Clerk to recapitulate the vote, and it was accordingly recapitulated.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. BAKER of Illinois.

Mr. HITT with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye" on this question, but I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and will withdraw my vote and ask to be recorded as present.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINSMORE. I would like to know if it would be in order now to move to recommit the resolution of the majority with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should come after the resolution is ordered to a third reading.

The question is on ordering the resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DINSMORE. I desire to be recognized at the proper time for that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no title to the resolution. It is difficult to read by title when there is no title appended.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is very hard to name it, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If the House will consider the third reading of the resolution as having been proceeded with, it can be offered at any time.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINSMORE. Now, Mr. Speaker, if in order, I desire to submit a motion to recommit with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs be now recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to report the same back with the following amendment:

"And be it resolved, That the United States do hereby recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to amend the motion.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. ADAMS. I will withdraw that motion, Mr. Speaker, and ask the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CANNON. One moment. It seems to me that this may be subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to amend the instructions.

Mr. QUIGG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. QUIGG. Is it competent to move now to recommit with instructions, the instructions being precisely what the House has just voted down?

Mr. DINSMORE. It is not the same.

Mr. QUIGG. I submit that parliamentary inquiry and raise the question of order. This is a motion that the House has just disposed of.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolutions voted upon contain more than is embodied in this motion to recommit with instructions. Being less than the former, it is in order.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask a ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that such a motion would be in order, because after the engrossment of the bill the House has a right to recommit with certain instructions, if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is it in order to move to amend the instructions?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the previous question is voted down.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. DINSMORE to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions.

Mr. DINSMORE. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 191, answered "present" 1, not voting 15; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the preamble.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the title, as prepared by the gentleman, been read?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet been read. It will be read in a moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the reading of the title.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the preamble will be agreed to, and the third reading of the joint resolution will now take place.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was accordingly ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was read the third time, as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ADAMS. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise.

Mr. McRAE. I want to suggest that the word "free" is used in the resolution and that that be substituted for the word "stable" in the title.

Mr. QUIGG. The word does not appear in that connection.

Mr. McRAE. It does in the body of the resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this on the preamble, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is on the passage, and on this the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is this on the passage of the resolution or on the preamble?

Mr. ADAMS. On the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is on the passage of the resolution and preamble. On this the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 325, nays 19, answered "present" 1, not voting 12; as follows:

NOT VOTING—11.

Baird,	Codding,	Latimer,	White, N. C.
Baker, Ill.	Greene,	Livingston,	Wilber.
Brosius,	Hitt,	Stone, W. A.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is absent owing to sickness.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. VANDIVER. I voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman.

The name of Mr. VANDIVER was called, and he voted "yea."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. ADAMS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, and also move that that motion be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be considered as amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to introduce some resolutions of thanks to General Lee and the consular force.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the announcement I will withhold the motion for a minute.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement, the gentleman yields to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was very much surprised a bit ago to hear that it had been reported among gentlemen in the press gallery that in the course of my colloquy with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] this afternoon I had said that he was a moral and physical coward. I did not say anything of this kind to the gentleman from Iowa, nor had I any such thought in my breast. The facts are that while I was talking to him some individuals upon the right hissed me, and I turned to them and declared that they were physical and moral cowards.

I suppose in the confusion that prevailed my language was not properly caught by the gentlemen of the press. My colleagues who sat near me at the time will all attest that I am stating the incident exactly as it occurred. While I am perfectly willing to stand by what I did say, and have nothing whatever to retract, I do not wish it to go out that this denunciation of mine was directed at the gentleman from Iowa. It was not he who gave me the provocation, for he did not hiss me, and I would not have addressed such language to him for the world.

Mr. BAILEY. We were unable to hear what has been transpiring.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana made a correction of something which he supposed had been heard amiss, misunderstood.

Mr. MCMILLIN. A parliamentary inquiry. There are two reports accompanying these resolutions. They will be printed, I presume?

The SPEAKER. They will be printed as a part of the RECORD, necessarily, as they were both read—one of them was read.

The Chair will lay before the House the following personal requests:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOCKERY asks leave to print remarks upon the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina requests leave of absence for five days, on account of important business.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa asks leave of absence for one week.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that all gentlemen be permitted to print remarks upon the resolutions passed.

The SPEAKER. Pending the request of Mr. DOCKERY, the gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen be permitted to print remarks.

Mr. HENDERSON. For five days.

Mr. MCMILLIN. For five days.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I object. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. The other requests will be considered as granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What were the other requests?

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3684. An act for the relief of Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzen—to the Committee on Claims.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for the navy-yard, Mare Island, for repairing and reconstructing buildings—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of deficiency in appropriation for printing and binding for the Navy Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIII, Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 14, 1898.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, we come into Thy presence with a hymn of thanksgiving, while we celebrate the eighty-eighth birthday of our patriarch, the father of both ends of the Capitol, beloved and revered by all his colleagues, and throughout his native State and our whole country. We praise Thee for this noble life, a life of honorable devotion to the interests of the country through more than forty years, a life of patriotic and patriarchal devotion, simplicity, and nobleness.

We also bless Thee for the recovery to health of his beloved wife, and devoutly pray that they may be spared to us through yet other years to celebrate this natal day. God bless, comfort, cheer, and uphold them, keeping them as an example to us all.

We pray, O Lord, that Thou wilt likewise bless Thy servants, the President and Vice-President of the United States, the members of both Houses of Congress, our Army and Navy, and the whole land. Let the blessing of the Lord God rest upon us, and may Thy providence be our guide and our defense. We humbly ask, through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the prayer of the Chaplain this morning be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the order will be made. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

NAVAL HOSPITAL, MARE ISLAND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation, $100,000, for the naval hospital, Mare Island, Cal., recently destroyed by the earthquake of March 30, 1898; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1004) for the relief of Theodore F. Swayze, administrator de bonis non of the estate of John S. P. Wheeler, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 1287) for the relief of Dr. John R. Hall, of Louisville, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of the widow of Lieut. John F. Stewart;

A bill (H. R. 9552) permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River;

A joint resolution (H, Res. 116) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 149) directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the proposed improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River, to the city of Tampa; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution directing the Secretary of War to prepare and submit more complete plans and estimates for the improvement of the Big Sandy and the Tug and Louisa forks of the same, in Kentucky and West Virginia, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the use of the national flag by private enterprises for advertising purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution No. 42.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact laws to prevent the use of the flag by private enterprises for advertising purposes.

Whereas it is a fact notoriously patent to every patriotic observer that the flag of the Union is employed as a means of attracting attention to private enterprises by using it in connection with advertisements of various articles of merchandise, and for other purposes inconsistent with the spirit which prompted the adoption of our national emblem, and believing that such base uses have a tendency to destroy the respect and veneration in which the Stars and Stripes should be held by all loyal citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact such laws as will effectually prevent the use of the flag for advertising private enterprises, or to further the selfish interests of any class of citizens as against the interests of the whole people; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor is hereby requested to forward to both branches of Congress certified copies of this resolution.

HARRY C. MASON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
THADDEUS E. CROMLEY,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Adopted April 8, 1898.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, OHIO,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, Charles Kinney, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is an exemplified copy, carefully compared by me with the original rolls now on file in this office, and in my official custody as secretary of state, as required by the laws of the State of Ohio, of an act passed by the general assembly of the State of Ohio on the 8th day of April, A. D. 1898.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal, at Columbus, this 11th day of April, A. D. 1898.

[SEAL.] CHARLES KINNEY,
Secretary of State.

Pursuant to the request of the general assembly of Ohio, I herewith transmit the accompanying resolution for the consideration of Congress.

ASA S. BUSHNELL,
Governor of Ohio.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dorchester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dorchester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of Tri-Mountain Lodge, No. 486, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, the prison-labor bill, the anti-injunction bill, and the bill for the relief of American seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Dorchester and Fall River and of the congregations of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, the Quarry Street Methodist Episcopal Church, the First Christian Church, the Second Primitive Methodist Church, the Third Primitive Methodist Church, the Advent Christian Church, and the Preparative Meeting of Friends, all of Fall River, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GEAR presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Fairfax, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Fairfax, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Wisner Post, No. 127, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, approving the action of the President in regard to the trouble with Spain and requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to give him all the aid in their power; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Village Mills, Tex., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition addressed to me in regard to the Cuban situation, which I ask to have read. It is only two lines long.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 11, 1898.

BOIES PENROSE, Senate:

House resolution dishwater; Davis resolution satisfactory; remember the Maine.

T. JAY TOMLINSON.

Mr. PENROSE presented a resolution adopted by the Northeast Representatives' Association, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the recognition of the independence of Cuba, demanding from Spain such reparation as is proper to atone for the insult to our honor and murder of our fellow-citizens and the destruction of our property, and pledging their support to the President and Congress in any action they may take for the freedom of Cuba and the preservation of our national honor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Indianapolis, Ind., favoring the patriotic and conservative course of the Administration in dealing with the Cuban question and the affairs resulting from the destruction of the battle ship Maine; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Millville, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Prudential Insurance Company of America, of Newark, N. J., favoring the attitude of the President in regard to the trouble with Spain and pledging their support in the event of war with that country; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Irasburg, Vt., and a petition of the congregation of the Center Methodist Episcopal Church of Underhill, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Irasburg, Vt., and a petition of the Center Methodist Episcopal Church of Underhill, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Irasburg, Vt., and a petition of the Center Methodist Episcopal Church of Underhill, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Clinton, Mich., and a petition of the Epworth League, the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Baptist Church, and the Congregational Church, the Baptist Young People's Union, and the Anti-Saloon League, of Clinton, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BATE presented sundry petitions of citizens of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Taunton Lodge, No. 474, of Taunton, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of the Grand Lodge of Wyoming, Knights of Pythias, of Buffalo; of Rawlins Lodge, No. 4, Knights of Pythias, of Rawlins; of Lander Lodge, No. 10, Knights of Pythias, of Lander; of Cheyenne Lodge, No. 2, Knights of Pythias, of Cheyenne, and of Sweet Water Lodge, No. 6, Knights of Pythias, of Rock Springs, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias to erect and maintain a sanitarium and bath house on the Government reservation at the city of Hot Springs, Ark.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Cheyenne Division, No. 128, Order of Railway Conductors, of Cheyenne, Wyo., and a petition of Black Hills Lodge, No. 86, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of R. W. Baxter, jr., Lodge, No. 67, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Hartford City, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bedford, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bedford, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of the congregation of the Second Baptist Church of Danbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Second Baptist Church of Danbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Second Baptist Church of Danbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hinsdale, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hinsdale, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hinsdale, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WILKINSON CALL.

Mr. CHANDLER. The memorial of Wilkinson Call, for eighteen years a Senator from the State of Florida, and of some members of the Florida legislature, relating to the election of a Senator for the term commencing March 4, 1897, which was laid before the Senate by the Vice-President on the 7th of March, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it has not been printed. I move that the memorial be printed for the use of the Senate, together with a letter of Wilkinson Call to the people of Florida.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present certain papers relating to the various forms of local government in the District of Columbia, which I move be printed as a document. I also move that 500 copies in addition to the usual number be printed and bound in paper for the use of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. HALE. I present a statement, in the nature of a memorial, from the National Civic Club, calling attention to the necessity of an amendment or repeal of the navigation laws in case of war. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the memorial.

The Secretary read as follows:

The National Civic Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., respectfully calls the attention of the Administration to one phase of the Cuban situation which has apparently been forgotten in the event of war with Spain. The United States may capture Cuba and annihilate the sea forces of the enemy, but that will not prevent Spain from harassing our coasting vessels for years to come. The moment war is declared every merchant vessel of Spain will be placed under the French flag and will remain secure from attack. Nothing but the repeal of the present navigation laws can place us upon an equal footing. This club therefore respectfully represents that Congress should not adjourn without repealing the laws that would prevent our ships from sailing under a foreign flag during the pending war.

THE NATIONAL CIVIC CLUB,
F. W. HINRICHS, President.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the memorial raises a very serious question, which should be carefully considered by a competent committee. Whether the remedy suggested is the true one the committee can judge upon and decide. That it would be mortifying and humiliating that every American merchant ship upon the ocean should be obliged to strike its flag and go under the flag of a foreign nation no one can dispute, but that grave danger would beset every ship of ours upon the sea in case of war no one can deny. It is one of the lamentable conditions which war brings. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and I hope that committee will give it most careful and prudent consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed as a document.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 70) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange Springfield breech-loading rifles, caliber .45, of late model, now stored in any of the United States arsenals, for the Springfield breech-loading rifles, calibers .45 and .50, now in possession of the State of Illinois, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3187) for the relief of the widow and heirs of Samuel Kramer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3323) to place Henry Biederbick, Julius R. Frederick, Francis Long, and Maurice Connell on the retired list of enlisted men of the Army, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 885, relating to affairs in Cuba, be printed for the use of the Senate.

STATISTICS OF LAKE COMMERCE.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed by the Public Printer 10,000 copies of House Document No. 277, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, entitled Statistics of Lake Commerce; 4,000 copies for the use of the House, 2,000 copies for the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Printing I report back with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 148) providing for the printing of House Document No. 396, for the use of the Department of Agriculture. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GEAR. I do not object, but I wish to suggest an amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GEAR. I move to amend the joint resolution by providing that there shall be 40,000 additional copies printed for the use of the House and Senate. It is a very valuable document.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the joint resolution if the printing is asked for by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. LODGE. It is. I have his letter here. If the Senator from Missouri desires to have it read, I will have it read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the letter be read.

Mr. LODGE. I send the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to the desk and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1898.

SIR: There is now being printed under an order of March 31 ultimo, as House Document 396, a special report on the beet-sugar industry in the United States. This order, I understand, carries only the usual number. I beg to call your attention to the urgent necessity which exists for a supply of this report adequate to meet the extraordinary demand therefor which its publication is sure to create. In fact, since the same was ordered printed I am in receipt daily of earnest applications for copies from parties to whom it is extremely desirable, in the interest of this great industry, that the information contained in this report be communicated.

The resumption by this Department of active efforts for the development of this industry in the United States has been universally commended, and I am extremely desirous that no suspension of these active efforts, such as would be entailed by my inability to supply this report to the proper parties, should occur. Under the embarrassing restrictions as to size of editions of certain publications under the law of January 12, 1895, my requisition upon the Public Printer for copies of this report could not carry over a thousand copies. I must, therefore, apply to your committee for authorization by joint resolution for the publication and assignment to this Department for distribution of not less than 20,000 copies, an edition which I believe to be amply justified by the extreme importance of the subject-matter.

I have addressed a communication similar to this to the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture.

Very respectfully,
JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, United States Senate.

Mr. LODGE. There is an amendment reported from the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 strike out "40,000" and insert in lieu thereof "60,000;" and after the words "United States," in line 6, insert "27,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 13,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 copies;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed 60,000 copies of House Document No. 396, Fifty-fifth Congress, being a special report on the beet-sugar industry in the United States, 27,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 13,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution providing for the printing of House Document No. 396, relating to the beet-sugar industry in the United States."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4412) to correct the military record of Thomas O. Pritchard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 4413) for the proper control and regulation of corporations engaged in the transportation of persons and property by railroads between the several States, and for establishing just and reasonable prices for such transportation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4414) granting a pension to Georgia H. Berry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4415) to incorporate the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment relative to the purchase of a limited number of copies of General Orders and Circulars of the Navy Department, 1887–1897, inclusive, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BIG SANDY RIVER, IN KENTUCKY AND WEST VIRGINIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit more complete plans and estimates for the improvement of the Big Sandy, and the Tug and Louisa forks of same, in Kentucky and West Virginia, with probable cost of same if placed under the continuing-contract system.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 9552) permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 116) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the West Fork River, West Virginia, and prepare estimates of the cost thereof; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 149) directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the proposed improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River to the city of Tampa.

The bill (H. R. 1004) for the relief of Theodore F. Swayze, administrator de bonis non of the estate of John S. P. Wheeler, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 1287) for the relief of Dr. John R. Hall, of Louisville, Ky., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of the widow of Lieut. John F. Stewart was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 13th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 73) granting a pension to William L. Grigsby, of Belvidere, in the county of Thayer, Nebr.;

An act (S. 178) granting a pension to Susan A. Paddock;

An act (S. 431) granting a pension to Ann M. Madden;

An act (S. 655) granting a pension to Harriet R. Matlack;

An act (S. 1181) to increase the pension of Anna E. Botsford, widow of Eli W. Botsford, late major of Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

An act (S. 1825) granting an increase of pension to Robert P. Wild;

An act (S. 2299) granting a pension to Caroline A. Slocum; and

An act (S. 3178) granting a pension to Olevia S. Washburn.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 149.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 149) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. We are exceedingly anxious to hear the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and I should like to have order enforced in the rear of the Chamber. It is next to impossible to hear anything at this distance from the Chair.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Washington will be kind enough to allow me to make a statement, I desire to take the floor upon the pending resolution and to speak to it. The discussion so far has been by unanimous consent, without anything before the Senate. I am told that in my absence last night the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] rose and addressed the Chair, there then being nothing before the Senate, and being inquired of whether he would prefer to go on last night or to-day, he answered that he would prefer to go on to-day.

Under those circumstances, if the Senator from Washington wishes to go on now, I do not desire to interfere with him and will give way, with the understanding that I can be recognized when he is finished. If that is the desire of the Senator from Washington, I will yield to it.

Mr. GRAY. I was present last night at the adjournment. When we adjourned, the Senator from Washington had the floor, and by the universal custom of the Senate when the same order of business comes up again to-day, he still has the floor. I do not believe that it is within the power of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Washington to make an agreement as to the Senator who shall have the floor at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HOAR. There was no order of business at all then before the Senate. But I wish to do exactly what the Senator from Washington desires. If he desires to go on, I do not desire to do so. If he desires not to go on, I desire to go on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington can answer the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TURNER. It would be my disposition to yield in any mere question of precedence between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself to that Senator because of his eminence and his long and distinguished career in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator to understand that there is no such question involved. If the Senator desires to go on, I do not desire to go on.

Mr. TURNER. I desire to go on at the appropriate time.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then; that is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I shall give my support to the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but with the amendment, I hope, if the Senate shall see fit to vote it, offered by the minority of that committee, and I need no further justification for my action, nor does any Senator, than the magnificent state paper prepared by the committee and presented by it to the Senate along with its resolution. That paper meets in admirable temper and style every argument and suggestion and recommendation contained in the President's message of the 11th instant, looking to further irresolution and indecision, and overrules them all.

But there are certain phases of that message and of the remarkable series of incidents leading up to it, all of them connected with it and throwing light on it, which the committee as an official organ of this body could not, if it would, present to the country, and which other Senators who may address themselves to the resolutions under consideration may not feel disposed to present, to which I propose principally to address myself on this occasion.

I think it is important that some one should do so because the same malevolent influences which have hitherto and for so long paralyzed the arm of the Government, bringing to it a condition of impotence requiring Congressional action to relieve, and harassing the patriotic spirit of the people almost beyond the point of endurance, and which all had hoped was at last ended, is still alive and active and striving to minimize the action of Congress to a point which shall emasculate it of all force and effect and bring it at least in apparent accord with the lame, halting, and impotent course which has heretofore governed the action of the executive department of the Government. If that attempt shall succeed, then I for one desire, and so far as my poor abilities will permit, intend that the people of this country shall know and understand the entire situation.

Mr. President, the Executive in his message blazes out a course of procedure for Congress and urges its adoption which is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, is an anomaly in international relations, and is shocking to the sense of right and justice of the great mass of the liberty-loving people of the United States. I say that that course of procedure is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, because it involves the delegation by Congress on the Executive of the power of making war at his pleasure, and necessarily thereby the power of declaring war. That power is reposed by the Constitution exclusively in the Congress of the United States.

Section 8 of Article I of that instrument declares "that the Congress shall have power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water." The power is nowhere else declared in that instrument nor is the right in Congress to shift that power on another department of the Government anywhere declared.

That the Executive makes this untenable suggestion, and that his policy with reference to the Cuban problem depends wholly and entirely for its efficacy upon that suggestion, is shown by the paragraph of his message which contains his recommendations to Congress. That paragraph is as follows:

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

Mr. President, how is it possible for the President to employ the naval and military forces of the United States for the purpose and in the manner indicated without making war, and how is it possible for Congress to delegate to the President the power to do so in his discretion without at the same time and by the same act delegating to him the power to make war at his discretion?

There are two reasons which influence my mind against the recommendations of the President, either of which would compel my vote against those recommendations. My oath of office compels me to support and sustain and defend the Constitution of the United States. Since that instrument devolves upon Congress exclusively the war power, I can not, without violating my oath of office, vote to devolve that power upon another department of the Government.

But, Mr. President, if the question were free from constitutional difficulties, I should still decline to give my own adherence to the Presidential recommendation. The Congress of the United States is the organized conscience of the people of this nation, and the only department of the Government capable of dealing with the awful question of peace and war. That department partakes alike of the weakness and the strength of the people of the nation.

If their weakness be a too ready and generous sympathy with suffering and distress, with struggling humanity aspiring for liberty, a too inflammable disposition under wrong and insult, under the cruel and wanton murder of sons and brothers, their strength, grand, glorious, and godlike, consists in the fact that their eyes are not blinded nor their consciences seared by sordid, selfish, cold calculation; that they refuse to measure tears and blood against dollars and cents; wrong, aggression, and murder against the rise and fall of stocks, or the imperiled interests of trade and commerce, or the jeopardizing of money invested in international securities.

Mr. President, I will not say that there are others moved by such considerations to brook national insults, to overlook international murder, to shut their eyes to the wrongs of humanity, to push down aspiring patriotism struggling for liberty, because to say all that might be said on that subject might savor of a want of courtesy to another department of this Government, and that courtesy, so sorely strained during the last few weeks, I would not be the first one to break. But I will say that the Congress of the United States, coming from the people, and representing the people, and standing for the people, both in their weakness and their strength, will never be moved by such considerations to adopt a course so cowardly, so contemptible, and so pusillanimous. Hence, Mr. President, I prefer to trust to the Congress of the United States to say when and where and how and under what provocation the people of the United States shall draw the sword in defense of imperiled honor, in reparation for cruel aggression, and in aid of a brave and aspiring and deserving people struggling for liberty and independence.

Mr. President, I presume that one may still, in these latter days and in a becoming spirit of humility, question the wisdom of the Executive and his advisers without being guilty of the crime of lese majeste. If so, I want to say, and I say it regretfully, as another reason for withholding the power which is sought by the Executive, that the developments of the last few weeks have shaken my confidence in the wisdom of those who have the Executive ear and upon whose advice the Executive appears to be disposed to act on all public questions.

Mr. President, it has been now about two months since the relations of this country with Spain became acute. At that time the position of this country in the eyes of the world was impregnable. The revelation of the horrors practiced upon the devoted people of Cuba by Spain was then fresh in the mind of the world, and that revelation was so shocking to humanity and vouched for by authority so incontestible that the voice of the world with one accord would have stood by the United States in any action which she might feel disposed to take to abate those horrors.

On top of that feeling came the destruction of the Maine and the gross, cruel, wanton murder of our brave sailors in the harbor of Havana. The people of the world stood aghast at that atrocious act, waiting for us to strike, and ready to applaud the blow. But instead of striking as a courageous man and a bold man would have done, instead of striking as a patriotic man must have done, a course of conduct was entered on by the Executive and his advisers which, but for my respect for the Executive office, I would say was marked by evasion and equivocation and subterfuge, having for its primary purpose the blinding of the American people and the muzzling of the American Congress, and having for its secondary purpose delay, a delay that in view of the known and moving and urging facts of that time was dishonorable to this nation, and that weakened it in the eyes of the world no less than it dishonored it.

We were told that we must wait for the result of the deliberations of the naval court of inquiry into the subject of the destruction of the Maine, and we were led to believe that the direction of those inquiries was for the purpose of determining who was responsible for the destruction of the Maine. When that report finally came to hand it was found that it had been directed to the inquiry who was not responsible for the destruction of the Maine. In other words, it was simply a court of inquiry into the responsibility of the officers of the Maine for the destruction of that vessel.

Mr. President, who that has read that report and the testimony taken by that naval court of inquiry but now knows that its deliberations were delayed for an ulterior purpose by superior orders, and does not feel indignation at the subterfuge practiced thereby on the American people and the American Congress? And who, moreover, that has read that report and seen how close and compact the few facts were necessary to determine how and by what agency the Maine was destroyed but knows that any intelligent court in this land or any committee of any legislative body in this land could have found all of those facts within ten days after having entered upon the inquiry?

Well, the report of the court of inquiry, after every delay that red tape and official etiquette could demand had been exhausted, finally come to hand, and was sent to Congress with an impotent and colorless message which indicated that the Executive intellect had been unable to digest plain facts, because to suppose anything else would be an impeachment of the heart and the conscience of the President. Congress at the same time was given to understand that the President would speedily communicate to it other facts in his possession necessary to a full and complete understanding of our relations with Spain and our situation with respect to the Island of Cuba. The time for this other and further and fuller communication was informally fixed for the ensuing Wednesday. When Wednesday came the prospects of a speedy and brilliant diplomatic triumph, which should secure ample reparation for the past and ample guaranty for the future, and at the same time assure independence to struggling Cuba, were so bright and promising that a delay until the ensuing Monday was determined on by the Executive.

And then came the hegira to the White House by invitation and appointment. Senators and Members were buttonholed and cajoled and worked on by irridescent and evanescent promises and assurances of what the future should bring forth to induce them to acquiesce in the delay.

The appeals were so direct, the assurances so positive, and accompanied with a mysterious reserve that was so profound and awe-inspiring that no man, however heartsick and tired, and disgusted and humiliated, wanted to take on himself the responsibility of forcing the Presidential hand. Time with slow but inexorable steps went on until the next Saturday, when the President found that he needed rest. On Sunday he was very weary.

By Monday he had a well-developed case of brain fag, which necessarily prevented the completion of his message. This last development was noted in the European capitals, as we saw by the dispatches, and was considered a most proper and justifiable exhibition of diplomatic finesse to hold in check an unruly Congress. And it was, because the courtesy of Congress to its disabled Executive again tided things over until Wednesday.

On Wednesday came the coup de théâtre. The message which we now have before us, and which, it transpires, had been communicated in substance to Spain long before, was to stir the blood of the Spaniard to the boiling point and make unsafe the lives of our consuls and citizens in the Island of Cuba, and hence it was necessary to further delay its delivery to Congress until the ensuing Monday, in order to bring back our imperiled citizens.

But coincidently with this information came the further information from Rome that Archbishop Ireland had cabled the Holy Father that the President had consented to withhold action until the ensuing Monday, to enable the Holy Father to bring his powerful influence to bear in further aid of the President's diplomacy. Just how far the Holy Father was aiding the President we gather from the following dispatch from Rome in last Monday morning's paper:

The Rome correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing Sunday, says:
"The Pope telegraphed personally to the Queen Regent and Señor Sagasta to-day (Sunday), to convince them that it was Spain's interest to concede the armistice without delay and without conditions, in order to put President McKinley in such a position as to make it difficult for him to decide what course to take."

Now, Mr. President, while all this was going on, we have had from day to day, almost from hour to hour, assurances that diplomatic negotiations were proceeding prosperously, looking to the withdrawal of Spain from the Island of Cuba, to the complete independence of the Cuban people, and to the most complete reparation, however that might be made, for the loss of the Maine and the murder of our sailors. Nothing less would have justified an otherwise shameful procrastination or met for a moment the impatient demand of the people of this country that Congress and the President should take vigorous, determined, and patriotic action. It was with the utmost astonishment, then, that I heard read the portion of the President's message which describes the extent of our diplomatic demands on Spain. The paragraph relating to that is as follows:

Realizing this, it appeared to be my duty, in a spirit of true friendliness no less to Spain than to the Cubans, who have so much to lose by the prolongation of the struggle, to seek to bring about an immediate termination of the war. To this end I submitted, on the 27th ultimo, as a result of much representation and correspondence, through the United States minister at Madrid, propositions to the Spanish Government looking to an armistice until October 1 for the negotiation of peace with the good offices of the President.

In addition, I asked the immediate revocation of the order of reconcentration, so as to permit the people to return to their farms and the needy to be relieved with provisions and supplies from the United States, cooperating with the Spanish authorities, so as to afford full relief.

Mr. President, without enlarging on the discrepancy between that which we were led to believe was the end and that which we now know to have been the end of the President's diplomacy, it is pertinent to inquire, Where has that diplomacy landed him?

What has he been able to accomplish with the aid of the Pope? The Pope answers the question in the telegram which I have before read. The President, in the language of the Holy Father, is now in "a position to make it difficult for him to decide what course to take."

According to his own statement, the only thing which the President has demanded of Spain throughout all this diplomatic negotiation, during which the impatient spirit of the people and the impatient demands of Congress were being subdued and put aside, was an armistice in the Island of Cuba and the privilege upon the part of the United States to feed the starving poor of Spain in that island.

Both of those demands of the President have now been granted by Spain and it is strictly in order to ask, "Mr. President, where are we at?" It is likewise in order to consider seriously whether we want any more diplomacy of the kind I have been describing. If so, we should grant the President's request for discretionary power, which means more diplomacy, and then adjourn and go home. With a State Department at this end of the diplomatic line somewhat weak in the use of diplomatic terms, even when aided by the Department of Justice, as we saw in a semiofficial statement in the papers yesterday, with a diplomatic representative at the other end so anxious to preserve peace that he will not even obey instructions of his superiors for fear of offending Spain, as we likewise saw in a semiofficial communication in the papers yesterday, and with the Pope to assist with his good offices, Spain, no doubt, in time and for a proper indemnity, will absolve us from responsibility for blocking the harbor at Havana with the shattered hull of the sunken Maine.

I can not conceive of any other result likely to be accomplished should our diplomacy progress backward as rapidly in the future as it has in the past. The trouble with it has been that it was without shape and form, and, like the world at the beginning, void. It asked nothing which we had a right to ask or which would materially benefit us in the receiving or which would seriously hurt Spain in the giving, and it was deplorably and disgracefully silent on the things which were bringing flame to the hearts and minds of the American people, and which alone Spain feared and could not satisfactorily adjust.

The little comedy that was played with us from Sunday to Sunday, with Spain in the rôle of the bullying and bloody villain, the six great powers as the respectable and prosperous but fearful citizens, the Holy Father as the mediator, and America as the hero, standing resolutely for wounded honor and outraged humanity, ended on last Sunday where it was designed that it should, with all parties but America in their everyday clothes, smiling, placid, and content, and with the latter, still strident of voice and heroic in attitude, but without ground to stand on, and, in the language of the Holy Father, "in a position to make it difficult to decide what course to take."

Mr. President, this is true if the American nation is bound by the results of our diplomacy; but, fortunately, we are not so bound. The foreign nations knew when they commenced their diplomatic juggle that they were dealing with an agent of limited authority and that the most they could hope to accomplish was to prejudice and embarrass our position in the sight of mankind.

The only power that has ever had the right to commit the country to any policy is now dealing with the subject, and it may brush away the cobwebs of diplomatic intrigue which bind and enthrall another department, and without dishonor and without the reproach of bad faith at last take that vigorous and decided action which the people of this country expect, and which is demanded alike by every sentiment of humanity and by every dictate of national honor. A declaration of war, pure and simple, would be most consonant with my idea of that action. But believing that a declaration of independence in favor of the Cuban Republic, and armed intervention in aid of that declaration, would amount to the same thing, I am prepared for one to accept that as a satisfactory solution of our duty to ourselves and to the world. Spain has made war on humanity by her cruelties and barbarities in the Island of Cuba. She has made specific war on us by her cowardly and perfidious attack on our ship and our unsuspecting sailors. Since she has made war, I say let us give her war.

The sword that has been sheathed so long is still bright and flashing and keen, and the arm that wields it is stronger than ever before. When we draw that sword to defend our national honor, so seriously attacked; to avenge our honored dead, so cruelly slaughtered, we will keep it uplifted until we have won a reparation worthy our dignity as a nation and worthy the memory of those whose loss we so deeply deplore. We will keep it uplifted until we have driven the cowardly and brutal Spanish nation from this hemisphere at the muzzle of our guns, thereby honoring ourselves, honoring our dead, and giving to struggling Cuba, after four hundred years of living hell, and after a succession of heroic struggles which have moved the world to sympathy and admiration, peace and happiness under free and glorious republican institutions.

Mr. President, to pursue the course suggested by the President would be an anomaly in international relations. That course involves, first, a threat of armed intervention to force diplomatic concessions; and second, failing such concessions, possible intervention to expel Spain from the Island of Cuba. It does not involve the independence of Cuba, because that is only suggested in the President's message for the purpose of making an argument against its present recognition.

Such a thing, I believe, as is proposed was never heard of in the history of nations. Nations intervene to secure tranquillity, to preserve order, to stop outrage and murder, but never to themselves usurp sovereignty, nor ever to subvert sovereignty, except in the interest of some other nation or in the interest of a subject people struggling for independence. If we intervene in the affairs of Cuba for either one of the three causes first named, we will have accomplished our purpose when Spain has given proper guaranties of better future conduct.

To propose to expel her from the island after that, or before giving her opportunity to afford such guaranty, would be unheard of and would justly arouse the opposition and protest of other nations. Mr. President, armed intervention involves the use of force and is, in essence, war. It is only less than war by the acquiescence of the power against which it is employed. When writers speak of it as an international right, they speak of it in the same sense that they speak of the right to make war. That right belongs to any nation at any time and for any cause it may esteem sufficient. Both rights spring from the same source, and are held in check by the same sanction, namely, the reprobation of mankind if improvidently exercised. Hence, if we would avoid that reprobation in our intervention in Cuba, it must be either for the purpose of simply restoring order and tranquillity and stable government under the sovereignty of Spain, or it must be in aid of the struggling insurgents who have already so largely overturned the power of Spain.

The first purpose the President disclaims and the last one he refuses to permit Congress to proclaim or to himself proclaim, and therefore I say his course is an anomaly. But we have a perfect right to intervene in Cuba, in the sense that the right is spoken of, if the sovereignty of Spain has been superseded there by another and superior power, or if her aggressions against us have been such as to justify us in making war on her and in aiding another power to supplant her. There would be no anomaly about that.

If we do intervene there, the right to do so and the disposition to do so will be predicated, as everybody knows, on both the grounds I have stated. I am opposed, therefore, to further shuffling or evasion. I think we ought now to declare that which it is our purpose to effectuate. Any other self-respecting nation would do so, and for one I want my country to stand in the front rank of all the nations of the world in the matter of dignified and fearless self-respect.

To stop short now will be to commit this country to a war of conquest. The conclusion is inevitable. To drive Spain out of Cuba without recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic will be to conquer that island by force of arms and to establish our own sovereignty over it. We may hold our conquest for a short time or a long time. We may treat with the insurgents and turn it over to them on such terms as will suit the "business interests," or we may, failing such terms, deliver the island back to Spain; but whatever we do eventually, we will in the first instance have waged a war of conquest. As such it will be justly regarded by all the people of the world, and as such it will be justly resented by all the people of the world.

The historical references in the message of the President for the purpose of showing that the condition of affairs in Cuba do not now justify recognition of independence are failures. Why stand on the message of Andrew Jackson concerning the independence of Texas, a message, moreover, which was ignored and overridden by the action of Congress, when we have before our eyes the generous and glorious example of France in our own revolutionary struggle?

That country did not wait until we had overcome all hostile efforts to subdue our arms before recognizing our independence, but under the promptings of that liberty which was so soon to burst into flame in her own country, France gave us both the moral and the material support of her great national power. She did so in virtue of that principle of international law, then and now in force, that the question of independence is not so much one of fact as it is one of sympathy and interest, and one which every nation may properly judge for itself.

Mr. President, the view urged by the Executive in this matter is both anomalous and unnatural, and, in the results which may flow from it, is so little to be desired in comparison with almost any other possible action, that one is led to doubt whether the President, in his own mind, contemplates the necessity of ever putting it in force. I do not believe that he does, but think he is still relying on the force of our splendid diplomacy to answer the demands of an eager and expectant and insistent public opinion.

Why we should take the risk of financial obligations of large amount, now specifically saddled on Cuba, and which there is grave reason to believe will legally devolve on the successor of Spain in that island, no matter how short the sovereignty of that successor, is one of the puzzling things which the puzzling conditions of the last few weeks has brought forth. Why we should assume the additional and indisputable liability for all that may occur between the expulsion of the Spanish power and the setting up of some other power in the island of Cuba, a liability against which we can not hedge, and which may be onerous in the extreme, is one of the things concerning which we are left in the dark.

There is only one of two explanations possible of this remarkable position of the Executive. He either does not expect to ever act on the power which he invokes, or, if he acts, he expects to make the government which shall succeed that of the United States in the island assume and pay that which the United States might otherwise be compelled to pay, namely, the Spanish debt. This last alternative is so monstrous, not only in its injustice to Cuba, but in the sordid and dishonest intrigue at home which it would imply, that I do not hestitate to reject it. I am again brought back thereby to my original conclusion, namely, that the Executive does not ever expect to intervene, but is still relying on American diplomacy to fulfill the glowing declarations of the last Republican national platform and to meet the impatient demands of the people of the nation.

In view of the net results of that diplomacy, as we now, for the first time, see it in its entirety, another and most cogent reason is shown for withholding from the Executive the unconstitutional power which he seeks at our hands and for taking prompt and decisive action ourselves.

And lastly, Mr. President, I say that such action as that which the President invokes would be shocking to the sense of right and justice of the great mass of liberty-loving American citizens. I have received evidences of this in telegrams which I have been receiving from my constituents in my own State and in other telegrams which I have seen in the hands of other Senators from their States. I propose now to read three or four of the later telegrams which have come to me on this subject from my State. The first one is from the governor of the State:

OLYMPIA, WASH., April 13, 1898.

Hon. GEORGE TURNER,
United States Senate, Washington:
Public opinion here unanimous; favor the independence of Cuba. It is opposed to intervention without Cuban independence.

J. R. ROGERS, Governor.

Another telegram from the capital of my State reads:

OLYMPIA, WASH., April 13, 1898.

Senator TURNER, Washington, D. C.:
Our people urge recognition Cuban Republic. No recognition, no intervention. Stand by Democratic resolutions against bondholders' intervention.

THOS. MALONEY.	L. P. OUELLETTE.
ROBERT BRIDGES.	JAS. B. REAVIS.
WILL D. JENKINS.	F. J. BROWNE.
H. ALLING.	C. W. YOUNG.
C. G. HEIFNER.	C. F. BOWNE.
JOHN CRYDERMAN.	D. B. MORRISON.

Among the signers are one judge of the supreme court of the State and four of the State officials.

Another telegram received from my own home reads:

SPOKANE, WASH., April 12, 1898.

Hon. GEORGE TURNER:
People enraged at President's message. All demand recognition and war. Republicans wiring WILSON Maine disaster sufficient casus belli.

R. B. BLAKE.
F. H. GRAVES.

Those are two of the ablest lawyers in that city or in the State of Washington.

Another dispatch which I have received reads:

SPOKANE, WASH., April 12, 1898.

GEORGE TURNER, United States Senate, Washington:
Second Regiment Uniform Rank Knights of Pythias recently tendered their services in case of war. Please inform President McKinley our offer is suspended until it is known whether this Government intends to fight Spaniards or Cubans.

W. H. PLUMMER,
Colonel Second Regiment.

Colonel Plummer is a prominent member of the bar of Spokane and a member of the State senate.

His telegram was called out, no doubt, by the paragraph of the message of the President which I shall now proceed to read. It is short. Speaking about the policy of forcible intervention, which he had recommended to Congress, he says:

It—

involves, however, hostile restraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Mr. President, since it is evident that the President has never broached the independence of the Cubans to Spain, but has listened with a willing ear to the soft and insinuating tales of an accommodation of the insurgents with the mother country on the basis of a large autonomy, and since the meaning is now made plain to us, of the assurances of his friends a few weeks ago, that the result of his negotiations would be to secure almost as good as Cuban independence, we now see the deplorable direction toward which his policy leads him, and, from his own declaration, the extent to which he is prepared to go.

He proposes to leave the flag of Spain flying over the Island of Cuba. That is bad enough. But worse still, he proposes to use the power of this Republic to compel the people of Cuba to submit to that bloody flag.

Mr. President, it seems to me both monstrous and shocking that such an idea could find lodgment in the mind of an American President. It is monstrous in view of the solemn pledge by all political parties in this country, and by none more strongly than by the Republican party, to promote by every possible means the freedom and independence of Cuba.

It is shocking in view of the heroic struggle made by that brave people for liberty, of their suffering and martyrdom and death, of the confidence with which they look to us, not for aid, but for sympathy, and in view of the active feelings of sympathy with which it is to be supposed we would, and with which we do in fact, look on such a people in such a struggle and for such a cause.

Mr. President, the power of this people may be put forth at some time to strike down aspiring liberty in a neighboring people and to impose on them a government which they repudiate and reject and will not have, but it will be when, and only when, our own liberty shall have been destroyed; when, and only when, a despotism shall have reared itself on the ruins of our now glorious Republic.

That day, thank God, will never come. That infamy, thank God, will never be perpetrated, to stain and tarnish the otherwise glorious record of a glorious people.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the function of diplomacy in regard to this grave crisis in the history of this matter seems to have ended. The President tells us in his message that he has exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors, and for the first time, by the consent of everybody, the matter rests with the American Congress for decision. It has seemed to me to be my duty, while the Government was engaged in diplomatic efforts, to abstain from public discussion. The Constitution having committed to the President from the beginning the conduct of our relations with foreign governments, I do not think that expressions of dissent or criticism are quite in accordance with the duty either of American citizens or American Senators while he is acting. The duty of action and determining the policy of this people now rests with us and our associates in the legislative functions of the Government.

I wish to make a few observations which I fear and believe will be somewhat dull in the ears of my listeners, quietly, rather in the manner of a court dealing with a great question of constitutional law involving in its results liberty and life and public welfare and public honor. It seems to me to be no time for impassioned rhetoric, for the clapping of hands, the stamping of feet, and shouting. I do not in saying that forget that the expressions of deep emotion which we have heard in this Chamber, which we read in the press, which we have heard all over the country, are neither to be condemned or to be slighted.

I am not one of those persons who find in them occasion either for sneers or for jesting. They are the utterances of good men, of American citizens, of the emotion which is felt and which all good men must feel when they witness great cruelty, great wrong, and when they are contemplating a great outrage to their flag. So, whether I differ or whether I agree with the conclusions, or some of them, to which these gentlemen have come, I have nothing but the profoundest respect for the motive which has brought them forth.

I, however, Mr. President, bred and born in a cold latitude, would rather approach this grave occasion in the spirit of that captain who led the company of the people of my own birthplace to the bridge in the morning of the Revolution, when he said, "I went into that battle with the same seriousness and the same sense of responsibility to God with which I am accustomed to go to church." If in the providence of God this country is called upon to do a great act of international justice, let us do it in the spirit of justice, and not in the spirit of vengeance.

The other day one Senator cited us, as if he liked it, the utterance of the Scripture, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. The Saviour cited it only to disapprove it and to give us a new commandment and a better doctrine.

I am not one of those, either, if any there be, who would seek to divide and not to unite the people of this country. If we are to enter upon a course of action where we receive the sympathy of the civilized world, let us not begin by reviling each other.

Mr. President, I regret, speaking for myself, that any Senator feels it to be his duty to indulge in harsh criticism of the President of the United States. What the President of the United States does in diplomacy the people of the United States do. There is no other means of knowing the opinion, purpose, conduct, character of the American people under our Constitution, so far as that is expressed in our diplomatic and international action, than by studying and seeing what the accredited agent of the American people, the Executive, has done, just as there is no mode of determining what the American people do or mean to do or desire to do in legislation but by the legislative enactments passed through their constitutional agencies.

What the President of the United States did the United States did in the face of mankind, and what the President of the United States refrained from doing the American people refrained from doing in the face of all mankind. For one I approve him alike in what he has done and said and in what he has refrained from doing and saying. I like the President's holding back and striving with all his power for a peaceful solution of this business. I like his holding out for peace so long as there was a hope that peace could be had with honor.

Mr. President, do gentlemen, when they criticise this brave American soldier's love of peace—and every brave American soldier from the beginning of our history has been a lover of peace—reflect what war is and who it is that suffers by it? The persons who suffer by modern wars are not the men who provoke them or the men who are guilty of the causes to which they owe their origin. Every modern war is an additional burden on the poor man, the laboring man, the plain man, while the glory is reaped by a few officers and the profits by a few stock jobbers and contractors.

It is not even the guilty Spaniard who is primarily to suffer by the terrible punishment which we are expected to inflict upon Spain. It is not the Weylers or even the Sagastas or the Blancos. It is the poor peasant whose first-born is to be drafted into the military service, never to return or to return a wreck. It is the widow whose stay is to be taken from her, who is to get no share of the glory, but only the full of the suffering. This war, if it be to come upon us, is to add a new and terrible burden, even if it be confined within the limits to which we hope it may be confined, to the already overburdened and suffering peasantry of Europe. The results of a great war are due to the policy of the king and the noble and the tyrant, not the policy of the people.

Every child upon the Continent of Europe to-day was born with a mortgage of $350 about his little neck and an armed soldier riding upon his back. So while I agree, as will be seen before I finish, that war may be necessary, and it may be necessary now, yet I can not myself agree with my honorable friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] when he said so lightly that he thought it was a good plan to have a war once in a while, that it prevented the dry rot of prolonged peace. A nation is made up of human homes, and the glory of a nation and the value of its possessions are in its humble homes. I do not agree with the Senator who thinks that a home is made better by the loss of its boys or the crippling for life of its head.

I do not like what follows war. I do not like the piling up in this country of thousands upon thousands of millions more of our public debt. I have not read history like the Senator from Mississippi in a way to lead me to think that war is ever a purifying process. The seasons which follow great wars, either in this country or elsewhere, are times of debts and jobs and disordered currency and popular discontent. The periods that have followed the great wars are the worst periods in history. If we enter upon this war, we are to subject our ships to many disasters like that of the Maine and our soldiers to pestilence and yellow fever. The destruction in the soldier who survives of the capacity for the rest of his life for the works of peace is a not insignificant result even of the best and most necessary war, to say nothing of the increase of the debt and of the pension list.

On the other hand, I have no patience and I have no respect for those critics who find in the conduct and action of many of my associates and friends on this floor what they are pleased to term a spirit of jingoism. The spirit which has inspired, without an exception, the impassioned and zealous speeches to which we have listened is the spirit of an honorable indignation at a great wrong and an honorable resentment for a great insult, and I believe these gentlemen who think as I do that the time has come when the armed forces of this nation are to be summoned to assert themselves have been guided certainly by quite as patriotic a spirit as I claim to be guided by myself, whether I agree with them in all their conclusions as to the detail of action or not.

But I was saying, Mr. President, that I like and thank President McKinley that he has as far as he could and as long as he could held back the impatience of the American people. President McKinley and those who love him and stand by him need not be at all disturbed lest his fame may suffer in the eyes of humanity and the eyes of posterity by the caution and wisdom with which he has proceeded. The great events in our civic history and the great names in our civic history are those which are connected with the sublime self-restraint with which the American people has contained itself in the presence of great wrongs and of great provocations. It is true, also, that these civic glories have more than once crowned the brows of great soldiers and warriors.

Have we forgotten that the same kind of speeches which the Senator from Washington permitted himself to utter, who seemed to think that he who represents half the State of Washington had a better right to speak for the American people than William McKinley, who represents forty-five States and 70,000,000 people—have we forgotten that the same kind of objurgation and contumely was hurled at the head of George Washington at the time of Jay's treaty, when he held back the indignant people of the Republic from entering upon another war with England? The fame of Washington is represented and typified by the loftiest of monumental structures as it rises in its severe and stainless beauty over the streets of the capital. Where, Mr. President, are the graves of his critics?

Has my honorable friend from Washington forgotten John Adams's experience when the people were clamorous for a war with France, and Washington was summoned from his retirement to take the head of the armies again, and our ministers had been dismissed with insult and contempt by the French Directory, when he sent Oliver Ellsworth and Davie and Vans Murray to reopen the negotiation? That act cost John Adams the support of the Federal party and it cost John Adams his reelection. But it left him his fame and the love and honor of his countrymen.

Andrew Jackson, in the great desire of the Southern people and of the majority of the American people to acquire Texas, and in the midst of our great sympathy with that people, struggling then against the despotism of a people of Spanish blood, held this nation strictly in the narrow yet honorable path of international law. Now, everybody honors Andrew Jackson and the only thing that our friends have to say about it is to pervert the transaction and say that the General really did not do it.

Mr. President, I am old enough to remember some of the tempests of popular excitement in Congress and out. I think there are Senators here who remember the cry of "On to Richmond! On to Richmond! On to Richmond!" and the denunciation by honorable and zealous patriots of what they described as the cowardice and treachery of Abraham Lincoln. I think people like to remember Abraham Lincoln's counsels in those days, and those of us who sit on this side of the Chamber wish we could forget Bull Run.

You remember, Mr. President, the sublime patience with which we waited after the French invasion of Mexico until the time at last came, and Mr. Seward spake and the Frenchman got out. You remember, my colleague cited it yesterday, the impatience of some good men at our dealing with the Trent affair, and my colleague cited the lines of Mr. James Russell Lowell:

> Ef I turn mad dogs loose, John,
> On your front-parlor stairs,
> Would it jest meet your views, John,
> To wait an' sue their heirs?

I wish to remind my honorable colleague, with whom I suppose I am so fortunate as to agree as to everything of substance relating to this political crisis, that we did not take the advice of Mr. James Russell Lowell on that occasion. We took the advice of Abraham Lincoln, and William H. Seward, and Charles Sumner, and John Andrew, and on the whole we came out about as well.

Mr. President, some of us remember President Grant's dealings with the same sort of conditions that we have had to deal with in the Island of Cuba in the last two years. I came first into public life just as that matter was going on. We did not throw law books at each other's heads in those days in the House of Representatives, but there was quite as much angry speech for the President as we have heard in either House of Congress within a few days. But the great fame of Ulysses Grant shines in the sky like a star, and the conduct of that affair is one of the brightest and strongest of his claims to the gratitude and affection of the American people.

I think it is perhaps because I am getting old and thin blooded and losing my pluck in these matters. But, somehow or other, I like, when I read the history of the Republic, to read the story of these sublime self-restraints, for which those men who hate popular government think a great and free people are incapable.

Do you remember how we submitted year after year to the fitting out in England of the war ships which drove our commerce from the seas till at last one morning, Mr. Adams, having discovered that the rams were about to go out from Laird's shipyard, wrote a letter to Lord John Russell expostulating? Lord Russell replied that he had consulted Her Majesty's ministers and really they did not think they could do anything about it. Mr. Adams, when the time came, replied in a single sentence, which to my taste is the most sublime utterance in American literature: "It is superfluous to observe to your lordship that this is war." And the rams were stopped in an hour.

I also agree with the President of the United States in his refusal to recognize belligerency up to this time. I do not agree with my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who thought the result of that was that we policed our shores in the interest of Spain. That recognition of belligerency, in my opinion, would have simply given Spain the right to search our ships; would have released her from responsibility for actions like the destruction of the Maine, unless they could be traced affirmatively and clearly to her, and would have done the insurgents no sort of good whatever.

Mr. President, what has been the result, what is the result today, of the conduct of this matter by President McKinley so far? I have not time to go, as I should like, into a full discussion of this matter, but I wish to read one testimonial only. I do not often read newspapers in the Senate, and ordinarily we all agree that it is not a very good practice, but I wish to read the testimony of the ablest, most consistent, most thoroughgoing advocate of an instant and an extreme dealing with Spain in this emergency in regard to what has been the effect of the policy which the present Executive has pursued thus far.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2680.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is given. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I read, Mr. President, from the New York Sun of April 5, and not much has happened to excite my honorable friend from Washington since then, with the exception which I shall speak of presently.

> The delay thus far—
> Says this organ of the cause of liberty in Cuba—
> has served the cause of the right. It has given time for military and naval preparation for decisive action. It has consolidated public opinion and put the nation behind the President in his constitutional capacity of Commander in Chief of the land and sea forces of the United States. It has permitted the escape of some of the vapor that precedes deliberate and calm action in an affair of momentous importance. It has likewise enabled the President to exhaust, as it was his duty to employ and exhaust, the resources of diplomacy in order to bring about, if possible, an honorable and satisfactory settlement without resort to arms.

Now, I would like to ask these gentlemen who are so anxious to find treachery and cowardice and want of patriotism and want of honor in the President of the United States, the President of their own party, whether in the face of such a testimonial as that it is not just barely possible that President McKinley may have been right and that they may have been wrong.

There is another result which has come from this diplomatic action and this striving to keep in the paths of peace. We have, what we never have had in any international conflict before, largely the sympathy of all foreign nations and almost wholly the sympathy of that nation on earth which is alike the freest, the most powerful, and the most nearly allied to us by language, history, and blood.

I would like to have read as a part of my remarks an extract from the London Times. Mr. President, these gentlemen may, if they choose and if they are so disposed, undervalue in this great crisis the sympathy of the most powerful nation on the face of the earth. I think we may perhaps like to have it before we get through. The sympathy of that country on the other side prolonged what would have been a one or two years' war to a four years or five years' war within the memory of most of us. I will ask the Secretary to read what I have marked. Undoubtedly this paper expresses the sentiment of the entire people of Great Britain.

The Secretary read as follows:

> We can not refuse our sympathy to the people of the United States in circumstances which would have made it difficult even for our own countrymen to preserve their boasted calm. We should have needed all our self-command to combine dignity with equity in such a trying position. It is bare justice to say that however inexcusable the language of some of the newspapers of the United States may have been, the attitude of President McKinley is equally dignified and fair.
> In this matter, whatever disagreements we may have had from time to time with our trans-Atlantic kinsmen, our sympathies are on their side. We share their grief at he loss under such cruel conditions of a noble vessel of war and a gallant crew. We admire the patience and the reserve of a democratic government in circumstances of provocation, in the presence of public excitement which it would only have been too easy to fan into a flame of war. The sentiments with which the majority of the people of the United Kingdom regard the people of the United States, and which we trust, in spite of passing gusts of temper, are reciprocated at heart on the other side of the Atlantic, are expressed in the cordial verses of the poet laureate, which we print in another column.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, I affirm, and I challenge contradiction, that that sympathy and that expression of respect has been won for us largely, if not wholly, by the diplomatic bearing and conduct of the President of the United States in this emergency.

I also desire to express my full and hearty concurrence with the President of the United States when he advises against the recognition of the insurgent government, if it be a government, now. Consul-General Lee says he has never thought the insurgents had anything but the skeleton of a government. I will not repeat the citations from international law and from the utterances of our statesmen and department of foreign affairs throughout the whole of the other Spanish conflicts in the Spanish-American countries which I have had occasion long ago to cite.

I affirm that to recognize that people now can not be done without disowning our whole history, without declaring that England was right and that we were wrong in the great controversy as to her conduct in the time of the rebellion, where there were eleven States, with a constitution, with courts, confederated into a republic; and yet we claimed, and England yielded, that she had no right to recognize their independency. We can not recognize that independency, as I say, without flying in the face of our whole diplomatic history. Before this discussion is over it may be desirable to return to that particular point again.

Gentlemen cite the precedent of France in the time of our Revolution. France did not pretend or claim that that recognition of the independence of the United States was anything but an act of war. She was hardly at peace with England. Before she had been driven off the continent of North America by the genius of Chatham and the military prowess of James Wolfe, and she had sat, sulky and angry, biding her time during twelve years of hollow and treacherous truce, and when the time came France hastened to throw her weight into our scale.

It is not true, however, as I understood my honorable friend to imply the other day, as I read the history of the country, that we should not have won our independence without the assistance of France. Before the French alliance our Navy, which never has had its due share of the credit of the Revolutionary war, had driven the rate of marine insurance in the Mediterranean Sea on English vessels and cargo up to 28 per cent. England could have maintained the land war, France or no France, for a hundred years but for that; and it was that which induced the merchants of Liverpool and London to compel George III and Lord North to make peace.

Our Navy in the time of the Revolution, as I said, never has had its due credit. Why, Mr. President, the State of Massachusetts alone had at sea in the Revolutionary war more men in ships of war and in privateers than the whole of all the rest of the States of the Union put together had on land, in addition to furnishing largely more than her quota of the land forces.

Mr. President, we want to gain and we want to keep in this struggle into which we are about to enter the sympathy of the civilized world, and we can only keep it by maintaining the pathway marked out for us by the law of nations. If we depart in dealing with Spain from the accepted traditions and rules of international law, especially if we depart from those rules which we have affirmed over and over again during our own history, we can not blame them if they shall sympathize with Spain for departing from them also. If we put the issue on any doubtful ground, we make the cause of Spain the cause of every European Government that has got a colony in another continent or in an island adjacent to another continent. We do not need to be departing from the rules of international law. What we have in hand we shall know how to do lawfully and effectively.

Another thing. Senators talk about recognizing the insurgent republic. Is that insurgent republic the people of Cuba? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and, I believe, the committee in their report both state the number of the people of Cuba who sympathize with the insurgent government. The committee states it as a third of the people of the island, and the Senator from Ohio stated it at 400,000. Now, although we may all sympathize, as we all do sympathize, with the gallantry of those insurgents, with the courage and leadership of Gomez, with the endurance and the devotion which is willing to give life and everything which makes life dear for the liberty of Cuba, by what right can you stand in the face of the nations of the earth and say that you will recognize as the lawful government of Cuba a community which the Senator from Ohio, in some sense the organ of the committee, and the chairman of the committee in his report tell us amounts to but a third of the inhabitants of that island?

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is not here, but I did not understand him to make that statement.

Mr. HOAR. I will look in his speech and find if he did not.

Mr. STEWART. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that there were only 400,000 within the military lines.

Mr. HOAR. That is not what he said at all.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the Senator from Ohio said that of those who sympathized with the insurgents there were but 400,000.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps we had better find what the Senator from Ohio said. I had somewhere marked what he said about the 400,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Here it is.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio said:

> They control absolutely more than one-half of that territory. More than 400,000—

That is it—

> More than 400,000 of the population of the island recognize no government except only their civil government.

Now, what has become of the other 1,100,000?

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will take the context, he will find the Senator from Ohio spoke of those in the walled cities.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio said a great many other things with which I am not dealing now. I am dealing with the estimate which that Senator gave of the number of Cubans, the 1,500,000 people, who recognize that government themselves. Where are the other 1,100,000? The Senator said nothing about walled cities. He was speaking of the number of Cubans who recognize no government but the civil government of the insurgents.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to read from the testimony of General Lee?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that a very large part of the people sympathize with the Cuban cause even in that part of the island where the insurgents do not hold the territory.

Mr. TILLMAN. Over 200,000 of them are dead.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to say one word? I wish to read from Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's testimony before the Committee on Foreign Relations, which will give the Senator the information he wants. Will the Senator allow me to do that?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. General Lee was asked by Senator FORAKER:

> What percentage of the population of the island is Cuban?
> Consul-General LEE. About one million five or six hundred thousand people. About one-third of those are negroes. Take off 500,000 and that will leave 1,000,000, the Cubans being out of that 1,000,000, all except about 300,000.
> Senator FORAKER. About 70 per cent?
> Consul-General LEE. Yes; I think all but about 300,000.
> Senator FORAKER. Are all the Cubans friendly to the insurgents?
> Consul-General LEE. I never saw one who was not.
> Senator FORAKER. They are all friendly to them?
> Consul-General LEE. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I know Cubans myself who are thoroughly friendly to the cause of the insurgents, but who do not desire their government to be established.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Massachusetts alludes to the Senator from Ohio as to a certain extent being the organ of the committee. He is in no sense the organ of the committee on the question of the recognition of the Cubans as a republic.

Mr. HOAR. I had somewhere marked the statement about the proportion of people in Cuba who favor the recognition of the insurgents' government made by the committee, which I shall ask leave to quote in the RECORD. It is this:

> The insurgents hold the eastern portion of the island to the practical exclusion of Spain. This possession extends over one body of territory comprising fully one-half of the area of Cuba.
> The extermination by Spain of the peaceful inhabitants of the western portion of the island has so affected the balance of the population between these moieties of Cuba that the insurgents comprise in the eastern half nearly one-third of the population of the island. That third of the population pays taxes to them, serves in their armies, and in every way supports and is loyal to them. This situation has existed ever since the first few months of the war.

Mr. President, I was about to say, however, that this does not seem to me to be practically so important as it seems to some gentlemen who have dealt with it, because the moment we are at war, the moment we choose to exercise armed force and constraint upon the people of Spain, we are then, by every rule of international or moral law, at liberty to ally ourselves with any instrumentality we choose to use. So, after all, it is a question of what is to happen twenty-four hours beforehand or twenty-four hours afterwards.

You have the opportunity to keep within the acknowledged principles of international law, the precedents of your own history, and have unity in dealing with this matter, or, for the sake of casting an imputation upon the President of the United States largely, to adopt a different policy; and the moment this process of intervention begins and war follows, if it do follow, we shall then have the right by every rule of law to ally ourselves with any instrumentality. If the people of Ireland, if the people of Sussex, if the people of the Isle of Man, or of Guernsey were in rebellion against England, and we went to war with her, we should, of course, extend the hand to them as allies and cooperators.

Mr. President, there is another matter in which I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] or the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and with great respect to both those Senators—and no man values more highly their ability or their patriotism—I am sorry they said it. I do not believe that the man who enters a house to put out a fire becomes legally responsible for every mortgage on the house, and I do not believe that a policeman who enters a disorderly house to subdue a riot or a fight, even if he has to take the proprietor into custody, becomes liable for every debt which the proprietor may have incurred. I do not think if we take Spain into custody, if we put her off the Island of Cuba neck and heels, that we are in the least responsible for any mortgages she may have undertaken to put on the island.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOAR. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. MASON. I do not care to interrupt the Senator, but I thought the illustration which he has made as to one entering a burning house should in all fairness have been carried to its legitimate conclusion.

Mr. HOAR. I beg that the Senator will not interrupt me to do so.

Mr. MASON. I wish to ask the Senator, after a man who enters a burning house has extinguished the fire, if he sets up ownership and says he will decide who shall run the house thereafter, whether he does not then incur responsibility?

Mr. HOAR. Nobody proposes to set up ownership and to prescribe who shall run that house hereafter. I have not heard such a proposition, certainly not from my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and, as I said, I think the only effect of that utterance of those two eminent Senators to whom I have referred will be to give to some foreign government, or some foreign banker, or broker, or stock jobber a chance to make a claim against this Government. Mr. President, it is a pretty fine distinction between our liability if we go in there and turn Spain out without first recognizing the insurgent government, and our liability in case we go in there and turn Spain out and do first recognize the insurgent government.

I do not think the hairsplitting metaphysics of my honorable friend from Kentucky or the exuberant eloquence of my honorable friend from Ohio will ever make the publicists or the investors of mankind to see the distinction between those two cases. What they state will be held and will amount in the eyes of mankind to throwing the great authority of those two Senators on the side of a claim to be made hereafter if we do anything in Cuba by way of intervention; and an utterance of that kind in debate is another argument for the opinion of those who think such discussions should be in executive session and not in open session.

Mr. President, there is another thing. As I said, the insurgents have many titles to our sympathy, and they have it. I do not suppose there is a man within the sound of my voice whose heart has not been stirred by the noble and gallant story of this struggle for freedom. They are struggling for freedom. They are brave and unyielding. There is another thing I like in them, and I presume the Senator from Kentucky likes it also: It is well understood that the aspiration of Gomez is for a black republic in the West Indies. If he should get control of Cuba, and if Haiti and San Domingo join him, and perhaps Puerto Rico, he aspires to give an example to mankind where the men of the colored race may rule themselves as equals socially and politically, and in all other ways in freedom and in honor; and for one, I say, and I hope my friend from Kentucky will say, Amen. I bless him and I honor him for that aspiration.

But, Mr. President, the insurgents are not without fault in regard to the terrible condition of affairs which has grown up in Cuba. They began that system of warfare. Among their first acts, long before the reconcentrado orders, was the destruction of every cane field and of every farm where anything could be raised for which even the owners should pay a tax to the Spanish Government. I would not speak severely of them for it in their desperate struggle, but it was an introduction into the usages of war of a practice unknown to the present time. Mr. President, they have not abandoned that system in warfare.

I should like to have the Secretary read one testimony upon this subject, the testimony of a person for whose wisdom, honor, and integrity—if it were not ridiculous for anybody to impugn it—I would pledge every title of my own to the respect and confidence of my countrymen. I speak of Clara Barton. I spoke of her years ago as the most illustrious citizen of Massachusetts. Whoever else may be in doubt, she has won all the laurels of this epoch—that noble, beautiful woman who leaves her comfortable and delightful home, where she enjoyed the society of kindred, the affection of friends, and the admiration of all her fellow-citizens, to go, with the Red Cross in her hand, wherever there is fever or sickness or suffering, penetrating the barbarism of Turkey when the missionaries failed to do so, and making her way into Cuba even past the cruel and bloody knives of the Spanish soldiery.

The American people have had, in every generation since the landing at Jamestown and at Plymouth, brave soldiers and sailors. There has never been a war from the beginning in which the American flag has suffered dishonor or the glory of the American name been tarnished. But in this field other nations also have been our competitors. Military character, courage in war, have been found in human annals from the beginning of time; but the mission of the Red Cross, with its message of peace and humanity, is wholly and altogether of American origin. It is ours almost exclusively. I think we may trust Clara Barton and may accept her evidence without hesitation. I ask the Secretary to read what is marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is hardly possible, even with General Blanco's latest permission, for Spain to give all the protection she would even within her trochas. Although the Spanish soldier might be controlled and might not touch the reconcentrados who are attempting to cultivate the land, there is always the native guerrillas to be feared. There is where the danger lies; it is not so much from the Spanish soldier. The Spanish can generally control their soldiers. All the reconcentrados could cultivate much land still left to them inside of the trochas and inside of the forts, but as soon as they have got something raised, in comes the lawless guerrilla and takes it. Great destruction has also come from the insurgents. Their policy in regard to that is about as strange and as unnatural as was the cruel policy of Spain in driving the reconcentrados away from their farms.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we have the testimony of this benevolent lady to this effect. But I do not wish to be misunderstood. The fact that both parties are in some degree to blame for these horrors does not in the least affect our right and our duty to stop them. They exist in an island over which Spain claims authority, and by her own logic she must admit either that she herself is guilty of them or that her subjects, as she calls them, are guilty of them, she being unable to prevent them. So that I conceive it makes no difference in the right or the duty of the American people to deal with this transaction, and I only cite this evidence of Miss Barton as showing the reason why we should hesitate just now at the recognition of the insurgent government.

What should we do, Mr. President? I think we should not begin by quarreling amongst ourselves and by slapping the President of the United States in the face. I think we should not begin by aiming to make party capital out of this transaction. I agree entirely with my honorable friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] in his admirable and powerful statement of international law as to the right of intervention. He has summed up the authorities on one side, and to some extent on both sides, and he has come to the conclusion—and I will ask leave to make an extract or two from it—that the writers on international law who declare that there is a lawful international right of intervention to stop horrors of this kind have the better reason on their side. In that opinion I entirely concur with him. The chairman says in his report:

The conflict of opinion and definition among the jurists upon the subject of intervention is very great. Some of them deny its existence as a right under any circumstances, excepting of self-defense against an imminent peril, while other writers of equal authority maintain the validity of its assertion as a right for causes which may be inconsistent with that great foundation principle of international law, the equal and inviolable sovereignty of states.

The extremes of these opinions are represented by Guizot and Arntz. The former declares that "no state has the right to intervene in the situation or internal government of another state, except only when the interest of its own safety renders such intervention indispensable."

Arntz maintains that the right of intervention exists:

1. "When the institutions of one state violate or threaten to violate the rights of another state, or when such violation is the necessary consequence of its institutions and the impossibility of an orderly coexistence of states results therefrom."

2. "When a government, acting entirely within the limits of its prerogatives of sovereignty, violates the rights of humanity, whether by measures contrary to the interests of other states or by excess of injustice and cruelty which deeply wounds public morals and civilization.

"The right of intervention is a legitimate one, because, however important may be the rights of sovereignty and independence, there is one thing of still greater importance, and that is the law of humanity and human society, which ought not to be outraged."

Between these extremities of opinion the differences among the publicists are exceedingly various and irreconcilable. Professor Hall, in his work on International Law (3d edition, page 288, note 1), in considering the opinions of modern international jurists who touch upon humanitarian intervention, says that "the treatment which the subject receives from them is merely fragmentary, notice being taken of some only of its grounds, which are usually approved or disapproved without very clear reference to a general principle."

Vattel (liv. 1, chapter iv, section 56) considers it permissible to succor a people oppressed by its sovereign, but does not appear to sanction any of the analogous grounds of intervention. Wheaton (Elem., part II, chapter 1, section 93), Bluntschli (section 478), Mamiani (page 86), give the right of aiding an oppressed race.

Heffter (section 46), while denying the right of intervention to repress tyranny, holds that so soon as a civil war has broken out a foreign state may assist either party engaged in it. Calvo (section 166) and Fiore (I, 446) think that states can intervene to put an end to slaughter.

Vattel says, Book II, Chapter IV, top page 157, "As to those monsters who, under the title of sovereigns, render themselves the scourges and horror of the human race, they are savage beasts, whom every brave man may justly exterminate from the face of the earth.

"All antiquity has praised Hercules for delivering the world from Antæus, a Busiris, and a Diomede."

If these opinions state the correct rule, as we believe they do, the right of intervention by the United States in the present instance is indubitable. They are, however, controverted by other publicists of great eminence. It is possibly correct to say as to this conflict of opinion that this portion of international law is, though operative in certain cases, in that formative and progressive condition of development by which many benign principles, though formerly contested, have at last become firmly established.

I shall not undertake to detain the Senate by reciting the familiar, yet terrible, story which is told in the consular reports. If there be no objection, I will also include as a part of my remarks a few extracts from the reports of our different consuls which have been communicated to the Senate and printed. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I agree further with the President of the United States when he says in a sentence brief and compact, as becomes the head of a great nation making a great statement to the world, but which can not be misunderstood—

This long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained.

Mr. President, that means, as I understand it, that in order to restore peace in that island, the continuance of the flag of Spain over the Island of Cuba is an object impossible of attainment. If that be true, then any intervention on our part conducted by the President, if it is to accomplish the object at which we aim, must directly, and as soon as may be, expel the authority of Spain from that island, and in that belief I have no doubt we are all agreed. It is in view of that fact that the President goes on to ask leave to use the forces of the Navy and Army to restore peace. It is a peace, in other words, which can only exist and be consistent with the expulsion of the Spanish flag from Cuba. So our intervention can only accomplish its end by compelling the entire withdrawal of Spain from the island. So far as Spain has made this necessary, she is responsible for it; so far as the insurgents have made it necessary, they are, or they were, Spanish subjects, whom she can not control, and Spain, so long as she is there, can not prevent it, and we who can prevent it must prevent it.

Mr. President, I find no difficulty where my honorable friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] and my honorable friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] find difficulty, and where my honorable friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] finds a doubt, in authorizing the President to do a particular act of international force unless that be preceded by a declaration of war. Take a familiar case in our history, that of the Algerian captives, where so many of our merchantmen and sailors were taken by Algiers, during Mr. Madison's Administration I think it was.

Does anybody here doubt that Congress might have authorized President Madison to dispatch a naval force to Algiers and rescue those captives and compel their delivery up, and stop there? I imagine that proposition will not be controverted. It depends on the other side, then, whether they will take that as an act of war. If we authorize the President to put Spain out and restore peace to that island and Spain shall get out, there will be no war, and it is not necessary to declare war; or if he puts her out and she concludes that she can not help herself and does nothing further, there will be no further war, and it is not necessary to declare war.

Mr. President, the Executive of the United States has frequent occasion to do acts of this kind when Congress is not in session. How many instances of international force have been necessary in the ordinary protection of American citizenship abroad or on the high seas which the other party may take as an act of war if it chooses, but which the President has a constitutional right and duty to do whether or not war has been previously declared? Suppose Austria had gone a little further and Commodore Ingraham had resisted the attempt to retake Martin Koszta by force and the President of the United States had sustained him in it. Does anybody claim that is a declaration of war, or will any American claim that it is not within the lawful and constitutional power of the President to do it? Austria might have treated it as an act of war.

Take the very familiar power committed to the President, that of the recognition of the independence of a foreign government, which he does in time of peace, so far as this country is concerned, or he does when Congress is not in session. The other side may take that as war or not, as they see fit. It is very often one of the most hostile of acts. So I find no difficulty there.

Mr. President, I am therefore prepared to support the resolutions of the House, if I have correctly interpreted them. I should like a little better the form which has been drawn up, I understand, by the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. It appeared in the papers, and I suppose I violate no propriety in saying that it appeared with his consent or his authority. I like that, which I think is a perfect expression of the limits and the extent to which it is necessary for us to go, and I think when we go that far all other things will be added to us and all other things will be added by the inevitable and inexorable logic of events that are desired by the friends of freedom in Cuba. I have spent this time because I thought it was due to a brave soldier, to an honorable American patriot, and to a great President that the angry attacks upon him which have been heard in this Chamber should not go without at least one voice being raised in his behalf.

I also agree with the President and with the committee in treating the outrage upon the Maine for our present and immediate purpose only as an instance and proof of Spain's incapacity to preserve order and civilization in the island. It will have its own consideration, and they misunderstand the American people who think that the consideration of any public transaction by the people of the United States leads to cowardice, dishonor, or weakness. It will have its own consideration, and unless the entire history of this country is to be forgotten the result of that consideration will be such as is creditable and honorable to American manhood and to American good faith.

I believe it was a meditated act of which Spanish officials were probably guilty. I do not overlook Consul-General Lee's suggestion as to the possibility of bringing a torpedo in the neighborhood of the ship in a boat by one or two or three men and the ship swinging against it. That is not the consul-general's opinion, but his suggestion, and I should like to put it in the language in which he gave it:

> Consul-General LEE. I never have been certain that the submarine mine was placed there prior to the entrance of the Maine into the harbor. It might have been done afterwards. The Maine was anchored to a buoy by some little chain. A vessel swinging around that way sometimes gets at various places all around the circle. When she would swing off that way, with the bow next to the buoy, and these boats plying about the harbor all the time, anybody could go pretty well in front of her on a dark night and drop one of these submarine mines of 500 pounds. They have fingers, as it were, and as the boat goes around it would touch the finger, which makes contact and explodes the mine. That might have been done after the Maine got in there.
> Senator CULLOM. And not be discovered?
> Consul-General LEE. Yes, sir; one or two men rowing quietly in a boat could drop it off the stern of the boat on a dark night, though Sigsbee had his patrols out—I do not know what they call them on men-of-war; sentinels. Still, it might not have been discovered. A boat would not have been noticed, because boats go there always.
> Senator CULLOM. Day and night?
> Consul-General LEE. Yes, sir; to a late hour of the night. The harbor is full of these little boats. A mine weighs about 500 pounds, and I suppose it would take two or three men—one man to row and probably three or four to handle the mine.
> Senator CULLOM. Containing 500 pounds of gun cotton?
> Senator LODGE. And the casing.
> Senator CULLOM. And the casing, which weighs something more.

But the committee say with great force that such things are not found in private hands, especially in a community like that of Havana, and that it is almost impossible to escape the conclusion that no person could have had in his possession a mine or torpedo capable of working that destruction without the connivance of Spanish officials, or without gross negligence, which, under the circumstances, was equal to connivance. I further agree and believe and maintain that that being true, the Spanish Government is responsible for that loss and should be held responsible.

But everybody—the President, the consul-general, the Committee on Foreign Relations, if I am not mistaken—acquits Blanco. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], nods his head in assent. General Lee says he found Blanco in tears when he hastened himself to the scene of the occurrence. This is Blanco's dispatch:

> HAVANA, February 18, 1898.
> MR. CONSUL: It becomes my painful duty to express to you my profound sorrow for the misfortune which occurred yesterday on board the American ship Maine. I associate myself with all my heart to the grief of the nation and of the families who have lost some of their members; and upon so doing I do not only express my personal sentiments, but I speak in the name of all the inhabitants of Havana—witnesses of the catastrophe which has afflicted so many homes.
> God guard you many years.
> RAMON BLANCO.
> The CONSUL-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES.

Now, to acquit Blanco—do not let me be misunderstood—is to acquit Spain of direct purpose, intentional guilt, in that transaction, because he was the only medium through which the orders of the Government of Spain could have gone to any subordinate official. I do not mean that to acquit Blanco is to acquit Spain of neglect. I do not mean that to acquit Blanco is to acquit her of having treacherous and wicked officials, and still less do I mean that to acquit Blanco is to acquit her of full responsibility; but what I say is that if we acquit Spain of having directly, with malice aforethought, of diabolical intent and purpose, set off that mine, then the setting off of it is not an affirmative act of war, but is one of those acts which warrant us in seeking reparation, if necessary, by warlike means and instrumentalities. It does not create a state of war unless we choose to make war for that cause in and of itself; and so the committee treat it.

If the Maine stood alone, we could, I hope and believe, under these circumstances secure an honorable reparation for her loss without war. Spain has opened the door. She has declared her willingness to submit, not her liability, not what reparation she shall make, but simply the fact how it happened under circumstances which imply that if it be ascertained that it happened from an external cause, she of course expects to make due reparation and to agree, as she says in advance, to accept the result.

Mr. President, I do not agree with those gentlemen, amiable, honest, zealous, and patriotic as they are, who find fault with our honorable committee and our President for not bringing in a declaration of war on the instant in consequence of the destruction of the Maine. It is said—although on this I do not place so much stress, but as gentlemen are reviewing the past and finding fault with some of us, we may, perhaps, allude to it—that there is no other country in the world that would allow the Maine incident to go three weeks without redress. That may be true, but there is no other country in the world which would allow itself to go unarmed and would maintain, with wealth and resources like ours, a policy for all these years which enables a fifth-rate, weak power, a relic of the Dark Ages, to be on an equality almost with the people of the United States for the first few weeks of a naval war.

I should think my honorable and amiable friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who does me the honor to listen to me, and, I am afraid from the expression on his countenance, has done me the honor to disagree with me a good deal, would be rather amused when he reads the utterances and the votes of some of his bellicose associates and remembers how he was baffled, disappointed, and blocked in his honorable and praiseworthy attempts, which are the glory and crown or among the various glories and crowns of his honorable and useful life, by the very men who are now so warlike.

I will not undertake to give names or to allude to persons, but I will undertake to say that if any Senator of the State of Massachusetts be charged with overcaution in hesitating to get this country into a naval war before she is ready, at least no Senator of Massachusetts ever failed to vote for the largest amount of money and the largest number of ships whenever the question of an honorable and decent Navy was at stake or whenever the question of proposed fortifications was up.

Mr. President, Spain ought to be as powerless in the grasp of the United States as a 3-year-old infant in the grasp of his father.

Mr. President, I expect to vote for the House resolutions, unless I should have an opportunity to vote for the resolution of the honorable Senator from Colorado. That leads to war. There is no doubt about it. It will lead to the most honorable single war in all history, unless we except wars entered upon by brave people in the assertion of their own liberty. It leads to war. It is a war in which there does not enter the slightest thought or desire of foreign conquest or of national gain or advantage.

I have not heard throughout this whole discussion in Senate or House an expression of a desire to subjugate and occupy Cuba for the purposes of our own country. There is nothing of that kind suggested. It is disclaimed by the President, disclaimed by the committee, disclaimed by everybody, so far as I am aware. It is entered into for the single and sole reason that three or four hundred thousand human beings, within 90 miles of our shores, have been subjected to the policy intended, or at any rate having the effect, deliberately to starve them to death—men, women, and children, old men, mothers, and infants.

If there have been any hasty or unwise utterances of impatience in such a cause as that, and I think there have been, they have been honest, brave, humane utterances. But when I enter upon this war, I want to enter upon it with a united American people—President and Senate and House, and Navy and Army, and Democrat and Republican, all joining hands and all marching one way. I want to enter upon it with the sanction of international law, with the sympathy of all humane and liberty-loving nations, with the approval of our own consciences, and with a certainty of the applauding judgment of history.

I confess I do not like to think of the genius of America angry, snarling, shouting, screaming, kicking, clawing with her nails. I like rather to think of her in her august and serene beauty, inspired by a sentiment even toward her enemies not of hate, but of love, perhaps a little pale in the cheek and a dangerous light in her eye, but with a smile on her lips, as sure, determined, unerring, invincible as was the Archangel Michael when he struck down and trampled upon the Demon of Darkness. [Applause in the galleries.]

Fourth. The insurgents' leaders have given instructions to prevent grinding wherever it can be done, because by diminishing the export of sugar the Spanish Government revenues are decreased. It will be very difficult for the Spanish authorities to prevent cane burning, because one man at night can start a fire which will burn hundreds of acres, just as a single individual could ignite a prairie by throwing a match into the dry grass.

I have read letters stating that charitable persons in the United States will send clothing, food, and some money to these unfortunate people, and I have arranged with the Ward Line of steamers to provide free transportation from New York. I hope to secure the permission of the Spanish authorities here for such things to be entered free of duty. I am told, however, that they must come consigned to the bishop of Havana. The sufferings of the reconcentrado class have been terrible beyond description, but in Havana less than in other places on the island; yet Dr. Brunner, acting United States sanitary inspector here, informed me this morning that the death rate of the reconcentrados in this city was about 50 per cent that in other places of the island, and when it is remembered that there have been several hundred thousands of these noncombatants or pacificos, mainly women and children, who are concentrated under General Weyler's order, some idea can be formed of the mortality among them.

In this city matters are assuming better shape. Under charitable committees large numbers of them have been gathered together in houses, and are now fed and cared for by private subscriptions. I visited them yesterday and found their condition comparatively good, and there will be a daily improvement among them, though the lives of all can not be saved. I witnessed many terrible scenes and saw some die while I was present. I am told General Blanco will give $100,000 to the relief fund.

I am, etc.,

FITZHUGH LEE, Consul-General.

SIR: The public rumor of the horrible state in which the reconcentrados of the municipal council of Havana were found in the fosos having reached us, we resolved to pay a visit there, and we will relate to you what we saw with our own eyes:

Four hundred and sixty women and children thrown on the ground, heaped pellmell as animals, some in a dying condition, others sick, and others dead, without the slightest cleanliness nor the least help, not even to give water to the thirsty, with neither religious nor social help, each one dying wherever chance laid them, and for this limited number of reconcentrados the deaths ranged between forty and fifty daily, giving relatively ten days of life for each person, with great joy to the authorities who seconded fatidically the politics of General Weyler to exterminate the Cuban people, for these unhappy creatures received food only after having been for eight days in the fosos, if during this time they could feed themselves with the bad food that the dying refused.

On this first visit we were present at the death of an old man who died through thirst. When we arrived he begged us, for God's sake, to give him a drink. We looked for it and gave it to him, and fifteen minutes afterwards he breathed his last, not having had even a drink of water for three days before. Among the many deaths we witnessed there was one scene impossible to forget. There is still alive the only living witness, a young girl of 18 years, whom we found seemingly lifeless on the ground; on her right-hand side was the body of a young mother, cold and rigid, but with her young child still alive clinging to her dead breast; on her left-hand side was also the corpse of a dead woman holding her son in a dead embrace; a little farther on a poor, dying woman, having in her arms a daughter of 14, crazy with pain, who after five or six days also died, in spite of the care she received.

In one corner a poor woman was dying, surrounded by her children, who contemplated her in silence, without a lament or shedding a tear, they themselves being real specters of hunger, emaciated in a horrible manner. This poor woman augments the catalogue already large of the victims of the reconcentration in the fosos.

The relation of the pictures of misery and horror which we have witnessed would be never ending were we to narrate them all.

It is difficult and almost impossible to express by writing the general aspect of the inmates of the fosos, because it is entirely beyond the line of what civilized humanity is accustomed to see; therefore no language can describe it.

The circumstances which the municipal authorities could reunite there are the following: Complete accumulation of bodies dead and alive, so that it was impossible to take one step without walking over them; the greatest want of cleanliness, want of light, air, and water; the food lacking in quality and quantity what was necessary to sustain life, thus sooner putting an end to these already broken-down systems; complete absence of medical assistance; and what is more terrible than all, no consolation whatever, religious or moral.

If any young girl came in any way nice looking, she was infallibly condemned to the most abominable of traffics.

At the sight of such horrible pictures the two gentlemen who went there resolved in spite of the ferocious Weyler, who was still Captain-General of the island, to omit nothing to remedy a deed so dishonorable to humanity, and so contrary to all Christianity. They did not fail to find persons animated with like sentiments, who, putting aside all fear of the present situation, organized a private committee with the exclusive end of aiding materially and morally the reconcentrados. This neither has been nor is at present an easy task. The great number of the poor and scarcity of means make us encounter constant conflicts. This conflict is more terrible with the official elements, and in a special manner with the mayor of the city and the civil authorities, who try by all means to annihilate this good work. The result of the collections are very insignificant if we bear in mind the thousands of people who suffer from the reconcentrations; but it serves for some consolation to see that in Havana some 159 children and 84 women are well cared for in the asylum erected in Cadiz street, No. 82, and 93 women and children are equally well located in a large saloon erected for them in the second story of the fosos, with good food and proper medical assistance, as also everything indispensable to civilized life.

According to the information which we have been able to acquire since August until the present day, 1,700 persons have entered the fosos proceeding from Jaruco, Campo Florido, Guanabo, and Tapaste, in the Province of Havana. Of these, only 243 are living now and are to be found in Cadiz street—82 in the saloon already mentioned and 61 in the Quinta del Rey and the Hospital Mercedes, the whole amounting to about 307, and of these a great many will die on account of the great sufferings and hunger they have gone through.

From all this we deduct that the number of deaths among the reconcentrados has amounted to 77 per cent.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Day.

No. 723.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Havana, December 7, 1897.

I am informed an order has been issued in some parts of the island suspending the distribution of rations to reconcentrados. * * * The condition of these people is simply terrible.

I inclose herewith an official copy of the comparative mortality in Havana for the six months ending November 30. It will be perceived that there has been a great increase in the death rate, and without adequate means in the future to prevent it the mortality will increase. I hear of much suffering in the Spanish hospitals for want of food and among the Spanish soldiers. * * * I hear also that the Spanish merchants in some parts of the island are placing their establishments in the names of foreigners in order to avoid their provisions being purchased on credit by the military administration, and that the Spanish army is suffering much from sickness and famine, and that a great deal of money is needed at once to relieve their condition. In some parts of the island, I am told, there is scarcely any food for soldiers or citizens, and that even cats are used for food purposes, selling at 30 cents apiece.

It is a fair inference, therefore, to draw from the existing conditions that it is not possible for the Governor-General of this island to relieve the present situation with the means at his disposal. * * *

Mr. Lee to Mr. Day.

No. 727.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Havana, December 14, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I have received information that in the province of Havana reports show that there have been 101,000 "reconcentrados," and that out of that 52,000 have died. Of the said 101,000, 32,000 were children. This excludes the city of Havana and seven other towns from which reports have not yet been made up. It is thought that the total number of reconcentrados in Havana province will amount to 150,000, nearly all women and children, and that the death rate among their whole number from starvation alone will be over 50 per cent.

For the above number of reconcentrados $12,500, Spanish silver, was set aside out of the $100,000 appropriated for the purpose of relieving all the reconcentrados on the island. Seventy-five thousand of the 150,000 may be still living, so if every dollar appropriated of the $12,500 reaches them the distribution will average about 17 cents to a person, which, of course, will be rapidly exhausted, and as I can hear of no further succor being afforded, it is easy to perceive what little practical relief has taken place in the condition of those poor people.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Day.

No. 742.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Havana, January 3, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to state, as a matter of public interest, that the "reconcentrado order" of General Weyler, formerly Governor-General of this island, transferred about 400,000 self-supporting people, principally women and children, into a multitude, to be sustained by the contributions of others or die of starvation or of fevers, resulting from a low physical condition and being massed in large bodies without change of clothing and without food.

Their houses were burned, their fields and plant beds destroyed, and their live stock driven away or killed.

I estimate that probably 200,000 of the rural population in the Provinces of Pinar del Rio, Havana, Matanzas, and Santa Clara have died of starvation or from resultant causes, and the deaths of whole families almost simultaneously or within a few days of each other, and of mothers praying for their children to be relieved of their horrible sufferings by death, are not the least of the many pitiable scenes which were ever present. In the Provinces of Puerto Principe and Santiago de Cuba, where the "reconcentrado order" could not be enforced, the great mass of the people are self-sustaining.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Day.

No. 746.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE GENERAL,
Havana, January 15, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith some statistics sent me about the mortality in the town of Santa Clara, the capital of Santa Clara Province, situated about 33 miles south of Sagua, which numbers some 14,000 inhabitants. It will be noticed that there were 5,489 deaths in that town in the seven years previous to 1897, which included 1,417 in one year, from an epidemic of yellow fever, while in 1897, owing to the concentration order, there were 6,981; the concentration order went into effect in February.

In that year, 1897, the month's death rate for January was 73, but in February, the first month of reconcentration, there were 114, and there has been a gradual increase since, as you will see, until in December, 1897, the number of deaths was 1,011. I refer to this as a specimen of the mortality on this island in consequence of the "reconcentrado order" of the late Captain and Governor General, Weyler.

I am, etc.,

FITZHUGH LEE, Consul-General.

No. 95.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Matanzas, November 17, 1897.

* * * * * * *

Starvation.—No relief as yet afforded the starving thousands in this province. Several days ago an order from Captain Gin was given municipal authorities to issue rations and clothing, but no attention is paid the order.

Death rate in this city over 80 persons daily, and nearly all from want of food, medicines, and clothing. As I write this a dead negro woman lies in the street within 200 yards of this consulate, starved to death; died some time this morning, and will lie there, maybe, for days. The misery and destitution in this city and other towns in the interior are beyond description.

A general order has been issued allowing reconcentrados to return to the country, but the restrictions placed in order are such as to practically prohibit. If they went, what can they do without money, food, or shelter? Only those who can obtain employment on sugar plantations can live. Insurgents say no one will be allowed to grind in Province of Matanzas. The situation is indeed deplorable, and I am free to say no real help can be expected from Spanish Government, and the fate of the remaining reconcentrados is slow, lingering death from starvation.

Mr. Brice to Mr. Day.

No. 97.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Matanzas, December 17, 1897.

Concentrados.—Relief offered these and other poor people by Spanish authorities is only in name. I have personally visited (on several occasions) head masters of distributing stations. Two thousand rations were given out, for a few days only, to 8,000 persons. * * * There are more than 12,000 starving people in this city to-day. One out of 4 (or 6) received the following ration: 2 ounces rice, 1½ ounces tassajo (jerked beef), and sometimes a small piece of bread, per diem. Imagine starving people being relieved by such rations! Even this ration of food has been discontinued since 11th instant. Death rate has diminished somewhat; now about 63 daily. There are less people to die.

The scenes of misery and distress daily observed are beyond belief. Here is one out of hundreds: In a family of seventeen living in an old limekiln, upper part of city limits, all were found dead except three, and they barely alive. * * * A few of the strongest of these people have been sent out to sugar plantations, which expect to grind. They get 30 cents per day and board themselves. General Blanco's order allowing reconcentrados, owners of plantations and farms, to return and cultivate crops, etc., is inoperative and of no avail. Several of our American citizens, owners of land, have repeatedly asked the civil governor of this province for permission to return to their homes, and in every case refused or restrictions imposed making it impossible to comply with.

Mr. Brice to Mr. Day.

No. 99.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Matanzas, January 13, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to report the following concerning destitute American citizens, Matanzas Province:

* * * * * * *

Up to Sunday, January 9, 1898, weekly rations of food have been regularly issued, also medicines for sick, and although there has been more or less hardships and suffering for want of clothing, shelter, etc. (which we were not allowed to supply), none of our people have suffered for food or medicine.

* * * * * * *

In behalf of these people I earnestly ask the Department that some prompt measures be taken to further relieve them. They are absolutely helpless—no work, shut up in cities and towns like rats in a trap to starve. We have fifteen or eighteen families (American reconcentrados) who own property in the country, and were they allowed to go to their homes, could make a good living. All these have begged and pleaded with authorities (under Blanco's order) to go, and in every case refused.

Since the 24th of May, 1897, to December 26, 1897, seven months, we have given food and medicines and relief to an average of 305 persons. American citizens, at a cost of $8,175.48 Spanish gold. This amount received from Havana on account of Cuban relief fund to date. We require a little over $900 (bills not rendered) to settle last two weeks' ration bills and three weeks' medicine.

As I write a man is dying on the street in front of my door, the third in a comparatively short time.

Very respectfully, PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 415.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, December 21, 1897.

SIR: I respectfully report that sickness and the death rate on this island is appalling. Statistics make a grievous showing, but come far short of the truth.

The principal disease is known by various names. Calentura, baludol fever, la grippe, etc., is thought by physicians to be brought on by insufficient food. I know some that are attacked that have plenty. These, however, usually make a good recovery, while the others die or make very slow recovery.

The three Rivery brothers, American citizens and owners of coffee, cocoa, and orange groves, are about to return to their places. They are absolutely penniless, and say they would have surely starved but for the food issued from this consulate. I shall continue to supply them with food, and issue a month's rations of such food as rice, beans, codfish, crackers, etc., as their homes are over 30 miles away. I have made myself, personally (not my Government), responsible for the transportation of themselves, their families, and goods, as it seemed desirable to get them on their estates as soon as possible.

Dr. Henry S. Caminero, United States sanitary inspector, has just informed me that there are in this city over 12,000 persons sick in bed, not counting those in military hospitals. This is at least 35 per cent of the present population. Quinine, the only remedy of avail, is sold ten times higher than in the States.

Mr. Jova to Mr. Day.

No. 261.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, November 11, 1897.

In the meantime the reconcentrados, the majority innocent beings, who have had, and even now have, no notion of the cause of this revolution, who had no more aspiration than to till their little farms, continue perishing. It is difficult, it may be said almost impossible, to be able to describe the extension and intensity of such tremendous suffering, of such iniquitous, unjust, and sinful imposition, to annihilate thousands of women and children. If this Godless combination should be accurately represented, it would seem an exaggeration induced by stirred fellow-feeling.

With sensibility in the heart moving among them, the unceasing crowd of famished beggars, one can scarcely do more than commiserate the undeserved misfortune. To express, to delineate the afflictions, the anguishes witnessed at every step, would require much to write, and no lavish of colors could approach the reality to fiction. No history in the world, ancient or modern, can be compared an instant to this frightful, dreadful suffering. Perhaps civilization has not seen the like of it.

The guerrillas have already started their merciless warfare, having within the past week killed two "presentados" who had in good faith surrendered and gone to work on the American-owned estate "Victoria," repeating the act upon three insurgents who had surrendered to the local guerrillas of Sagua.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 266.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, November 25, 1897.

SIR: With reference to the distress and deaths in this island, I beg to submit the following relative to this—Santa Clara—province.

As has been my custom for the past five months, I have just made the monthly trip of investigation in this consular district, embracing a large part of the territory of the province. Appended is the official mortality list of each of the judicial districts comprising the province known as "Cinco Villas" (five towns) from January 1 to November 15, 1897, inclusive, viz:

Santa Clara	27,900	Sancti Espiritus	5,483
Sagua	16,583	Trinidad	4,946
Cienfuegos	14,263
Remedios	11,415	Total	80,589

Add to this 25 per cent for the number of which no record has been kept. * * * I deem a conservative estimate would make the grand total 100,736 deaths.

In truth, after talking with both military and judicial officers, I regard this rather under than above the actual deaths for the period stated. Undoubtedly one-half of the concentrated people have died; and to-day Spanish soldiers are companion victims to the surviving noncombatants.

The inclosed slip (inclosure No. 1), showing the number of deaths, official, in the small municipal district of San Juan de la Yeras, will give some idea of the rapid increase from month to month, as will also the clippings (inclosure No. 2), cut from the local papers, show that the authorities no longer conceal these facts, as was done under the retired Captain-General. This appalling death roll is mute yet convincing proof of the terrible destruction of life under the main policy pursued in attempting to subjugate the island. The heavens, it would appear, weep for despoiled, distressed Cuba, for during the present month the fall of rain has been almost phenomenal. I have to reiterate, the authorities, however great the desire to do so, are utterly helpless to ameliorate the dire distress that must continue to increase. * * *

Relative to furnishing protection to the mills to grind, how is it possible in view of the fact that the safeguard extended planters in making the previous crop enabled them to grind less than one-third of the usual yield, while the military force available to-day is not half in numbers as at that time?

With me the conviction is firmly rooted that within sixty days 90 per cent of the populace will reach a state of craving hunger, without outside aid, nor do I feel that I am speaking chimerically when I include the rank and file of the Spanish army.

The true status, as viewed at present, will bear out this opinion. The suffering among the troops, as well as the reconcentrados, simply beggars portrayal, while discontent ripens daily.

I am, etc., WALTER B. BARKER, Consul.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 270.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

* * * * * * *

All efforts so far to obtain relief by popular subscription have met with signal failure. The Cubans are too poverty stricken, while the Spaniards, who own the wealth, will contribute nothing.

In my recent trip I found that the Spanish soldiers are not only suffering for necessary food, but I was often appealed to by these pitiable creatures for medicine. One has only to look upon them to be assured of the needs complained of.

[Confidential.]

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, December 23, 1897.

* * * * * * *

How could the situation be otherwise, since the island is producing absolutely nothing, save some growing cane, and at the same time completely exhausted of all food? Relief alone can be obtained from the outer world in the way of charitable contributions.

This—Santa Clara—province is capable this season of producing perhaps two-thirds of whatever cane might be made in the entire island.

To grind this cane without interruption would be the means of saving the lives of thousands who, without this or outside aid within the next thirty to fifty days, must die of actual hunger. Over a month since the planters were officially advised of Spain's inability to provide protection in order to operate their mills. This leaves the sugar growers entirely in the hands of the Cubans in revolt as to whether they will be allowed to grind without hindrance or fear of total destruction of their property. I know that strict orders have been given to subordinate commanders under no circumstances must mills be permitted to grind, under penalty of violation of the order destruction of property.

SIR: I beg to submit the following: In this consular district a reign of terror and anarchy prevails which the authorities, be they so disposed, are utterly powerless to control or in any measure subdue.

Aside from the suffering and desperation caused by the unparalleled destitution, I regard the situation as rapidly assuming a critical stage: and to add that, as stated repeatedly heretofore, in no way have the authorities departed in fact from the policy pursued by the late (but not lamented) General Weyler.

Spanish troops as well as the guerrillas, under the cruel chiefs Carreras, Olavarrita, and Lazo, continue to despoil the country and drench it with the blood of noncombatants. Although the "bando" of the Captain-General provides that laborers may return to estates having a garrison, last week a number belonging on the "Sta. Ana," located within a league of Sagua, and owned by Mr. George Thorndike, of Newport, R. I., were driven off after returning, and refused permit as a protection by the military commander, Mayor Lomo, one of the trusted officers under the Weyler régime.

Over two months since two of our citizens notified me they had discovered in possession of the local guerrillas 10 or 12 head of their horses, seized by said guerrillas. I addressed the military commander of Sagua, * * * asking, upon proof of ownership, their stock to be restored. Nothing has been done; while these American citizens—both in affluence at the breaking out of the rebellion—are to-day dependent on charity.

One sugar mill is running, not without interruption, with chances of making one-fourth of a crop. Another—just started up—was attacked yesterday by a band of insurgents, killing 14 and wounding 5 of the guerrillas paid by the estate to protect the operatives. Seven laborers were killed, the insurgents leaving two of their dead.

An adjoining estate, the property of the British consul, was also attacked, the growing cane burned. This precludes further attempts to grind, as men can not be induced to work while the insurgents roam at will over the country.

It is proper that I inform the Department that the ravage of smallpox has reached a point where the physicians, few in number, without proper means of treating, as well as no nurses, can not cope with it. I have cabled our dispatch agent in New York for an additional supply of virus.

I was informed by the mayor of this city only yesterday that he was just in receipt of a communication from the government of the province stating no funds to feed the starving were obtainable. In reply to my query why he did not send a number of them to the country, he stated that the military commander refused to grant this permission.

WALTER B. BARKER, Consul.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 294.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, March 12, 1898.

* * * * * * *

From the 15th of last month, through cash donations made to this consulate direct, through personal appeal, I cared for 1,200 persons. By the 1st instant these contributions increased so as to enable the committee to increase the relief list to 2,000. This has been maintained until now; but as the Fern, with 35 tons, should arrive to-morrow, the Sagua relief can be continued.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 295.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, March 14, 1898.

SIR: The inclosed letter from Mr. Valle,* of Sancti Espiritus, whom I have every reason to believe will not misrepresent the case, together with the fact that in other places I find I have underestimated the number in my jurisdiction in need of relief. It is therefore that I beg to increase the amount required, as stated in my No. 294, of the 12th instant, from 80 to 100 tons per month.

I am, etc.,

WALTER B. BARKER, Consul.

[Telegram.]

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

SAGUA LA GRANDE, March 24, 1898.

DAY, Washington:

Closer investigation disclose larger number destitute than estimates sent. Fifty tons needful now. Distress far greater than my reports show.

BARKER, Consul.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 297.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, March 21, 1898. (Received March 30.)

SIR: I have the honor to say that since forwarding my No. 294 of the 12th instant, wherein I gave the Department approximately the amount of food required for my zone per month, I find many outlying—interior—villages, of which I had no account, neglected and in great want. To this very class, located in the interior towns, I have given special attention, but it has been impossible to care for all immediately. For instance, the relief committee to whom supplies were sent in Santa Clara, seat of government of the province, inform me to-day that in a small town near there are 300 persons in pressing need.

To-day I wired Mr. Louis Klopsch, of the Christian Herald and Central Cuban Relief Committee, who is now in Havana, that 20 tons additional required till 1st proximo, and to know if he could supply this. As yet no reply has been received. A very large proportion of these poor creatures being actually ill, other medicine than quinine is required, as also medicinal wines and nourishing food for them.

I beg to inclose herewith a list of towns to which I have and am sending supplies. There are perhaps six to eight more requiring relief.

Mr. Barker to Mr. Day.

No. 299.] CONSULATE OF UNITED STATES,
Sagua la Grande, March 24, 1898.

SIR: I visited seat of government of this Province, Santa Clara, where I learned, not alone from trustworthy persons sent out by me for the purpose, but also the civil governor, that the number of persons in actual want exceeds any estimate I have sent the Department. The distress is simply heartrending. Whole families without clothing to hide nakedness, sleeping on the bare ground, without bedding of any kind, without food, save to such as we have been able to reach with provisions sent by our noble people; and the most distressing feature is that fully 50 per cent are ill, without medical attention or medicine.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT OF THE ISLAND OF CUBA,
Havana, February 16, 1898.

MR. CONSUL: It becomes my painful duty to express to you my profound sorrow for the misfortune which occurred yesterday on board the American ship Maine. I associate myself with all my heart to the grief of the nation and of the families who have lost some of their members; and upon so doing I do not only express my personal sentiments, but I speak in the name of all the inhabitants of Havana—witnesses of the catastrophe which has afflicted so many homes.

God guard you many years.

RAMON BLANCO.

THE CONSUL-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in behalf of the immediate recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic. I do not see how we can rightly intervene by arms or how we can declare war against Spain without making this recognition. If we go to war or intervene by arms, not recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic, we miss one great element in the cause which will make our quarrel just. We shall lay ourselves open to a great variety of complicated questions and conditions. The open, free path is to make the recognition before we land upon the shores of that island at all.

The Cuban Republic, sir, is the great, overshadowing, outlying fact in this whole transaction. The war waged by the Cuban Republic, its army and navy—I am speaking advisedly—has made the Cuban question. Without its endurance and success thus far there would have been nothing here for our deliberation. The existence and the recognition of that republic are so related to the question as the soul to the body to make a living man. We can not be blind to it. We can not fail to see it. It is the first fact to be noticed and it is the first fact to be recognized—the existence of a republic upon the Island of Cuba.

It may be asked, Who are the government of the Republic of Cuba? I answer that question by one statement: The Government of Cuba is composed of men at the head of affairs with a constituency behind them who have maintained successful war for thirteen years against the Spanish Monarchy. That is the Government of the Republic of Cuba, and no colonial government in the history of the world has waged war for such a period without earning and receiving recognition as a nationality, and especially recognition from the Government of the United States. I therefore prefer, greatly prefer, that we shall acknowledge and recognize the existence and authority of the Cuban Republic, so that when we have intervened by arms, if it become necessary, that shall be the government of the island, and it shall be left free in its career, unfettered in its course, as the United States were left by France at the time when she withdrew her forces at the close of our Revolutionary war.

I am especially in love, sir, with the idea of Cuban nationality, and I am attached to it for the reason of the capacity which nationality has to deal with debt, with foreign debt, with domestic debt. A sovereign nationality deals absolutely with debt. It may incur debt. It may assume a debt, part of a debt, portion of an indebtedness, or it may entirely obliterate it, and refuse to be liable for any part or portion of it. That is one of the functions of nationality. It is not a function of mere autonomy. It is not a function of a free and independent people like the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, like the Commonwealth of Indiana, the colony of New Zealand, or the Dominion of Canada. None of these have nationality, and they can not therefore deal thus with debt. Nobody can question the action of the sovereign in the disposition he makes of debt.

What, then, has been the practice—the universal practice—in disposing of debt, such as the one said to be now confronting us in this condition? The universal practice is this: Where a nation merely changes its form of government, there is no change in the status of the debt, notwithstanding that change may be effected by war, by revolution. We have, within the last one hundred years, recognized four or five different governments in France—first the old republic, then the first empire, then the kingdom, then the second republic, then the second empire, lastly the third republic. None of these changes, most of which were effected by war, affected the status of the French national debt.

So I might speak of the revolution in Brazil. That was a mere change in the form of government. The Republic of Brazil carries with it the debt of the former empire. So I might speak of the revolution in the Republic of Hawaii. That was where one form of government supplanted another utterly in the administration of government, but did not change the nationality, did not change the status of the debt; and the Republic of Hawaii is bound by the debt of the monarchy.

I might cite many other parallels—there have been many others. Such has been the universal practice. But where a part of an old-established government asserts its right to be independent, asserts and successfully asserts its right to be a national sovereignty, that part of the government so revolting has never bound itself to pay any debt of the mother country; it is not either morally or legally liable for the payment of any debt of the mother country, and can only become bound and liable for the payment of such debt by a treaty, by covenant, or by agreement.

Now, sir, we know what the status of the Republic of Cuba is with respect to the payment of the Spanish war debt incurred in an unsuccessful attempt to suppress revolution in that island. We know that that debt amounts to $300,000,000, or very near that sum.

Not long ago there were various overtures made in the newspapers, not official, I grant you. They were scouts, spies, thrown out to sound public opinion as to whether the Cuban Republic would purchase Cuba; whether it would pay $200,000,000; whether it would pay $100,000,000; whether it would pay $100,000,000 guaranteed by the United States; whether it would pay $200,000,000 guaranteed by a wealthy syndicate. We know what the reply of the Cuban Republic was to those propositions. We know that Gomez stated, after consulting the civil authorities of his government, that the Cuban Republic would not be liable and would never recognize its liability to pay one dollar of the Spanish war debt. That is the position of the Cuban Republic. It will not agree to pay, it will not make any covenant to pay one dollar of the Spanish debt. If it had done so there would be no question now about its independence and recognition.

What has hindered the declaration of belligerency? The existence of the immense Spanish war debt. The mere recognition by this Government of Cuban belligerency would have been an acknowledgment of the fact that a government de facto was in that island; and upon that government de facto would have rested the function of either ignoring or paying the Spanish war debt, and because the government de facto was known to be opposed to assuming any portion of it, belligerency was as bitterly opposed then, and is to-day, as the absolute recognition of independence.

It is from this concealed disappearing battery of the Spanish war bonds that all the rumors have arisen with respect to the disparagement of the character and claims of the Cuban Republic.

Latterly they put into circulation a report that the Cuban Republic was hopelessly insolvent; that it had sold its bonds for sixpence, for nothing; that a large amount of its bonds were in the hands of speculators—all attempting to mislead Congress with respect to the pecuniary condition of the republic, and to ask the American Congress why will you recognize a nation so hopelessly insolvent, as if insolvency were a crime, that freedom and liberty should not be preferred even where a people were insolvent. Now, we know that all this was false; we know that it was all unfounded; we know that there is not much more than $100,000 of Cuban bonds in the hands of bona fide holders. They have lacked every element of credit. They have had no market. They have had no recognition; none of belligerency, none of independence. They have had no commerce. They have had no means of pledging or of binding to secure the payment of these bonds—none in the world.

The fact is the Cuban Republic is comparatively without debt; it is a government without debt. It has not had the credit to maintain and establish or to procure that national blessing, as it is sometimes called, of a national debt. It is free of debt; and it is without liabilty except what it may have incurred in the prosecution of the war for independence; and even those liabilities are very small.

The army of Cuba, sir, serves without pay. Not an officer or soldier of the republic receives any pay. The civil government of Cuba, President Masso and all of his assistants, serve without salary. They serve for the love of the country and its cause. Where has there been a higher, nobler service? Where is there a parallel to this unpaid service in the cause of liberty except in the case of George Washington, who served also without pay, without salary, and without remuneration as the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States? It is because the Cuban Republic established upon the Island of Cuba, it is because the Cuban Republic recognized by the American people, would be free of debt, perfectly solvent, able to pay the Spanish war bonds—it is because of that, sir, that independence is deferred. It is because of that that belligerency is postponed. The very reason that it will be rich and wealthy and not in debt is the reason why through some diplomacy a covenant and agreement must be made to make it liable for the payment of the war debt.

Senators express themselves in the most patriotic terms as willing to go to war and shed the blood of the people of the United States, her gallant sailors and soldiers, for the purpose of extinguishing the divine right of kings to reign in the Island of Cuba or in any other free country on this continent. I say we ought to extinguish the divine right of the bondholders at the same time; and neither intervention nor war ought to be made except with the condition that no part of the Spanish war debt shall be entailed upon the Cuban people. The only way to make that condition possible and operative, the only way to make that covenant binding beyond all contradiction, is to recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic. That would be the end of the Spanish war debt except as to Spain.

How did the holders of these bonds procure them? They were a part of the war credit voted by the Spanish Cortes. The holders of these bonds had ample notice of their character. Every holder of these bonds made his bet against liberty and lost. I say, Let them lose the whole amount; let them look only to old Spain for any retrieval of such loss.

I ask with great regret, sir, what is the meaning in a recent state paper read to the Senate about the force of the Army and the Navy transferred by us to the Island of Cuba which shall establish a government free and independent, which shall observe its international obligations and which shall guide to a settlement?

I am not certain, sir, that my construction of this language is correct. It may be wholly wrong. If the words had been "international powers and function," if the words had been "international rights and powers," the phrase would be plain; but the words "international obligation," it seems to me, define precisely a Spanish war bond held by the citizen of a foreign country against Spain. International obligation may include that settlement which is spoken of. It may comprise under this construction the establishment of a government in Cuba which shall acknowledge in some way its liability for the payment of these bonds.

Now, I wish to make a recognition that shall make that liability impossible, that shall banish from the minds of all men everywhere the right or duty of the Cuban revolutionists to pay taxes for the payment of the bonds which were issued for their own conquest and subjugation. I do not think there is any other safe way of doing this. There is no other prudent way of effecting it. There is no other international course open to us that is so perfect in all its parts as the immediate recognition of the Cuban Republic.

Belligerency, it is said, is not even to be granted. Why? Because the Spanish war bonds would be discarded by such acknowledgment, because it would imply some power in the Cuban people to make a disposition of this debt. That is the real reason. The other reasons assigned are all unworthy and unfounded.

It is said that our recognition of belligerency or of independence would be contrary to tradition. We recognized seven republics in South America in the third year of the war, without navies on the sea, when they were confronting Spanish armies three times their number, without seaports except those in the possession of the enemy, where it was difficult to find the capital, shifted from place to place by the exigencies of the campaign. Mr. Monroe insisted that his ministers should find the capital, if it were in the camp of Bolivar, and should make the recognition of independence. This is a part of our tradition. Would it be contradicted if we to-day recognized Cuban independence?

We recognized the independence of Texas as a sovereign nationality when it had no navy and never expected to have any, when it had only 800 men under arms, when it had only 30,000 population. We recognized the independence and nationality of the Republic of Texas. In very recent times we recognized, twenty-four hours after its declaration, the independence and nationality of the Republic of Hawaii, having a population of not 100,000 and an army not to exceed 1,200 men.

Here is a power, here is a government, here is a nationality—for I will call it such—a Cuban nationality, with 400,000 of population within the States of Oriente and Camaguey, absolutely under republican control, and with 300,000 other population in the debatable ground adhering to it, who have pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor for the maintenance of the independence of the Cuban Republic.

I know it is said the Cuban Republic has no navy. That is a great mistake, sir. It has a very efficient navy. It has the same navy that Toussaint l'Ouverture had when he drove the French from Haiti—skiffs and canoes innumerable; a navy which goes by sea around the end of the trocha near the shore, which supplies its forces in the same manner with ammunition and provisions; a navy which acts as lighters to the blockade runners who occasionally make a landing in that island. It has a navy as much as any South American or West India republic that we now acknowledge had at the time of its first declaration of independence. The army and the navy of Cuba have supported the government, and they have earned recognition by deeds of valor equal to Spartan bravery and by endurance equal to Roman perseverance, and by prudence and caution which have never, in the history of the world, been excelled.

I wish this recognition, Mr. President, to be made now as a part of the resolutions reported by the committee, so as to put beyond all doubt that the Cuban Republic shall not only be free from Spanish usurpation, but it shall be free from Spanish debt and bondage. If we do not make this recognition now, I fear it never will be made. I know it is said the President can recognize at any time. So he can. Why did he not recognize yesterday? Why does he not recognize to-day? If he has the power to recognize now, when will he be prepared? When this war is fought, as I believe it will be, to a successful conclusion, it will come within the field of negotiation as to what status the Republic of Cuba shall have in that island.

That is manifestly predicted in the President's message as the time when military constraint will have to be put on both forces in order to make the pacification of the island. Who would have dared to put military constraint, at the close of the war of the Revolution, upon Washington, upon Lafayette, upon Steuben, upon De Kalb, upon those immortal adventurers who secured to this nation its life and its existence?

Where in the history of the world has there been an instance when a free de facto government in arms had been suppressed by a friend and ally for any cause, had been supplanted by a friend and ally for any other form of government?

What if France had said at the close of our Revolution, "The British have gone; they have evacuated the country; we are here; we do not like the Continental Congress; we do not like the Articles of Confederation; we do not like the system of government; we distrust your method of dealing with the loyalists; we are opposed to your legislation upon many subjects; we will stay here until we have established a government in the United States which shall secure peace and order and preserve all its international obligations"? What would have been the reply of Washington to that? What would have been the reply of Hancock, the president of the Congress, to that? They would have fought the Revolutionary war for seven years longer before they would have received such an intimation, before they would have assumed the liability of one penny of the debt of Great Britain incurred in the unsuccessful attempt to suppress the Revolution.

No, sir; the same influences which have heretofore prevented the declaration of belligerency, the same sinister influences which have heretofore prevented the recognition of Cuban independence, that same disappearing battery of the Spanish war bonds, that same last gun of the Spanish war debt will enter into our negotiations with respect to the settlement of affairs on that island; and they will insist that if a free republic is established in Cuba, it shall be established only on one condition—that the Spanish war debt be paid or secured; and they will insist that if any government be established by the United States on the island which shall not recognize the validity and legitimacy of the the Spanish-Cuban bonds, we ourselves shall be liable to pay them.

These are possibilities. They are very grave possibilities, because of the $300,000,000 of bonds, at least $200,000,000 of them, perhaps more than that, perhaps $250,000,000, are held by subjects of the most powerful countries in Europe. They are grave questions; they are grave responsibilities; they raise serious complications. How shall we be rid of them? There is only one way, pure, straight as the path of rectitude, unclouded, without question. It is to acknowledge now the independence of the Cuban Republic and let that government deal with it as it deems it proper to do.

Mr. President, even in the case of the defeat of the amendment of the minority, I am in favor of the resolutions of intervention reported by the majority of the committee. Any change in the present condition of Cuba must be for the better, if not for the best. Nothing can exceed in horror and iniquity the present tyranny of Spain on that island; nothing can exceed the patriotism, the endurance, the unselfish devotion of the Cuban Republic to the cause of liberty. The reward of the one and the punishment of the other rest in the single phrase: "The recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic."

I would not reach out my left hand to Cuba Libre, bringing her in by the back door. I would stretch out both hands to the Cuban Republic, welcoming her at the front door as the latest born sister into the family of the nations of the world; and even if our armed intervention bring at present invisible, inaudible, and inexplicable conditions—for I do not understand the silence of the committee on that subject; I do not understand the greater silence of the President's message—I shall put my trust in going with the majority. I shall have confidence that God in His providence will overrule these gigantic evils for the good of liberty and the welfare of mankind. Even through the chapter of accidents which are to succeed present action I will trust that the Cuban Republic at present in existence shall continue to live as free from Spanish debt as it will be from the ruthless and blood-stained ruin of the Spanish throne.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to offer an amendment, which I should like to have read, printed, and lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and insert:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of the island.

Second. That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist between the Kingdom of Spain and the United States of America, and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to use the whole land and naval force of the United States to carry the same into effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that I am a member of the committeewhich has reported the resolutions that are now before the Senate, I would at this solemn and fateful moment in the history of my country remain silent and content myself by my vote in vindicating the position which I think my country should occupy in asserting her cause before the civilized world. In the few moments that I shall occupy I shall not concern myself with any such—and I say it with all respect—inconceivably, in the presence of such a crisis, low and contemptible considerations as to who may or who may not hold the bonds of Spain or of the Cuban Republic.

I am not here, sir, to govern my public action in the face of the world in this grave crisis by mere suspicion as to what may or may not be the motives of others. I was not born with suspicion in my blood; but I was born, I hope, sir, with that in my blood that will make me always stand erect, until I am stricken down, for the honor of my country and the glory of her flag.

Mr. President, it is a hackneyed saying, I know, that partisan politics halt at the shore line; but, hackneyed as it is, it is pregnant with meaning. We are here to-day—and I attribute to no Senator upon this floor any feeling less patriotic than my own—we are here to-day as Americans all. Patriotism, and not partisanship, is the spring and motive, as it should be, of our action, whatever form it may take. I do not believe that anyone here will gain his own consent to maneuver for a partisan advantage at a time like this. I am here, sir, to support, not a Republican President, not to say that I range myself behind a partisan leader, but, in my humble way, to support an American President, the leader of 70,000,000 of people, inducted into his high office by their will and by the laws of his country.

Mr. DANIEL. Will my friend allow me to ask him if he considers these resolutions in line with the President's message?

Mr. GRAY. I will come to that and answer if my friend will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. President, I am here, in case we can not do what I think better, to support the resolutions which came from the committee of which I have the honor to be a member. I believe, however, sir, that the resolution that was introduced yesterday by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is wiser and a better expression of the feeling of the country. It was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations and received the support in that committee, as was said yesterday—and I am not disclosing, certainly, at first hand the secrets of that committee or its proceedings—received the support of four—I do not remember, but five, certainly of four—members of that committee, and I believe, as I said, it better represents the feeling of this country and the attitude that the good people of the United States would assume if they had a fair expression of their own will and of their own desire in that regard.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, my honorable friend is using language which is vital to this case and rather seems to imply that those who differ with him are not in so loyal and high an attitude toward the President as he is.

Mr. GRAY. I disclaim it if I have said anything which would give the Senator ground for such a statement.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator puts an interpretation upon these resolutions——

Mr. GRAY. I have not discussed the resolutions. I have not come to them yet. I am going to speak of them.

Mr. DANIEL. I thought you said you would speak to these resolutions in support of the President of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. No, sir; I did not use that language.

Mr. DANIEL. What I wish to know is whether the Senator, when he recommends these resolutions to us, considers that they embody the views of the President of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, with all respect for my very good friend the Senator from Virginia I do think that he is a little previous in asking the question.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg pardon of the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I know there is no intention on his part to unduly interrupt me, but I had not spoken to the resolutions, although I intended to discuss them in my own way as well as I could and very briefly. I will come to them in a moment.

Mr. President, I did say with some emphasis, because it came from my heart, that I was here, as I conceive my duty as an American Senator to be, to support in this grave crisis of our country's history an American President, chosen by the American people for the very purpose that he is now seeking to carry out and achieve.

Mr. President, there is no need that I should occupy the time of this Senate in making, or in attempting to make, a speech, if I were capable of it, that would merely have a tendency to excite the feelings of the American people or my colleagues here if they needed such excitement. We do not need to lash running horses. We all agree—of course I know we all agree—in the patriotic intent and purpose to support our country and stand loyally by it in this hour of trial, but I want to put, in these few brief hours before final action is taken, for myself and for others who may think that what I say is worthy of attention, the case of my country upon grounds so high, as I conceive them, that all the world must approve them.

Mr. President, why have we waited all these long years while suffering humanity has been crying out across the narrow strait that divides Cuba from the territory of the United States? Why, during all these months of patient waiting and anxious longing, have we been performing our international duty that we owe to a power with whom we are at peace? Why have we patrolled our coast and spent millions of the public money in order that international duty might be kept and performed to the letter? It is because the American people, as represented by the American Government, have a conscience. It is because no war or armed collision, with all its frightful sequences, would be tolerated by the civilization of America unless its conscience was satisfied that such collision and such war was righteous altogether. We have no dynastic wars; we have no wars of conquest or aggression; we have marked out in our diplomacy for a hundred years a new pathway, which has led the nations upward to a higher plane, and that is our glory and our pride. It is because the conscience of America is satisfied to-day that we stand here and feel that we are reflecting their will when we vote for any of the resolutions which are now before the Senate.

What has made the case that has thus affected so deeply the heart and conscience of the American people? Exceptional circumstances, circumstances that we had no hand in creating, and out of those circumstances duties have arisen that we can not evade or ignore. Time and propinquity are of the essence of the situation. Cuba is right at our door, and that colors and qualifies the duty we owe and the attitude we occupy toward her. If she were on the other side of the ocean, moored off the coast of Africa or Portugal, while our interest might be excited and our feelings stirred, our duty might be different. But there she is where God placed her. There, during all these three years, we have waited while the drama of blood has been enacted under our eyes, and we have stood as a people strong and conscientious, with a religious and holy hope that humanity at last would assert itself there without our intervention and right those wrongs; and we have waited and waited until, in the language of the President, we can endure it no longer and the situation has become intolerable.

Time then enters into it. Time has elapsed sufficient to make our duty clear and plain. God knows that I, with others in this body and outside of it, would have had this occasion pass away, would have avoided all necessity for unrolling the purple testament of bloody war and sought some peaceful solution, as I believe that the President of the United States has, conscientiously and in accordance with the best feelings and aspirations and desires of the American people, sought a peaceful solution of this difficulty. Mr. President, I applaud every effort that he has made to secure peace with honor to this peace-loving country. We are to-day stronger morally and materially for those efforts. And he would not have fairly met the high responsibility of his station had he failed to make them. The American people will not fail to do justice to their President.

But, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said, it is apparent from the President's message that the function of diplomacy is exhausted and the matter is submitted to the Congress of the United States.

Now, what are the grounds upon which we are to take the grave step which we are about to take? To recognize merely the struggling Republic of Cuba in its contest against the parent country? No. Suppose that contest had been waged in such fashion that the rules of civilized war had not been violated; we would not have been justified merely on that account in recognizing this republic as independent from the mother country—we would not have been performing our international duty if we had—but it is because in the course of that contest humanity has been outraged, the conscience of the American people has been stirred, and a state of things has been produced which no man with a human heart in his breast can look upon calmly and with quiet pulse.

Mr. President, the case has been made up. The President has recited the pitiful story in the message which he has sent us. It has been reenforced by the sober, calm, almost colorless statement of our own colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. The consular reports make that statement a moderate one and under, rather than beyond, the truth. We have those reports on our desks. I do not want to read from them; we have it all with us; the world will have it all. I do not want to take up your time to tell you that in January of this year Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee, writing to the Government, says:

> I have the honor to transmit herewith some statistics sent me about the mortality in the town of Santa Clara, the capital of Santa Clara Province, situated about 35 miles south of Sagua, which numbers some 14,000 inhabitants. It will be noticed that there were 5,439 deaths in that town in the seven years previous to 1897, which included 1,417 in one year, from an epidemic of yellow fever, while in 1897, owing to the concentration order, there were 6,981; the concentration order went into effect in February.
> In that year, 1897, the month's death rate for January was 78, but in February, the first month of reconcentration, there were 114, and there has been a gradual increase since, as you will see, until in December, 1897, the number of deaths was 1,011.

Or that Mr. Brice, in a letter dated November 17 last, said:

> Death rate in this city over 80 persons daily, and nearly all from want of food, medicines, and clothing. As I write this a dead negro woman lies in the street, within 200 yards of this consulate, starved to death; died some time this morning, and will lie there, maybe, for days. The misery and destitution in this city and other towns in the interior are beyond description.

Mr. BACON. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. GRAY. November 17, 1897. I take these reports at haphazard. There are many other things more harrowing still, but I am not here to harrow your feelings, but to state the basis of our action. That is well stated in the preamble to the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which reads as follows:

> Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the ground upon which this committee has placed the action which they invite in this body, not that the Republic of Cuba has sustained a gallant contest for these three years past—and I know that in every fiber of my being I sympathize with those gallant men—not on that account, but on account of the violated womanhood and childhood and motherhood and manhood that has been perpetrated right at our own doors. That is the morality of the situation.

I liken the action which is proposed to be taken in this country now, Mr. President, so far as its moral aspect is concerned as a member of the family of nations, to that of a man in a civilized community who is a law-abiding citizen, who has next door to him a villainous and cruel neighbor who every day chokes his wife and starves and maltreats his children, and because he is a law-abiding citizen he bears it and bears it and bears it for days and weeks, until at last he can bear it no longer, and, law or no law, he enters the residence of his neighbor, takes him by the throat, and says, "Take your hand off of that woman and let these children go;" and all his neighbors applaud. That is what we propose to do, and all our neighbors of the family of nations will applaud our action in so doing. If they do not, God help them and the civilization they represent.

Mr. President, interference in the government of another country is nowhere countenanced by specific rule or canon of international law. It can not be. You could not formulate a rule of international law to say that under certain circumstances one nation may invade the territory of another if the purpose is so and so and so and so; but international law stands mute and holds that nation blameless that in the cause of humanity interferes to bring about a cessation of outrageous cruelty, to lift up the falling cause of humanity, and to let the oppressed go free. Every case must stand upon its own merits, and when the case of a civilized Christian country commends itself to the moral judgment of its citizens, then it is sanctioned, then it is justified, in the interference it proposes.

The writers on international law have not been entirely silent upon this subject. Professor Lawrence, of England, in a recent publication in 1895, called Principles of International Law, after stating the general rule that international law does not countenance or sanction the interference or invasion of one nation in the affairs or in the territory of another, states this principle thus:

At the same time, it—

That is, international law—

At the same time, it will not condemn such interventions if they are undertaken with a single eye to the object in view and without ulterior considerations of self-interest and ambition.

Have we not, Senators, in our conduct purged our action and our intent of every possible selfish consideration? Where, Mr. President, have you ever heard, either on the floor of the Senate or the House of Representatives, in public utterance or private deliverance, one suggestion that we should interfere for the sake of aggrandizing the territory of the United States or bringing about the annexation of Cuba as a star to be added to the galaxy of the States of this Union? Never, I will warrant. I never have.

Should the cruelty—

Now, mark you—

Should the cruelty be so long continued and so revolting that the best instincts of human nature are outraged by it, and should an opportunity arise for bringing it to an end and removing its cause without adding fuel to the flame of the contest, there is nothing in the law of nations which will condemn as a wrongdoer the state which steps forward and undertakes the necessary intervention. Each case must be judged on its own merits. There is a great difference between declaring a national act to be legal, and therefore part of the order under which states have consented to live, and allowing it to be morally blameless as an exception to ordinary rules. I have no right to enter my neighbor's garden without his consent; but if I saw a child of his robbed and ill-treated in it by a tramp, I should throw ceremony to the winds and rush to the rescue without waiting to ask for permission. In the same way, a state may, in a great emergency, set aside everyday restraints, and neither in its case nor in the corresponding case of the individual will blame be incurred.

Mr. President, upon that high ground I wish to place the cause of my country, now about to take this important step which may set the world aflame. I desire that statement to go before the forum of nations to justify the course we are about to pursue. Nothing here less high, less holy, less sacred, could impel the great American people thus to stand erect and demand that this cruelty, outrage, and oppression shall cease, and cease at once upon our demand, and if not upon our demand, then by force of American arms.

We have nothing here to do with the Monroe doctrine. It plays no part in this contest. The circumstances by which we are surrounded are exceptional. The case is out of any ordinary rule—the propinquity of Cuba, the tyranny they have endured, the outrages, and the character of them, as my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says. No, Mr. President, it is because outraged nature can not longer stand what we have been compelled to endure. We can not forever keep our place and say we are not our brother's keeper. God himself will hold us to responsibility if we continue to plead thus.

Mr. President, there are some lines of a New England poet on another occasion, to express the deep feeling of a strong and righteous American welling up from an honest heart, that seem to me to apply to the situation that is forced upon our observation, where he exclaims:

Look on who will in apathy,
  And stifle ye who can
The sympathies, the hopes, the fears,
  That make man truly man.

I first drew in New England's air,
  And from her hardy breast
Sucked in the tyrant-hating milk
  That will not let me rest.

Mr. President, a word or two more as to the report of the minority of the committee in regard to the recognition of Cuba. I have already touched upon it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] who has just taken his seat, in the eloquent address which he has made—and no one listens to him more gladly and delightedly than I always do—used an illustration which it seems to me ought to control the situation. He said suppose France at the end of our Revolutionary struggle, with her armed forces on our shores, had attempted to dictate to the United States as to what form of government they should have and how they should administer that which they already had. The answer, of course, could be only in one vein.

Is that to be the attitude of the United States on the Island of Cuba when this war shall happily come to end, that we are to stand mute in the presence of this republican government, and no matter what policy is pursued, no matter what form of government they set up, that we are to retire without influence, without voice, as to the future of the people of that island? Suppose, for instance—and I am making a violent assumption, because from what I know of the people who make that republic and are its leaders I have only admiration for them—that at the end of that struggle Gomez and his followers should seek to wreak vengeance as the result of the not unnatural resentment which he and his followers have against the 200,000 Spanish subjects who still remain upon that island. Are we to have no voice? Is our protest to be of no avail, and is the analogy put by the Senator from Indiana in the case of France and the United States at the end of the Revolutionary struggle to hold? No; it can not.

No, Mr. President, we are intervening not to recognize a revolutionary government, but we are interfering in the sacred cause of humanity; and if it comes, as surely it will—the independence of the people of that island—due respect and due influence and due weight and consideration will surely be given to the gallant men who have made this struggle and have erected the framework of government of which we hear so much; but we will hold their future in our hands, and I am not afraid of any bondholding attack upon the United States on the ground that we have for a single moment controlled the destinies of that island. We do not, in the language of the books, absorb her territory. We do not as we enter into this great drama declare that we wish to absorb the territory. We declare something entirely different. And if you are to take our conduct measured and characterized by our declarations, then we are absolved and free from the conditions upon which any power on earth could claim that we were responsible for the incomes which have been mortgaged to pay Spanish bonds.

Mr. LINDSAY. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Delaware, I should like to make an inquiry. Suppose when we take possession of the Island of Cuba and make the people of Cuba independent they form a government which, in our estimation, operates unjustly toward a portion of the people of that island who adhered to the Spanish Crown, are we to refuse to recognize the government; and if so, to what means are we to resort to cause a government to be erected that comes within our approval?

Mr. GRAY. We can not guard against every human eventuality, but we can take care that a government formed under our supervision and care and tutelage shall be such a government as will be just not only to this country, but to those for whom we have concern on the score of humanity in the territory over which that government extends. I do not believe that there is any thought now or that there ever has been any thought that we are forever, after this matter shall be accomplished, to exercise a protectorate or suzerainty over that island or any government which may be set up there under our auspices.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then, if the Senator will permit, I will ask another question. If we are to retain control until a government is formed which meets with our approval, will that government be the act of the people or the act of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. We are crossing a great many bridges before we get to them, but I believe that when that happy consummation of American arms shall come we shall say to all the world, and illustrate what we say by our acts, that no selfish consideration has actuated us; that we spoke the truth when we said we intervene in the cause of humanity, and that we have aided the people of that island in setting up a republican government, and we will retire and leave them to conduct better housekeeping than was ever conducted under Spanish rule or Spanish protectorate. Now, I leave the subject.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether or not, after we intervene, the making of such a government as we approve of by the United States does not of itself constitute a protectorate?

Mr. GRAY. Oh, Mr. President, I am not here to answer metaphysical conundrums like that. I am here, sir, in the face of this——

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator pardon me? Does the Senator decline to answer my question?

Mr. GRAY.. I decline to answer it now, because it has nothing to do with my argument.

Mr. CAFFERY. I beg pardon of the Senator for interrupting him.

Mr. GRAY. I always listen to my friend with pleasure, but I am about to close.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am so opaque-minded that I do not see any metaphysics in the question.

Mr. GRAY. That may be.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to ask him a question, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations? I ask it because I desire the information. Do I understand the Senator to favor the first resolution reported by the committee?

Mr. GRAY. I favor those resolutions if I can not get what I consider better. I do not think they are the best possible outcome.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not favor it?

Mr. GRAY. I favor the resolutions in one contingency—when the others are voted down. I am going to vote, if I have the opportunity, for another set.

Mr. BACON. That is a preliminary question which I wanted to ask the Senator. Probably he may not be in a position to reply to what I am about to ask, as he does not give his unqualified consent to the first resolution. I ask it in good faith, in order that I may get the opinion of the Senator, and through him the opinions of his colleagues upon the committee. I ask the Senator to state to the Senate what he means by the term in the resolution, the independence of the people of Cuba?

Mr. GRAY. I will reply to the Senator. The first resolution reads thus:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

I agree that the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free and independent. I wish to God that I could say that they are. I do not believe it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, as I understand it, does not agree to that word "are?"

Mr. GRAY. I do not.

Mr. BACON. Then the inquiry which I wish to make must be addressed to some other Senator. I want to know, and I ask the other members of the committee to bear it in mind when they come to address the Senate, what is the meaning of that resolution when it says that the people are independent.

Mr. MORGAN. May I interrupt for a minute?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the Senator from Georgia what is the meaning of the very identical language in the Declaration of Independence of the United States in 1776, when the world knows that historically we were not then independent?

Mr. BACON. I think the answer is a very plain one. We are speaking of another people. We are speaking of the conditions there existing. We say that we recognize that they are independent.

Mr. MORGAN. Historically——

Mr. BACON. One moment, if you please. I want to know what you mean when you say it. I am not saying it.

Mr. GRAY (to Mr. BACON). Ask him in your own time, if you please.

Mr. BACON. Let me finish the answer. I am not responsible for the interjection of the Senator from Alabama. It was he who asked the question. We, in the case of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, were speaking of ourselves, which is a vast difference.

Mr. GRAY. That is the true distinction. I agree with the Senator from Georgia entirely. In 1776 we declared before the world that we were free and independent.

Mr. MORGAN. Was that the truth?

Mr. GRAY. We are now called upon to state as a fact in regard to another people that which is notoriously not true.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GRAY. I was about to close.

Mr. MORGAN. When we made the declaration in 1776 that the people of the United States are and of right ought to be free and independent, we certainly were not speaking of history. We were simply uttering a grand political decree which was the basis of our political union at that time, and that was the meaning of that decree at that time, and it is the meaning, as I understand it, of this resolution.

Mr. GRAY. The President of the United States in his late message, besides reciting the pitiful tale of sufferings and outrage in the Island of Cuba, has told us, and we are bound to take his official declaration as the basis of our action, and the rightful and competent basis of our action, that—

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

And so say the American people, unless I mishear their voice entirely. This war must stop in the interests spoken of by the President, and for that we intervene, and for that cause we will rally the manhood of America, which will go to the seacoast with an erect and defiant front, ready to die for the honor of their country and in the cause of outraged humanity which we attempt to succor. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. FAIRBANKS obtained the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from Delaware did not answer the question.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has been recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no intention or desire to speak upon the topics involved in this very momentous discussion, and I shall not do so, but I think the time has now come for me to make an appeal to the Senate, in the interest of the exigency of this cause and of those who are dying in the Island of Cuba while we are speaking, to fix a time for the close of a debate which with the exception of some features is a repetition of discussions we have heard here for the past three years. I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and that a vote be taken upon the joint resolutions of the House and the Senate at the hour of 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Minnesota says he wants an early time fixed for a vote. Let us not debate it. Why not vote now?

Mr. DAVIS. I should be delighted if that could be done.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that we vote now.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. ALLEN. I am as well prepared to vote now as I ever will be.

Mr. DAVIS. I accept that suggestion, and ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection made to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WHITE. I wish to state that there are some Senators here who would like the privilege of saying a few words. I am one of those Senators, and I therefore object.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the request just made.

Mr. ALLEN. I object to that. Let us proceed with a session to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that perhaps there might be a limit to the length of speeches.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me we might facilitate coming to a vote in that way.

Mr. DAVIS. I will ask that debate be limited to fifteen minutes to each speaker.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CAFFERY. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the request in its original form.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota to ask that the last two or three hours be consumed in limited speeches, and that there be no limit prior to that time. Perhaps that proposition will be acceptable.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia to object to my entire request?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the final vote upon the Senate joint resolution and the House joint resolution and all amendments be taken at 9 o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. MORGAN. To-night.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to embody in his request that four hours of the time shall be allowed for debate upon the suggested amendments and propositions, limited to fifteen minutes to each speaker.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. Let that suggestion be incorporated in my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the vote be taken on the House joint resolution and the Senate joint resolution and the amendments to-morrow night at 9 o'clock, and that the last four hours of the debate be under the fifteen-minute rule?

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no use saying anything, objection having been made. I am perfectly willing to give a reasonable time. I want to speak for ten minutes some time or other during the debate.

Mr. DANIEL. May I be allowed to say a word in explanation? I dislike to object to any request of my honorable friend the Senator from Minnesota, but I know there are ten or eleven gentlemen here who wish to express their opinions on a question that involves peace or war. I wish to have an opportunity to express my own views as one of the minority to oppose the very elaborate and able report which has been made by the accomplished chairman of the committee; and so desiring myself, I do not wish to be put in the attitude of excluding any other Senator from the exercise of the same rightful and solemn privilege on this occasion.

Mr. DAVIS. I now ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken upon the Senate joint resolution, the House joint resolution, and all pending resolutions before the Senate adjourns to-morrow.

Mr. CAFFERY. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether if consent is not given to fix a time for voting, it is his intention to ask the Senate to remain in continuous session?

Mr. DAVIS. Undoubtedly it is.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to say that I have no disposition to prolong this debate. I consider it a question of the greatest moment to the people of the United States. The opponents of the Senate joint resolution, even the minority of the committee, have not had an opportunity to be heard. It is but a small matter to crave a few moments' deliberation in the discussion of this momentous question of peace or war. The Senator from Minnesota says that while we are deliberating the reconcentrados are starving.

Mr. MORGAN. A thousand a day.

Mr. CAFFERY. When the United States fulminates its fiat of war I should like to know of that Senator if it will save the life of the reconcentrados? I should like to know whether that will not shut out the hand of mercy that is now feeding them and create a condition of nonintercourse between the United States and the Island of Cuba? I can see no interest to be subserved, no legitimate end to be gained, by any hasty action in a matter that will involve this great Republic in war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that there is no request for unanimous consent before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to answer his question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator from Louisiana to ask whether or not there would be any relief to the reconcentrados if there was war.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes; and the Senator may answer the question, if he please.

Mr. FRYE. I say if there was war the pathways to the island would be opened by our ships of war, and the ships of peace would enter at once into those pathways loaded with food for the starving people of Cuba. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but briefly in the consideration of the great question that is pending before us. I would, indeed, be quite content to leave it where it has been left by the splendid addresses of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I am slow to add any word at this moment lest it be discordant with the patriotic and splendid sentiments uttered by those distinguished Senators—sentiments clothed in classic diction and fervid with exalted patriotism.

Mr. President, I have come to the Senate as I would seek a sanctuary in the contemplation of this great issue. I, sir, have not been for either peace at any price or war at any cost. I have been steadfastly for peace if it could be maintained honorably, and for war if the national dignity and honor required it.

The problem which is presented to us is one of the greatest gravity, one which invokes our most deliberate, patriotic judgment. Many times during the last three-quarters of a century our relations with Spain have been the subject of deep concern and profound embarrassment. The proximity of the Island of Cuba to our shores, our intimate commercial relations with it, are such that we are instantly and sensibly affected in a greater or less degree by its misgovernment.

The island stands sentinel over the Gulf of Mexico, the entrance to the Mississippi River, and lies in the direct course of our commerce via the Isthmus of Panama. We have been and shall always continue to be concerned in the character of the government which maintains in it. No other nation can have an interest in the maintenance of peace and in the existence of stable and just government in it equal to ours. Turbulence and revolution there involve our peace, embarrass our commerce, and entail upon us heavy expense in the observance and enforcement of our neutrality laws.

During the last thirty years insurrections have occurred in the island which the Spanish Government has been impotent to suppress, and devastating warfare has existed for many years. Each recurring insurrection apparently has been more determined and successful than the preceding one, and the Spanish authority has continued to diminish until it seems that the Crown is incapable of successfully reestablishing it in the island.

The war that has been waged has been in disregard of the universally recognized principles of modern warfare. The torch has laid waste the homes and property of innocent people not engaged in the struggle, and barbarities have been practiced which disgraced savagery. A fruitful island, susceptible of high development and the support of a prosperous nation, has been reduced in many places to a dreary waste; commerce has been destroyed, and the people driven from their homes to starvation and death. The world has witnessed a warfare without a counterpart in its brutalities and its destructiveness; and the moral sense of the civilized nations has been shocked and aroused as never before.

Our Government has neither coveted the island nor sought by force to control its administration. It has been our settled policy from an early period to permit no foreign interference with the Spanish authority over it. Our imperative demand has been that Cuba should fall under the sovereignty of no power other than Spain. We have repeatedly declared that we would not, without interference, see it pass to any other European power. This was clearly the policy embraced in the Monroe doctrine; and it was pointedly urged by Mr. Clay in 1825, in his note to Mr. Brown, when he said:

> You will now add that we could not consent to the occupation of these islands (Cuba and Puerto Rico) by any other European power than Spanish under any contingency whatever.

This doctrine has never been modified; it has been repeatedly reiterated and reaffirmed. But for our opposition, England would undoubtedly have acquired the island when she desired to do so in 1823 and thereafter have established a government which would have relieved us from the disquiet that has prevailed, and the world would not have witnessed the horrors of Spanish rule at our very doors. Indeed, but for our attitude, other powers might have succeeded to the Spanish control and have established stable government in the Island of Cuba.

In view of our relations to the island and of our policy of opposition to foreign interference with Spanish control, we are morally bound to put an end to the wrongs, the outrages, the evils which flow from Spanish misrule.

We have repeatedly tendered to the Spanish cabinet our friendly offices to end the wars in Cuba and to restore peace. Our offers uniformly have been rejected. Many of the concessions we have demanded, however, have been granted to the insurgents. During the ten-years war slavery was abolished at our demand; autonomous government was proposed, in name, however, rather than in reality. The autonomy offered was in fact a sham, a delusion, for the grasp of Spain was in no essential degree relaxed.

This Government has at all times been scrupulously observant of her duties toward Spain, yet Spain has been either unwilling or unable to properly protect the rights of our citizens or to make adequate reparation for the wrongs committed against them. They have been imprisoned without cause and tardily released without just reparation for the indignities and wrongs committed. The story is an old one, is already familiar as a thrice-told tale. History is but repeating itself.

When the present Administration succeeded to power, war existed in Cuba. An insurrection had broken out some time previously, which the Spanish authority was unable to subdue. Many American citizens were imprisoned and our commerce with the island was seriously embarrassed. Our authorities were vigilant in the apprehension and suppression of filibustering expeditions which were being organized on our shores.

Weyler was Captain-General of the island, and in the name of war had entered upon a system of extermination, had violated every recognized code of civilized warfare, and was fast bringing the island and its people to destruction.

Although confronted with questions of grave and serious moment at home, the Administration speedily addressed itself to the Cuban problem which has vexed our diplomacy and disturbed our tranquillity for so many years.

For many months the Chief Executive, upon whom rests, under the Constitution, the conduct of our foreign affairs, has been attempting to solve the Cuban problem peacefully and honorably. He has proceeded to its consideration with a broad and sympathetic statesmanship, and with a determination to enforce all the just demands we could make upon the Spanish authority, and with a purpose of defending, in the fullest degree, the national honor. The task imposed has been a grave and difficult one, and he has discharged it in a manner to challenge the admiration of his contemporaries and, in my opinion, to win the approval of dispassionate history.

His policy was an open one known to the world; it was peace with honor above and beyond all else, and war with honor only as the last dread emergency. If war was to come, it must come at such time as we would be able to meet it and in such manner as the whole world would approve. He truly comprehended the resources and patriotism of our people, and well knew that but one result would follow an appeal to the sword. He also knew that nothing so became the mighty power of a great people as its sparing use.

Much has been accomplished by the Executive. Spanish prisons which contained many American citizens have been opened, and no American is in prison on Spanish soil; the rule of Weyler was closed by his withdrawal at the demand of this Government. His orders whereby noncombatants were driven from their fields and homes into cities and villages to starve and die have been rescinded. But the relief has come too late. Upward of 200,000 inoffensive citizens who never struck a blow at Spanish authority have perished—a harvest of death which only Spain could reap.

Thousands of others have been brought to the verge of destruction and are incapable of either returning to their desolated homes or existing until their crops can be grown if they were able to return. Through the appeals of the Executive, the American people have contributed liberally of their abundance, and ships have been loaded with food for the reconcentrados, and thousands have been saved by this merciful interposition who otherwise would have been lost.

Mr. President, upon the hands of the Spanish people is the blood not only of our own brave sailors but of over 200,000 of Spain's subjects; not of our race, it is true, but of fellow-beings created in the image of our Maker. This stain can not be washed away; it "will rather the multitudinous seas incarnadine." Where in all history are there crimes so atrocious? The murders and atrocities in Cuba have been committed as near to our shores as Philadelphia is to New York. The continuance of the starvation of noncombatants as an adjunct of war within the shadow of our homes must result in our own debasement and demoralization. Spanish cruelty has no synonym in the human tongue.

But a few weeks ago the Maine, one of our war vessels, was sent to the harbor of Havana upon a mission of peace, for the protection of American interests, and not for war. Her going was but the resumption of old-time friendly relations. While the noble ship rested at peace in the harbor of Havana, while she was enjoying Spanish hospitality, she was destroyed, and most of her brave crew perished with her. When the blow came she was Spain's guest, which "was strong against the deed." The explosion aroused our countrymen and shook the earth. It was the master tragedy of the age.

The report of our naval board charged with the duty of ascertaining the cause of the explosion found that it was primarily due to an external agency, but did not attempt to fix the responsibility upon any person or persons. The report was promptly transmitted to the Spanish Government, which has made answer of disavowal. This is not enough. Our country has been touched as by no other sorrow. Our countrymen, whose judgments are always just, have seriously and patiently sought the awful truth, desiring to acquit, not convict; they have weighed all the evidence, and no doubt remains in their minds that the massacre of our sailors, wearing the Federal uniform, was the foul work of Spanish treachery.

The evidence is ample to convict Spain. No unprejudiced jury in all Christendom would fail to render a verdict of guilty if Spain were an individual resting under indictment in a court of criminal jurisdiction. Her conduct, both before and after the fact, leaves no possible shadow of doubt. Whether the electric current was sent upon its mission of death by Spanish decree or by a Spanish functionary in Havana, we will not stop to inquire.

It is not for us to do so. The burden rests upon Spain. It was by the direct order of her military authorities that the Maine was anchored above a powerful, deadly, submarine mine. Was this accidental? Splendid sport, indeed! How chivalric! What a token of friendship and esteem! What a graceful courtesy! But it is said by Spain that we have not shown that she released the fatal spark. Be it so. It is not necessary. The primary cause was her act; we will not look beyond it. The original offense was hers. Nor are we obliged to stop to inquire whether the Spanish officers were negligent or exceeded their authority. If such a duty rests upon anyone, it does not rest upon us.

The finger of suspicion pointed strongly to Spain from the beginning, and events have strengthened suspicion into a conviction. Her perfunctory disavowal and sympathy were but cruel mockery. What think you would have been Great Britain's reply were the tragedy transferred to her waters? The cable would have been too slow to bear abundant testimony of her profound sympathy and complete disavowal and her purpose to hunt to the death the fiendish perpetrators. Or what think you our sister Republic, France, or the German Empire, Russia, Italy, or Austria, or any other of the civilized governments with which we are at amity would have said or done?

They would each have avouched their sincere sympathy and made disavowal of any privity with the act and expressed their determination to rest only when the authors of it were brought to justice, and we would have believed them and the world would have believed them. But it was left to Spain, which has not fairly emerged from the night of the Middle Ages; to Spain, which has led the world in the invention of instruments of torture; to Spain, which to-day feeds its youth upon lessons of blood and suffering, to make reply and pursue a course which is inconsistent with a sense of absolute innocence. Guilt would fence; innocence would frankly disavow and lead in the search for those who did the deed. Innocence would show the blow was struck at both and would rest only when the authors of it were brought to justice.

Those who know best the Spanish character and the present frenzy of the Spanish mind are most convinced of Spanish guilt. To them no doubt remains.

Sir, the ghosts of the Maine will not down; they beckon us on. Would that they could tell the secrets of their "prison-house." Then we would know how, sleeping, the Spanish "serpent stung" them.

For this grave act Spain must make due amends.

But if it be granted that the guilt of Spain for this crime can not be fixed by the fair analysis of fact and law, yet she will not be held blameless from a moral standpoint. If her rule is so lax, her impotence so great, that she can not give protection to the lives and property of her friendly neighbors, she is no longer fit to rule; her sovereignty becomes a menace and friendly powers are insecure.

Our own tranquillity, our own sense of security, our regard for our present and future comfort and for the lives of her hapless and helpless subjects, demand that we should interpose the mighty power of this Government to stop the carnival of crime and suffering and restore peace in the Island of Cuba until some suitable government may be formed which shall be a guaranty to us and to the other nations of the earth that it will at all times in the future be ready and willing and able to discharge its domestic and international obligations.

It is instinctive with us to desire to see people who are oppressed freed from the oppressor and secured in the God-given, inalienable privileges of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We desire and hope to see the independence of Cuba secured. Spain has, by every just consideration, by every standard of international duty, forever forfeited any right to further dominion over the Cuban people; and we hope to see established on the island a free and just government, endowed with functions for protecting the lives and property of the present and future generations who may dwell upon it.

But, Mr. President, I am not prepared at present to favor the recognition of the independence of the present so-called Republic of Cuba. We know but little about it. It is too nebulous, too mythical, to be invited into the family of nations by our potential act. The present so-called government, at most, is a military oligarchy with no habitat, with no well-defined governmental organism exercising the functions of a republic; and if we were to recognize its independence under the present pressure without adequate knowledge or information, it might lead to the establishment of a power upon the island which would prove vexatious and hurtful to us, and our second estate might be as bad or worse than our first, or at least we might continue to be seriously menaced and disturbed by it.

There are, doubtless, among the citizens of the island those capable of forming and establishing a government which will be stable and secure and which will be a guaranty that the Cuban question is settled for all time to come. It seems to me, therefore, that the first imperative duty resting upon us is to establish tranquillity in the island, relieve the suffering and distressed, and then enable the citizens of the island to deliberate and form a government upon such lines as their highest and best interests may require.

It may be that the present pretended republic is expressive of the highest and best thought of the island, and that its recognition will be found to be in the best interest of all concerned. If this be so, time will demonstrate it. We should not forget that the ultimate decision is in our hands; that justice will not miscarry; delay will not defeat her righteous demands.

The air is too full of rumors as to the character of the present so-called Cuban Republic and as to the bonds that have been floated in its name in this country and said to be in the hands of speculators, to justify us in any hasty act of recognition.

We have had introduced here by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the weighty testimony of Clara Barton, a veritable angel of mercy, entirely disinterested, with no motive on God's earth except in the interest of humanity, and her testimony is against the recognition of the independence of the present so-called Cuban Republic. Who knows better than she? Do the distinguished Senators who advocate immediate recognition? For my part, I will accept the intelligent, disinterested testimony of Clara Barton.

Mr. President, we have been educated to the doctrine in this country that the majority shall rule. If it shall be demonstrated that the present so-called republic is fairly representative of the majority of the citizens of Cuba, I would gladly and quickly vote to recognize its authority. If it represents a majority, and we compel peace, it should have no difficulty in convincing us of the fact, and that it is entitled to rule, and to recognition.

Sir, no one will distrust our motives in taking this step. We do not intervene for revenge, for the acquisition of territory, for the extension of our authority and power. Our past history is ample proof of this. Spain has long overtaxed the generous forbearance of our people. We have suffered wrongs which would have justified a nation actuated by less exalted motives than we to have struck in revenge. Ample opportunity has heretofore occurred for the seizure of the island by force if we had been eager to extend our dominion. Mr. President, the world will acquit us of any base desire. The misgovernment of Cuba has become so flagrant, the barbarism, the wrongs, the outrages there have so offended the civilized world that we must intervene for and in the name of humanity. No higher motive can actuate any government.

Mr. President, I am aware, as was well said by the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] this afternoon, that intervention in the domestic affairs of another power is a matter of delicacy, and should be attempted only where the necessity is clear and where it is demanded by grave exigency. Such necessity exists here, surely, indisputably.

There are those who insist that before intervening we should recognize the independence of the republic which is said to have been organized and maintained in the island. It is urged, among other things, that recognition should occur in order that we may not become liable to the holders of certain Spanish bonds said to have been issued under a pledge of the revenues of Cuba for the payment of the accruing interest thereon. It is argued that intervention without recognition would impose upon us a liability which may be avoided by recognition. I must wholly dissent from the soundness of this proposition. There is not one precedent, so far as I am aware, which supports the contention.

Let us briefly see what the opposing position is. If I understand correctly, it is: That we shall first recognize the independence of the present Cuban Republic and then intervene with force to sustain it; while the opposite contention is that we shall intervene with force and then acknowledge the independence of the present republic, if, when in possession of adequate information, its recognition is proper; and if it is not a proper government to recognize, then that we shall recognize some republic which the patriots of Cuba may deliberately form. Such is the divergency of our views, though we are seeking to attain the same end.

Is there subtlety enough here to measure the difference in our obligations—our international liabilities under these two methods? Mr. President, I am free to confess that I am unable to see why our ultimate responsibility would not be the same in the one case as in the other. The final end is the same, though the processes are slightly different. It seems to me that the substance of our act must control, and not the mere form. Haste, sir, in this vital matter is not of the essence of the situation; correct conclusions, sound and stable results should be our sole and only aim.

But, Mr. President, no liability will rest upon us whichever method we pursue. Spain has, by her course, which it is unnecessary to review in this connection, forfeited her right to further dominion over Cuba or its revenues. If the revenues were ever pledged to the satisfaction of a series of Spanish bonds, such pledge was necessarily subject to the forfeiture of the island for the violation of those humane principles and precepts which are observed by the civilized nations of the earth.

Sir, the rights of humanity are superior to the rights of bondholders. We violate neither the law of nations nor incur the burdens which rest upon Spain by our act of recognition either before or after intervention. If our act is warranted by the considerations of humanity, no bondholder can be heard to complain.

When the bonds were taken under a specific pledge, they were taken upon the implied understanding that the pledgeor would observe its international obligations according to the standard of civilized nations. The bondholder was presumed to know that a violation of those obligations would work a forfeiture of the estate and the dispossession of the soverignty of the obligor. The bonds, sir, were taken subject to a condition, and that condition was the proper observance and practice of the rules of humanity, the faithful discharge of international duties. The condition, sir, has been broken.

We are at the beginning of a new epoch in our history. No graver emergency ever confronted us than the one which faces us at this hour. Peace is about to be abdicated for a policy which may lead to war. War, if it comes, will have been forced upon us by the misgovernment, the insolence, the cruelty of Spain. Spain has too long presumed upon our good nature. She has too long offended against the sense of justice of our people. Her desultory, guerrilla-like, barbarous warfare upon her subjects in Cuba, upon American citizens and American commerce, has been in effect a war upon us.

The concessions she has made toward a modification of her iron and harsh rule have been made but to be broken. Her diplomacy has been characterized by subtlety, insincerity, and insult, until our countrymen have lost faith in her professions, confidence in her stability and fitness to rule. All sense of security and safety to our citizens and their commercial interests in Cuba is forever destroyed so long as Spanish sovereignty is maintained there. The highest dictates of national interest and humanity require that the war which is waged in Cuba should be stopped by force of arms, all other means of a pacific nature failing.

We need make no apology for the deliberation and delay in making this last appeal, for no self-respecting nation could afford to do less than exhaust to the fullest degree the resources of diplomacy before a resort to arms. If some delay has occurred while the powers concerned, have attempted to effect a peaceful and honorable conclusion, and war comes, we can have the consolation of the reflection that sorrow has been delayed in countless households throughout the land. Thousands of patriotic boys above and before whom stands the bow of promise have been ready to lay down their lives if diplomacy failed. If there has been seeming delay in calling them to arms their soon to be desolated homes will not complain.

We strike not in anger, not for mere revenge, not for the extension of our sovereignty, but in defense of our rights and in discharge of our duty divinely imposed.

Mr. President, I had profoundly hoped until recently that war could be averted. We have patiently witnessed the effort of the Chief Executive to attain an honorable and peaceful solution of the grave problem.

The conservative, patriotic people of the country have been profoundly impressed by his statesmanship, his tenacity of purpose, and the ability and force with which he has pressed the consideration of our just demands and rights upon the attention of the Spanish Government. We have had full faith and confidence in his courage and patriotic purpose and desired that he should exhaust every honorable means to avert war before it should be invited or declared.

We have desired, moreover, that he should be given opportunity to make that preparation which is necessary to meet so grave an emergency. With the foresight of true statesmanship—and I would that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] were in his seat, that he might hear what I say—he has negotiated for peace with one hand while preparing by day and by night for war with the other. When he took the oath of his high office, our country was not prepared to engage in war. Conscious of our isolation, and disarmed by long years of peace, we were illy fitted to engage in war with any power. Our seaport cities were inadequately protected.

Our marine force, while of high quality, was entirely insufficient in quantity. While this fact was generally recognized by those who had given intelligent consideration to the subject, it was unknown to many of our countrymen, who were insistent upon immediate measures which would instantly precipitate war. They were doubtless unadvised as to whether we had ample coast defenses to resist foreign attack, as to whether we had an ample fleet, or as to whether we had ammunition sufficient for one battle.

Mr. President, I confess I have come to the conclusion to which I have arrived after much deliberation—reluctantly and with profound regret. I have hoped and prayed that this great emergency might be honorably averted or avoided. My hesitancy did not grow out of any doubt as to the patriotism or the power of my country. It was due to no possible doubt as to the result of the issue, but to the fact that I have felt that even Spain, cruel and merciless as she has been, would not be wholly dead to our righteous and firm appeals.

Nearly one year ago I expressed myself in this Chamber in favor of extending our friendly offices to Spain in aid of a settlement of the war in Cuba, indulging the hope that pacific efforts would accomplish the desired end and also expressing the conviction that if all else failed, this Government should reach out its strong arm and command peace. Sir, all reasonable, peaceable means have been employed by the Chief Executive, earnestly, intelligently, and patriotically.

All efforts at amicable solution have failed, and all that remains is to invoke the mighty power of this Government in behalf of enduring peace and imperiled humanity. We shall now have the satisfaction of knowing that, come what may in the lottery of war, we have left undone nothing which could be done consistently with honor to secure a pacific settlement. The Spanish flag must be withdrawn and cease forever to contaminate the air of this hemisphere. To the high and holy cause of humanity and the vindication of our national honor we dedicate the lives and fortune of the Republic.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee having charge of this measure whether it is desired that we shall remain in session longer to-night?

Mr. DAVIS. Has the Senator from Illinois taken the floor?

Mr. CULLOM. I have taken the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator if it is his convenience——

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me to interrupt him, and the Senator from Minnesota will indulge me just a moment, I should like to register my protest against our adjourning here to-night or taking any adjournment or recess until we vote on this question. I will not detain the Senator from Illinois for more than a moment. If the Senator from Minnesota is correct in his statement made a moment ago, several deaths are taking place on the Island of Cuba while we are engaging in a little flamboyant oratory here in defense of the President of the United States, as though he were on trial for high crimes and misdemeanors. We are all for the President. We are all American citizens. We disagree with him as to the wording of these resolutions.

Now, what is there about this question to provoke lengthy discussion? It has been discussed for the last three years, ever since the war broke out. What is there about it either in a constitutional sense or as respects its policy which should require the delivering of grave orations on the subject of our relations with Spain and Cuba? What reason is there why we can not to-night continue this session until every gentleman shall have had an opportunity to express himself, if he desires, and then come to a vote on the question and determine what we shall do? Who is to be responsible for this adjournment? What occasion is there for an adjournment? Is the Republican party willing to take the responsibility for a useless adjournment under these circumstances?

Mr. President, this may provoke mirth upon the part of some, but we have reached that peculiar period in this session of Congress where the eyes of the entire world are turned upon us. It is more than an ordinary session of Congress. Are we to adjourn here to-night simply as a matter of convenience to give an opportunity to patch up broken lines upon this question? Why can we not in good faith go on and before we finally adjourn come to a vote on the question?

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] says there is no difference between recognizing the existence of the present Republic of Cuba and intervening. If his position be true, why cavil about this question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will state that he quite misapprehends what I said. I did not say there was no difference between intervention and the recognition of independence. I said there was no difference in the question of liability whether we recognize independence before intervening or after intervening.

Mr. ALLEN. From that statement I must dissent as to the question of liability.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the suggestion of the Chair, I yield the floor to the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays a joint resolution from the House of Representatives before the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. I was about to make that motion myself. Meanwhile, let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Government of Spain for three years past has been waging war on the Island of Cuba against a revolution by the inhabitants thereof, without making any substantial progress towards the suppression of said revolution, and has conducted the warfare in a manner contrary to the laws of nations, by methods inhuman and uncivilized, causing the death by starvation of more than 200,000 innocent noncombatants, the victims being for the most part helpless women and children, inflicting intolerable injury to the commercial interests of the United States, involving the destruction of the lives and property of many of our citizens, entailing the expenditure of millions of money in patrolling our coasts and policing the high seas in order to maintain our neutrality; and

Whereas this long series of losses, injuries, and burdens for which Spain is responsible has culminated in the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in the harbor of Havana and in the death of 260 of our seamen:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba, to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba. And the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the joint resolution lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a formal laying of the joint resolution upon the table, to be taken up for consideration?

Mr. DAVIS. In connection with the subject.

Mr. ALLEN. My suggestion was that it should permanently lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table, to be taken up on motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Senators say to me in a subconversational tone that we can not do this; but I am not prepared to yield to any conclusion of that kind.

Mr. MORGAN. I will raise my tone, as I made the remark——

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; I hope the Senator will.

Mr. MORGAN. To high contralto, if necessary, and say that no motion to lay upon the table can so dispose of a measure that it can not be taken from the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is correct.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that to be correct.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course I will go on with what I have to say if it is the desire of the Senate to remain in session longer, but I should prefer not to proceed to-night.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it not be agreeable to the Senator from Maryland to modify his motion so as to move to adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. WELLINGTON. That is agreeable to me—until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BERRY. Out of order, by unanimous consent, I should like to ask——

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the question debatable?

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] what is his desire in the matter?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. TELLER. It is a debatable question whether we vote to adjourn until 11 o'clock——

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the motion be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator wants to cut off debate——

Mr. CULLOM. That motion was withdrawn, I understood.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Minnesota having charge of the joint resolution will so adjust and arrange with other Senators that we may know whether we are to continue in session now until this matter is disposed of or are to remain here for some time longer and then adjourn. I should very much prefer myself, unless we are to dispose of the measure before adjournment, that we take an adjournment at some suitable hour to an early hour to-morrow, and I would even suggest an earlier hour than 11 o'clock, in order that if a final vote is not to be taken to-night we may have some understanding, if we can, when it is to be taken and then adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he submit to an amendment to his motion to make the hour of meeting to-morrow 10 o'clock.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I have no objection to that hour. I merely want an adjournment now. I see no good to be accomplished by a session to-night, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to assume any responsibility in the matter of adjournment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the motion appears to be debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CHANDLER. Senators have been debating it. Some seventeen or eighteen——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If any Senator objects, the roll will immediately be called upon the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the Senate now adjourn to 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator modified his motion. It was not so stated from the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so stated the motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it a simple motion to adjourn?

Mr. BERRY. No; a motion to adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to raise the parliamentary question that a motion to adjourn to a specific time is debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer the Senator from Nebraska to the twenty-second rule.

Mr. ALLEN. It is debatable under the rules of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rules of this body it is not debatable.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the rule read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will read the rule:

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn.
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain.
To take a recess.
To proceed to the consideration of executive business.
To lay on the table.
To postpone indefinitely.
To postpone to a day certain.
To commit.
To amend.
Which several motions shall have precedence as they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I will withhold my vote until I hear from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], in order to learn what he desires.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. I feel at liberty to vote, notwithstanding his absence. I vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded; and the Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has not voted. I am paired with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. He would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] who is not present, and that we transfer our pairs. We vote on opposite sides.

Mr. PASCO. That is satisfactory to me, and I will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Gray,	Spooner,
Allison,	Daniel,	Hanna,	Tillman,
Bacon,	Davis,	Hawley,	Warren,
Berry,	Elkins,	Hoar,	Wellington,
Caffery,	Fairbanks,	McBride,	Wetmore,
Chilton,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	White.
Clark,	Gear,	Perkins,
Clay,	Gorman,	Platt, Conn.

NAYS—32.

Allen,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Bate,	Hansbrough,	Mantle,	Roach,
Cannon,	Harris,	Martin,	Shoup,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Mason,	Smith,
Chandler,	Kenney,	Money,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Lodge,	Penrose,	Turley,
Foraker,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Turner.

NOT VOTING—27.

Baker,	Kyle,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Burrows,	McMillan,	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Butler,	Mallory,	Platt, N. Y.	Vest.
Frye,	Mills,	Pritchard,	Walthall,
Hale,	Mitchell,	Proctor,	Wilson,
Jones, Ark.	Morrill,	Rawlins,	Wolcott.
Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Sewell,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I supposed in view of what transpired last evening that perhaps the Senate would extend the same courtesy to me. But it is immaterial. I shall proceed to say what I have to say in perfect good nature, without any feeling of disappointment whatever. I confess that I feel a good deal of hesitancy in addressing the Senate at all upon this occasion. If the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that we should vote at once were acceded to, I would be delighted, and would be ready to cast my vote upon this question.

Mr. CULLOM thereupon proceeded to address the Senate. After having spoken for two minutes,

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations present. I hope that we can have unanimous consent that we may adjourn until to-morrow at 10 o'clock. It is manifest, I think, that there will not be a quorum here to-night to go on in such a way as to reach a conclusion.

Mr. MASON. I can not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. There will not be a quorum here to-night, I am afraid, to go on to the final conclusion of this measure, and if we are to occupy to-morrow, I should be very glad if we could have some adjustment or arrangement by which——

Mr. CHANDLER. Would the Senator be willing to have an agreement that we will vote on this question to-morrow before we adjourn?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will harmonize——

Mr. ALLISON. Why does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. CHANDLER. That will harmonize all difficulties.

Mr. ALLISON. There are no difficulties that I know of.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am not willing to agree to vote at any time.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator put that question to me as though I was obstructing the measure. I am willing to go on to-night.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I may be allowed to make a statement, the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, asked unanimous consent that we might agree to vote to-morrow before adjourning and said he should insist upon a continuous session if that agreement was not reached. That agreement was not reached. Now, the Senator from Iowa very properly asks unanimous consent that we agree to adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow; and through the Chair I prefer the request made by the Senator from Minnesota that we agree to vote on this subject to-morrow before we adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was just going to say that I hope the motion of the Senator from Iowa will receive unanimous consent. A night session would be very unpleasant, and it is manifest that we can not pass this measure to-night. If we could pass it to-night, I should be perfectly willing to stay. I do not believe we can, and I for one am perfectly willing now that by unanimous consent we shall agree to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning, and so far as I am concerned I will stay here until the debate is closed, if it is till Sunday morning.

Mr. DAVIS. Is any motion pending?

Mr. FORAKER. There has been a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the matter may be concluded before adjournment to-morrow. I concur so far as I am concerned, but I also desire to couple with it a proposition that at least two hours, or I will say three hours, shall be devoted to ten minutes' debate upon the various amendments that have been offered before the vote is taken.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt that when the time comes we can readily arrange that in a fair and just way, as it should be arranged.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be arranged now. I think that should be a part of the agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my suggestion. The Senator from Minnesota is now here. I suggest to him that at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning when we meet he endeavor to make some arrangement on the basis suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CARTER. Let the arrangement be made now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to give notice that I shall ask for a continuous session to-morrow until this matter is disposed of. I now move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. I can not hear what the Senator from Minnesota says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. Giving notice that he will ask the Senate to sit it out to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the statement of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. TELLER. Why not arrange it now?

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the motion for a moment at the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the agreement indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Iowa can be now made. There are some twenty-three Senators on the list who contemplate making addresses to the Senate on the pending resolution. At least one-half of that number stated that if any agreement could be made whereby a vote could be taken at a stated hour they would gladly forego the desire they have to be heard. This subject has been debated in the Senate for over three years. We have been insisting that action should be taken elsewhere. Action has been taken in all other departments of the Government, and the question is now before the Senate. We seem to be the only obstruction in the way of final and definite action on the subject.

Before we adjourn to-night, in view of the definite expression given but a few minutes ago on the subject of adjournment without an arrangement, it seems to me but proper that an arrangement should be made now instead of being undertaken at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not do that. Why try what is absolutely impossible?

Mr. CARTER. Then I suggest that we fix the hour for the vote at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will sit it out to-morrow. When we get through talking we shall vote. That is the only way we can settle it, in my judgment.

Mr. CARTER. That would mean the last of next week.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, it would not.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, it would, if all on the list talk.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will get tired of it.

Mr. CARTER. During the course of the discussion this afternoon, as in an experience meeting in church, one speech gave rise to a desire to make another speech, and each speech was but a repetition of the one that preceded it. It does seem to me that the country requires that we act rather than talk on this occasion. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CARTER. As a matter of fact this little demonstration in the galleries, contrary to the rules of the Senate, is but an expression in a small way of the feelings to-night of 70,000,000 people in this country. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Manifestations must not take place in the galleries. They are not a part of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. I make the point of order that it is out of order to speak directly to the galleries.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the disorder that is now spoken of commenced in the Senate and not in the galleries.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair admonishes both Senators on the floor and the occupants of the galleries that manifestations of applause ought not to be indulged in.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the Senate either adjourn or let me go on. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that there is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems perfectly plain that the agreement which the Senator from Montana so earnestly and properly desires can not be arrived at at present or to-night. I therefore renew my motion that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Will not the Senator from Minnesota allow me to say one word before that takes place?

Mr. TELLER and others. Vote!

Mr. TILLMAN. I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let us vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I understand the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I propose that we transfer our pairs, so that we can vote.

Mr. PASCO. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Spooner,
Allison,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Tillman,
Bacon,	Davis,	Lodge,	Turley,
Bate,	Deboe,	McBride,	Warren,
Caffery,	Fairbanks,	Pasco,	Wellington,
Chilton,	Faulkner,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Clark,	Gear,	Pettus,
Clay,	Gorman,	Platt, Conn.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Shoup,

NAYS—23.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Smith,
Cannon,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Turner.
Foraker,	Mantle,	Quay,

NOT VOTING—33.

Baker,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Kyle,	Nelson,	Vest,
Butler,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,	Walthall,
Elkins,	McLaurin,	Platt, N. Y.	White,

Hale,	Mallory,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Hanna,	Mills,	Roach,
Hawley,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Jones, Ark.	Morrill,	Stewart,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 15, 1898, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 14, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On pages 4195 and 4196 of the RECORD, in the roll call on Mr. DINSMORE'S motion to recommit the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I am reported as not voting. I did vote "aye," and voted as loud as I could, but there was so much confusion I suppose the Clerk did not hear.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I learn this morning for the first time that I was paired, and it so appears in the RECORD. I was absent yesterday on account of a nervous sick headache. I got information from the Foreign Affairs Committee that the matter would not be concluded yesterday, and so was not present. I see that I am paired, but it was by the kindness of some friend. Had I been present, I should have voted for the minority resolution, and, that being defeated, I should have voted for the majority resolution.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am incorrectly reported on page——

The SPEAKER. Before any further corrections are made, is there objection to the approval of the Journal?

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to suggest that as far as the recorded votes are concerned, they probably appear the same in the Journal and the RECORD, and if there is a mistake in the RECORD, it is also likely to be in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The correction of the Journal is first in order.

Mr. BAILEY. But if the Journal was first approved and it should develop that the mistakes were the same in both——

The SPEAKER. Then, the gentleman should first address himself to the correction of the Journal.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Clerk informed me that a correction of the RECORD would be followed by a correction of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Journal must be first passed upon before corrections in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the Journal corrected. I am reported as not voting on the motion to recommit the resolution yesterday. I did vote "aye" very loudly and I stood in front of the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded, but if he states that he voted, the Journal will be corrected.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, if I am recorded in the Journal as I am recorded in the RECORD, I desire to correct it. On the motion of Mr. DINSMORE to recommit the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I am recorded as voting "no." I want to be recorded as I voted, "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting "no." If it is an error it will be corrected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded on the first roll call yesterday, on agreeing to the substitute, as not voting. I was present and voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded. Does the gentleman state that he voted "no"?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the tally sheet shows that the gentleman voted "no." The RECORD is incorrect, the Journal is incorrect, and the corrections will be made.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. In the RECORD I am recorded as not having voted on the motion to recommit. I was present and voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not so recorded, and the change will be made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded in the RECORD as having voted in the affirmative on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to recommit the joint resolution. I voted "no," and if I am recorded wrongfully in the Journal, I desire to have the Journal and RECORD both corrected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting "aye." The change will be made to "no."

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, on the vote to recommit I voted very distinctly "aye." I am recorded as voting "no." That is in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote is an error, and the Journal and RECORD will be corrected.

Are there any further corrections in the Journal? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and if there is no objection the Journal will stand approved. The next thing is the correction of the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, on page 4196 I am incorrectly reported as not voting on the resolution of Mr. DINSMORE to recommit. I should have been reported as voting "aye." I ask to have the RECORD corrected.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will be corrected. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, a few days since a resolution was agreed to reserving certain seats in the gallery and allowing each member two tickets. The resolution gave the Speaker authority to terminate its existence at any time, and I merely voice the suggestion of several gentlemen about me in saying that possibly the Speaker might think it wise to terminate the force and effect of that resolution to-day.

The SPEAKER. The matter is left with the discretion of the Speaker, and of course he desires to do what the House desires. If there be no objection, the Speaker will exercise the power——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the resolution recently adopted by the House with reference to the issue of tickets of admission to the galleries be, in accordance with its own terms, suspended by the Speaker, and that the regular method which was before in operation go into effect again.

A MEMBER. The present system is very good.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

A VOICE. Look at the empty galleries.

The SPEAKER. If there is nothing more to be said, the Speaker will suspend for to-day and to-morrow the rule which the House recently adopted.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. DINGLEY. There seems to be some misunderstanding among gentlemen about me as to the effect of the proposed suspension of the order with reference to the issuing of tickets. Is the proposition simply to suspend it for two or more days, or to annul it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the impression that the only power given to the Speaker is to suspend the order permanently. The Chair will, however, examine the terms of the resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the Chair is correct. I wrote the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is the impression and recollection of the Chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. To settle the matter, I ask that the resolution be suspended for to-day and to-morrow.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the proposition is simply a suspension for two days, there can be no objection.

The SPEAKER. That will require the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule adopted April 6.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope the rule will be suspended at the discretion of the Speaker. It will be observed that these galleries to-day are nearly empty. Persons are constantly applying for tickets, and they ought to have the right to go into the galleries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order as adopted, so that the House will understand what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered by the Speaker, there be issued daily by the Doorkeeper to each Representative and Delegate two tickets to the galleries of the House; and the Doorkeeper is hereby authorized and directed to reserve sufficient space to accommodate the holders thereof. During the pendency of this order the rules as to members' families and visitors' galleries are suspended.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. My suggestion is that this order be suspended at the discretion of the Speaker. I ask unanimous consent for that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will modify my request and ask unanimous consent that the order as just read by the Clerk be suspended in the discretion of the Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. Will not the gentleman modify his request so as to keep in force the tickets issued for to-day?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, the matter will be left in the discretion of the Speaker; and he can confer with the Doorkeeper.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that as tickets have been issued for to-day under the rule, there is a vested right in the holders of such tickets for to-day, and that the suspension of the rule should only commence to operate after to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. My proposition will leave the matter entirely in the discretion of the Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that even if there be any "vested right" on the part of holders of tickets for to-day, that right will not be interfered with, because it is practically certain that there will be more room in the galleries to-day than will be required to accommodate visitors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The Chair desires to say that he will suspend the rule after to-day. He does not see any other way in which it can be done and regularity be preserved, but he will consult with the Doorkeeper in regard to the practical enforcement of the rule.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The order of business is the call of committees, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has the floor on the unfinished business coming over from yesterday's session.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LACEY. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to rise to some question of personal privilege, and I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Only for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to occupy about thirty minutes of the time of the House this morning by unanimous consent. I have two matters that are legitimately matters of "personal privilege," or will come under that rule; but I wish to make some statements and explanations and make some comments connected with them as to the action of the House and the members of the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in the Fifty-first Congress which should be in the RECORD as matters of history, but which may not be considered as properly coming under the head of a question of "personal privilege."

I would like, therefore, to be accorded thirty minutes on the question of privilege and matters pertaining thereto. If I can not receive unanimous consent at this time, I prefer to take the matter up on some other occasion.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, for thirty minutes on this matter.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to be accorded the privilege of making a statement concerning my action in reference to legislation growing out of the silver question in the Fifty-first Congress, as well as concerning the general history of some transactions therein occurring, in view of the fact that I have received many letters concerning the events to which I am referring, and have been requested to make an explanation or a contradiction in reference to some of them, and especially in reference to the statement published in the papers of the country as coming from the Hon. JOHN P. JONES, of Nevada, as well as other matters upon our financial affairs.

Some of the things to which I wish to refer, do not perhaps properly come under the head of "a question of personal privilege," and I do not propose to avail myself of the privilege under the rule to introduce matters not strictly relevant. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for thirty minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Why not print the historical part and state the balance?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Because I wish an opportunity to answer any questions that may be suggested during the course of my statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be accorded the privilege he asks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the House. Is there objection to the gentleman occupying thirty minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to send to the Clerk's desk to be read what purports to be a conversation between myself and the Hon. JOHN P. JONES, of Nevada, but before it is read to say a word upon the matter.

During the Fifty-first Congress the excitement upon the silver question and the responsibilities of the Republican party in connection with that subject were such that at a caucus called by the Republican party to consider that question seven of the strongest members of the House were appointed, who, together with the Republicans on the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures, should consider that question, which committee consisted of the Hon. E. H. Conger, of Iowa, who resigned his seat and was sent as our minister to Brazil on September 27, 1890, who was then chairman of the Coinage Committee of the House; Judge C. P. Wickham, of Ohio; JOSEPH H. WALKER, of Massachusetts; T. H. CARTER, of Montana, now Senator; S. G. Comstock, of Minnesota; H. F. Bartine, of Nevada: C. J. Knapp, of New York, and Abner Taylor, of Illinois. There were added Hon. William McKinley, now President of the United States; Hon. J. G. CANNON, of Illinois; Hon. T. M. Bayne, of Pennsylvania; Hon. Joseph McKenna, of California, now a judge of the Supreme Court; Judge L. E. McComas, of Maryland, now Senator-elect from that State; D. B. HENDERSON, of Iowa, and Philip S. Post, of Illinois.

The problem submitted to the committee was to secure the successful unlimited coinage of silver by international agreement as against the unsuccessful attempt on the part of this country alone to do the same thing by undertaking to grant the free coinage of silver by this country alone and keeping it at a parity with gold, with nearly all other countries of the world against us.

About 20 Democrats voted consistently in support of the effort on the part of the Republicans to stop the coinage by this country alone of the undervalued silver dollar, and about 20 Republicans voted for the unlimited coinage of silver. There were about 30 more Republicans from districts whose constituents in their majority were in favor of the free coinage of silver.

The point was to delay action until the country could have still further time to fully study and discuss the question and come to a conclusion thereon.

President Harrison, from my personal knowledge, notwithstanding the statements which have been made to the contrary, would most assuredly have vetoed a bill for the free coinage of silver, but we were determined it should not come to that issue. The problem was not simply to defeat that effort, but to save at least thirty Republicans from being brought to a direct vote on a veto.

The country was determined to try and safely use all of the American product of silver, and the problem, as I have said, was to secure that opportunity and surely keep both the silver coinage and the gold coinage at a parity each with the other, which both sides desired to do.

Now, I make no statement or general argument on the question. I wish simply to make a statement of the conditions then existing. It was desired to save, as I have said, the thirty Republicans, at least a large portion of them, who might be induced to vote for free coinage upon a veto in the ranks of those who wanted to try the experiment of safely using the entire American product of silver.

During that controversy I was a member of the committee of fifteen appointed at the meeting of the Republicans to consider that question. What is called the sound-money side was not then as popular as now, and they were willing that somebody should take the lead in harmonizing, if possible, all views upon the use of the entire American product, and to test the popular desire of the House on that question was our objective point.

I want to say to this House and to the country that not a solitary intimation was ever made among our number or to us that the free coinage of silver should be coupled in any way with the tariff question. And now I ask for a reading of the alleged interview with Hon. JOHN P. JONES of Nevada.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post.]

Here is a story from the Senate cloakroom. It was just after Senator Sherman had finished his great speech in favor of the repeal of the bill which bears his name. Senator JONES of Nevada, according to the story, insisted that all the facts about the way the silver law came to be agreed upon in conference had never been told. Turning to a group of Senators he said that he would tell the history of that legislation in the conference committee, and here it is:

"They were sitting around in the conference room when I came in with my ultimatum, which was 4,500,000 ounces a month. 'Oh, if that is all,' said Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts, who was one of the conferees on the part of the House, 'we might as well go. That ends it. It is all over.' Mr. WALKER started toward the door, but before he had gone far I said to him: 'Perhaps you Republicans, and you, Mr. WALKER, will be interested in what I am going to say. I am sure that Mr. Sherman will be interested, and I guess all of you will.' With that Mr. WALKER came back, but did not take a chair. I continued:

"'Now, I want to tell you gentlemen that the McKinley bill will be over in the Senate in a very short time. If you reject our ultimatum on the silver proposition, the silver men in the Senate will move the free-coinage bill as an amendment to the McKinley bill, and there are enough Democrats who will vote with us to carry it. Now, after that amendment is adopted in the Senate all the Democrats will vote against the McKinley bill because it is a protective measure, and the Eastern protectionists in the Senate will vote against it because it contains free silver.

"'The free-silver Republicans in the Senate will be the only men who will vote for it, and being protectionists they will be the only consistent men in the Senate, being for protection and for free coinage of silver.' When I got through they were all listening to me, and before the conference broke up the silver-purchase law, known as the Sherman Act, was agreed to."

SENATOR JONES is known as one of the best story tellers in the Senate, but this is one of the most interesting that he has told his Senatorial friends for some time.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that there is not the slightest foundation in fact for the statements made in the alleged interview. After several meetings of the Republican members of the conference committee, consisting of Senator Sherman and Senator JONES of Nevada upon the part of the Senate, and Representatives Conger and WALKER upon the part of the House, during a discussion, Senator JONES, in urging on agreement, turned to me and remarked: "We had better agree on this measure, for if we do not the Senators in favor of unlimited coinage may take it into their heads to consider the tariff and silver together," or words to that effect.

I instantly turned to him and said, with considerable emphasis: "Are we to understand you to say, Mr. JONES, that there are Republican Senators who will defeat a tariff bill unless we grant the free coinage of silver?" Mr. JONES replied, "No; not at all. There is nothing of the kind. I would not myself suggest such a thing, but we never can tell what will happen. I was only suggesting that if the question was left open such a thing was possible."

This closed the incident. Silver was never spoken of or hinted at again, or either before or afterwards, during all our conferences, in any meeting of the conferees, or in any meeting of the "committee of fifteen" upon the part of the House Republicans when we met individually or collectively. Any statement that there was any "understanding" among us as to silver legislation in connection with the McKinley tariff, understood or implied, by word or act, or that anything said or done indicated in 1890 that there was any purpose or any thought of such action of Silver Republicans as was subsequently taken has not the slightest foundation in fact.

After the retirement of the Democrats and at the first meeting, as Senator JONES of Nevada went out of the conference of Republicans, I conveniently forgot my hat, and as he went out I followed and chatted with him a moment outside the door. When I went back into the Senate committee room, that Senator Sherman, Representative Conger, and myself might not be disturbed, I turned the key in the door and said, immediately and promptly to the other members of the conference: "Now, we may as well come to an understanding at once. Each one of us knows how far he is willing to go in this experiment, and we had better be entirely frank and come to an understanding now; for," I said, "I will not consent to any use of silver that will imperil the keeping of our silver dollars at a parity with gold, and I am willing to go to any extent in the use of silver if it can in that use be kept at a parity with gold." Mr. Sherman said, "Very well; what will you agree to?" I said, "I will agree to any proposition that will not imperil parity," and suggested an amendment of the bill of the character of the amendment that was adopted, agreeing "that the United States Treasury should keep the parity." Mr. Sherman said, "Will you write the amendment?" I said, "No; I am a layman. I am not a lawyer," and suggested that he write it. He insisted that I should write it, and after a few words I said to him that if he would write the clause proposed I would write one, and that undoubtedly his would be adopted, for, if I wrote it, it would be pointed, distinct, and sharp, and he was more familiar with diplomatic language than I was. He wrote the amendment that was finally adopted. I said to the Senator when that amendment was proposed, "Now, you will excuse me, but I always, in any important matter, employ the ablest lawyer in my city, and after I have secured his opinion I always submitted it, if it was a matter of consequence, to another of the ablest lawyers I could find, and I think we all would be better satisfied if this should be submitted to two of the lawyers in the Senate." He said, "Very well; I think that a very wise suggestion. Would you be satisfied with Senator Edmunds and Senator ALLISON?" I said, "Certainly." And at the next meeting of the committee he said that both of them assured him that in their judgment the Supreme Court would enforce any and sustain any action of the Secretary of the Treasury that was necessary in order to maintain the parity, and that clause was inserted.

Now, let me say that the contest raged, after the bill was amended in one or two other particulars, over the matter of whether we should buy four and a half million ounces of silver each month or 4,000,000 ounces. Mr. Sherman said, at the very first meeting, that he would not consent to buy four and a half million dollars' worth of silver, that we should strike out the "dollars' worth" and insert "ounces," and that he was not willing at that time to consent to buy more than 4,000,000 ounces.

Upon retiring, I said to Mr. Conger, "I do not care a picayune for the extra 500,000 ounces of silver per month. It cuts no figure at all. But we have other amendments in this bill, already agreed to, that are very vital, and in order to distract attention from them I want to agree with you that we will not allow Mr. Sherman to understand it or agree on the bill until the morning of the day the measure can be reported to the Senate. We will consent to the proposition to buy 4,500,000 ounces and so inform Senator Sherman and Senator JONES at the last moment."

We did continue the contest over that question up to the day we were informed that the Senate was ready to act upon the bill immediately; and then we yielded the point of 4,500,000 ounces rather than 4,000,000, and the bill went into the Senate. The point of Mr. Conger and myself, as I stated to Senator Sherman, was that if we put that bill into the Senate and it was not acted upon immediately—if it was delayed thirty days—it never would go through the House or Senate. We must act upon it immediately if at all.

Mr. Speaker, I was under no misapprehension about that bill. Reference to the papers of Boston and interviews given and articles written by me before the passage of this so-called Sherman Act of July 14, 1890, will show I declared that this was only a legislative experiment—that this experiment must be tried—that I was sure the piling up of that volume of silver in the United States Treasury would surely depreciate the value of silver below its normal price and much faster than it would otherwise be depreciated; and that the bill would cost the people of this country $200,000,000 in prices paid for silver before we could repeal it; and after enacting the law to try the experiment it should be repealed as soon as possible.

Furthermore, that the passage of that act was only justifiable upon the principle that the action of a captain of a staunch steamer would be justified in constructing a raft upon which the passengers in his vessel who were determined to throw themselves into the sea to swim to a shore they could never reach might safely rest until they came to a better mind; that we should thereby save the wage-earners of this country from losing millions of money in wages. As a matter of fact, the experiment did not, in the view now taken by the most rabid gold-bug in the country, cost the United States Treasury over $50,000,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that the result of the Sherman Act was to elevate the prices of all products; did it not have that effect?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. We did not consider anything concerning the elevation of prices of products or depreciating the price of products in that bill other than what benefit there would be to prices in the coinage of silver provided we could keep silver dollars at a parity with gold. That was the problem we tried to solve.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But you say the protection of the silver cost the people of the United States $200,000,000.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I said at that time I thought the trying of the experiment would cost the Treasury $200,000,000 before the people would be willing to repeal it, but the Treasury only lost less than $50,000,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was it not a matter of fact that under its operation there was an increase in the export cost of all goods in the United States?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I decline to go into that question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did not President Harrison admit that in his message in December following?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not propose to go into that question. I only want to get historical facts in the RECORD. I would be pleased to consider that matter at some other time.

The only thing seriously criticised in that act is the sixth clause. I mean the point made against it by men who call themselves "sound-money men." Section 6 reads:

> That whenever the market price of silver * * * is $1 for 371.25 grains of pure silver it shall be lawful for the owner of any silver bullion to deposit the same at any coinage mint of the United States, to be formed into standard silver dollars for his benefit, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that any man in this House or Senate or anywhere else could vote for that provision to-day, even the most rabid gold man, with absolute safety from his standpoint; so that criticism is exceedingly unjust. We were determined, and desired to find out whether the unlimited coinage of silver could be safely allowed, and we were as true in that quest as any three men that ever sat upon this floor or anywhere else and did our duty as we saw it in trying to secure that result.

The purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, was repealed on November 1, 1893. The following table shows the amount of silver purchased and what would have been the result if the Bland law had remained until now, or the Sherman law:

$2,000,000 worth of silver bought in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, would have made	$45,793,840
4,500,000 ounces of silver would have cost	29,110,070
Less dollars in Treasury notes required		$16,683,770
$2,000,000 worth of silver in fiscal year 1895	48,707,473
4,500,000 ounces of silver, cost price	34,451,145
Less dollars in Treasury notes required		14,256,328
$2,000,000 worth of silver in fiscal year 1896	45,634,927
4,500,000 ounces of silver, cost price	36,722,925
Less dollars in Treasury notes required		8,912,002
$2,000,000 worth of silver in fiscal year 1897	47,980,769
4,500,000 ounces of silver, cost price	34,995,870
Less dollars in Treasury notes required		12,984,899
Difference in four years		52,836,999
If $4,000,000 worth of silver had been purchased, the difference would have been		240,894,008

(See page 355 of hearings before Committee on Banking and Currency, 1897-98.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read and to comment upon an extract from a speech made by me in the House on June 20, 1894. The Clerk read as follows:

> The only practical remedy for the silver situation is to embody in the law of all countries the present commercial customs in the use of silver money, in both silver and gold measure countries (except England), as follows, i. e.:
> 1. All countries that now use silver as the "measure of value metal" to adopt gold as the international and final domestic measure of value at 30 of silver to 1 of gold.
> 2. Make silver the domestic legal-tender metal.
> 3. Make silver money redeemable in gold.
> 4. Withdraw and cancel all silver certificates.
> 5. Make paper money redeemable in silver.
> 6. Not to reduce the existing amount of silver coin, and not to increase the ratio of silver to gold for ten years, and as much silver to be bought and coined as can be kept in circulation among the people.
> 7. England to agree to increase her silver coin by £20,000,000, nominal value.
> This arrangement will make the utmost use of silver that is practicable and establish an unvarying "par of exchange" between countries, which is all that has ever yet been accomplished in coinage as between countries.
> That is the only possible way of securing a par of exchange and not disastrously disturbing the economic conditions of the silver measure of value countries.
> Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
> Mr. WALKER. Certainly.
> Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I understand the last proposition of the gentleman, it looks toward an agreement in all countries, except Great Britain, that the ratio should be fixed at 30 of silver to 1 of gold. Now, if that agreement can be made, either by way of international agreement, on the one hand, or by each country making that ratio for itself on the other, I do not see why you had not just as well make it 16 or 20 of silver to 1 of gold. It seems to me it would accomplish the same end.
> Mr. WALKER. What I have proposed is not to disturb present values by the smallest fraction the world over. Remonetizing at 16½ or 17, or at 15½ or 16, will halve the prices and double the debts of every person in every silver country. That is why I make these suggestions, and the only reason why. What I propose is that every country shall keep its own ratio. I would not reduce the ratio by the one-millionth part of a fraction of a cent in the United States.
> Why? Why, Mr. Chairman, who knows but that to-morrow we may discover gold mines which will produce gold in such abundance that we will be in the same condition as to gold that we are now in as to silver? I would not vote—I would burn my hand off first—that we should reduce the number of our silver dollars below the number of our gold dollars. My proposition leaves all countries to make their own ratio as between silver and gold, except as to international trade.
> The only thing necessary is to induce silver measure of value countries to make gold the international measure of value by the law of their respective countries, leaving silver in all those countries at its present commercial ratio, or three points less, in order not to disturb prices anywhere the world over, and not to have the blighting curse on the countries that now use the silver measure of value that visited us between the years 1873 and 1879, only a hundredfold more intense. That is the reason.
> Silver to-day is about 33 or 34 to 1. If it is made 30 to 1 in silver countries you overvalue it three points. Then the silver of each country will remain at home. Then if silver appreciates toward gold, it makes the silver countries richer and atones to them somewhat for, and restores somewhat also, the losses that we have been allowing to fall on them for the last twenty years in this growing difference between the two metals.
> Mr. Chairman, no agreement of governments, no agreement of international conferences, will affect the situation. Ratify your treaties to-morrow. Nothing will affect it but the convincing of the judgment of the mercantile and manufacturing world, and this proposition would commend itself to the judgment of every business man.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, every word there spoken has been justified by events. I have been discussing these problems before the House during my whole Congressional career, and not one sentence have I ever uttered in this House or outside of it on financial questions for over twenty years has failed to prove true. In 1893 India went to the gold standard, Russia in 1896, Costa Rica in 1896, Japan in 1897, Austria-Hungary in 1892, Peru in 1897. China is being divided up among the nations, and practically will be on a gold standard in all its commerce.

Mexico is the only country remaining, and she is now considering the proposition of going to a gold standard, and must necessarily be carried there unless all nations can agree upon an international ratio for the unlimited coinage of silver, which no one now expects to be done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find in a speech delivered by a Boston gentleman on February 10, 1898, before the Chamber of Commerce this statement:

> The chairman [of the Committee on Banking and Currency] says that his committee will not pass any bill that he does not approve, and we all know that there is one bill that he approves that his committee have not consented to report. Many members of the committee would be glad to report the bill of the monetary commission, but they have not the opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, to vindicate myself from such statements I propose to recite a little more history.

Mr. BOTKIN. Who is the author of that speech?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not care to put his name into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not care to advertise the gentleman. Similar statements have been made privately on this floor a hundred times, and they have been published in the papers all over the country a thousand times. Let me say in reply, Mr. Speaker, what I have said from the beginning and say now, that no relief can come to the Treasury situation until the Treasury is absolutely relieved of maintaining the parity of our money, paper, silver, and gold, issued by the Government, and the maintenance of parity is put upon the banks, where it rests in every country in the world except this.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are the banks as able to do it as the Treasury?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The banks have nearly two thousand million dollars which they can devote to that use at any time, while the Treasury has, at the most, one hundred million or so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the Treasury has unlimited credit.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The banks can do it in the regular line of their business, while the Government can only do so by taxing the people. The banks are rightly clamoring for a gold standard. Let them sustain it at no cost to themselves and relieve the people from being heavily taxed to do it. But to my story. I have said from the beginning, years ago and at all times that any bill drawn by any man in this House or in this country that will relieve the United States Treasury, that will surely put the keeping of the parity of all kinds of money on the banks, that will give the people the free use of a true banking currency by allowing the banks to issue it will have my support, and I will that moment burn up the bill I have drawn.

I want to call your attention to the fact, and I hope I shall have five minutes more to do so, if necessary, that early in this Congress, in its extra session, I went to the Speaker and said to him the financial and banking question was the great question before the country pressing for settlement, and it ought to be settled and settled at once in the extraordinary session. That after he had selected from this House a Committee on Ways and Means, the ablest and most practical men he could find in the House, and then selected the ablest and most practical men he could find in the House for the Committee on Appropriations, and then the chairmen of two or three other leading committees, he could not constitute a Banking and Currency Committee as it ought to be constituted to take up so great a question as the banking and currency question and master the subject so as to agree upon and report a bill.

Who he proposed to put on that committee I did not know, so my statements were entirely impersonal. I begged of him to at once appoint a special committee of the strongest men in the House immediately after the Committee on Ways and Means had reported their bill, as there was no committee work for anybody to do in the House.

Mr. REED turned upon me and said: "Well, you would want to be chairman of that committee yourself."

"I am entitled to be chairman," I replied, "and I do not intend to strike my colors from that position, but I will think the matter over carefully and consult with you to-morrow."

I had made my mind up as to precisely what I would say, as I expected that suggestion, but lest he should think that I had replied hastily, I told him I would wait until the next morning before I replied to that suggestion. In the morning I said to him, "I have carefully thought over what you said about the chairmanship of a special committee last evening and I have two propositions to make, either of which would save me from being discredited and from the unjust statement that I would favor no bill that I did not draw and would defeat any bill brought before the committee not of my own construction. I will suggest that Mr. DINGLEY and myself draw a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to take into consideration the Treasury and banking situation of the country, to be reported in the near future, Mr. DINGLEY to offer the resolution, and that, of course, would make him chairman. You can then put me anywhere on the committee, on the tail end if you choose. Or what I think is a still better plan is to draw a resolution in such a way and with such a title and text that it must be referred under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means. There can be written into it at the bottom a reference in general terms to the financial and banking situation of the country, so as to give the Ways and Means Committee jurisdiction over the banking and Treasury question. Then I, as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, will have nothing further to do with it, as it will be settled before that committee is appointed. If you will adopt either of these propositions, you will have a bill satisfactory to the House, and the committee will report a bill to Congress within sixty days and secure its passage through the House."

Mr. REED's final reply was that he did not think it would be wise to distract the attention of the country and of the Senate from the tariff question, and he doubted whether the country was yet ready for such legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes more.

Mr. BENNETT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Then I ask consent that my remarks, which would take about ten minutes, be extended in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may publish his remarks, equivalent to ten minutes, in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, how is that to be determined?

The SPEAKER. The chair is unable to answer. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the matter was being discussed yesterday on the point of order. Mr. PAYNE was acting as Speaker pro tempore. The point of order was only reserved, and I do not know that my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, will now insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Some important provisions in the bill ought to be considered by the House. I have no objection to its being considered so rather than to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that that could be arranged by the point of order being withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he does not think it good practice, where objection is made, that there shall be action taken in the House of that kind. The point of order being withdrawn, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will proceed.

Mr. LACEY. In what form? Under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. As if in the House.

Mr. LACEY. Five minutes or an hour?

The SPEAKER. The time the gentleman chooses; he can manage the bill as he sees fit.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by my friend from Massachusetts I was about to call up this bill. I am always willing to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, because we are always listening for something interesting from that source. I was reminded yesterday, when the House seemed to be in a great state of confusion——

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. When was that?

Mr. LACEY. Yesterday; when everybody seemed to be highly excited except my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [laughter], some one said, "Oh, he is so used to that in his committee that this little affair seems like peace to him." [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is so.

Mr. LACEY. Now, having thus cleared the decks for action, I regret that the galleries are not so well crowded to-day to listen to the Arkansas case as they were yesterday, but I will endeavor to make this case as clear as possible to the House, and I will repeat very briefly a portion of the explanation which seemed yesterday to fall upon deaf ears.

In 1836 the State of Arkansas issued its bonds to the Real Estate Bank of that State. Those bonds were issued in order to expand the currency and give to the people "a sufficient volume of currency to transact the business of the country without the aid or consent of any other State or nation on earth." That proposition in 1836 was enacted into law and followed by the issuance of $2,000,000 of bonds to this Real Estate Bank. Five hundred thousand and some odd dollars of those bonds ultimately passed into the funds of the Smithsonian Institution and $90,000 into the Cherokee trust fund. Afterwards those bonds were not paid. Their interest was not paid. The Government of the United States assumed the indebtedness and paid into the Treasury for the use of these two funds its own bonds for a like amount, thus assuming to control in the Treasury the Arkansas bonds.

This transaction originated about sixty-one or sixty-two years ago. Since then controversies have arisen between the State of Arkansas and the United States in regard to public lands, swamp lands, the 5 per cent fund from the sale of various lands, etc. Various claims have arisen on behalf of the State of Arkansas and against the United States; and those matters have remained unsettled. The United States, however, has from time to time credited certain sums, amounting to about $55,000, upon this indebtedness.

When the war broke out all these matters were passed to the rear. There was not any adjustment. There could not be at that time. The State of Arkansas passed first through the throes of the rebellion, then through the woes of reconstruction, and finally it passed into the hands of the Democratic party. Which of these conditions is the worst is a matter at present left undecided. [Laughter.] The last condition I am afraid is worse than the first, and perhaps equally hopeless.

But the situation, at any rate, appeals to our sympathies, appeals to the charity and good will of the people of the United States. The various States of the Union in the South that were trampled under foot by the war, whose railroads were destroyed, whose houses were burned, whose fences were torn down, upon those States the curses of that war lighted with great severity. All of them have suffered in that way, and Arkansas perhaps fully as much as those that suffered worst, unless it be the great mother

State of Virginia, whose soil was constantly under the tread of contending armies for four years.

Now, it was my good fortune to serve for about two years in the State of Arkansas during the rebellion. I have felt some sympathy for the gallant men who met us on that occasion; and I have watched the course of that State with perhaps a little more interest than I have that of other States in which I was not so long in service.

Now, I have never felt that the settlement made by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior could, as a statement of accounts, be approved by any court of chancery, or as a detailed statement of accounts could be approved by Congress. If there were no intervening equities, as a mere statement of accounts I have not felt that it was a just one—one that could be approved as a specific statement of the claims for and against the different parties.

But when we take into consideration what has happened in all these years, when we take into consideration that this transaction occurred away back in 1836, when we take into consideration what the State has suffered since then and the total amount of its indebtedness at this time; that it is a struggling community, that many portions of the State have been heavily overflowed, that its expenses in the construction of dikes and levees and in the drainage of its swamps have been very great; when we take into consideration the heroic struggles that that State has made in behalf of education (for in traveling through that wild Western State to-day you will find the schoolhouse on the edge of the swamp, almost at the edge of the cypress timber); when we find that they are making this heroic struggle to bring the State out upon a high plane of progress on a level with any other State in the Union, and when we consider that this old debt, originating away back before the war, has hung as a cloud over the affairs of that State, I assert it is perhaps just and right, and in all respects best, to accept this statement as a lumping settlement—as a general lumping of accounts—and to say that if the State of Arkansas will pay the $160,000 provided for in this contract, or give its new bonds as here provided, and adjust the various land matters as provided in the amendment proposed by the committee, it would be best to accept this settlement and end this old controversy which began before most of us were born.

Taking this view of the matter, I have felt constrained to concur in the report which recommends this settlement as a general closing of accounts between the two governments, so as to end this strife and to start anew.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that a long time ago the surplus in the Treasury was divided up among the States—was deposited with those States to be drawn back from them at some future time when needed by the General Government. That money never has been returned. It was afterwards considered an equitable adjustment as between Virginia, North Carolina, and other old States of the Union, which had received none of the public lands, and the younger States that had received their share of public lands but had not received so large a proportion of the funds deposited with the States.

I think that was the general feeling in the committee amongst those who have had this matter before them over and over again for the last eight or ten years, that we had better at once and for all time settle the question by this adjustment made, and accepting what was considered to be a reasonable sum by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior as a compromise.

There is a considerable area of the public lands of the State of Arkansas that is claimed by the Iron Mountain Railroad Company. On that land taxes were paid by the company to the State of Arkansas for twenty years and over. The State, under the swamp-land act, has set up a claim to that land. Most of the land, however, has passed into the hands of settlers, and it was deemed best while making a general settlement of the whole matter that the title of all these parties should be quieted and the cloud of disputed title removed from their lands, which cover a very large area of the State. That is provided for in the amendment proposed by the committee and which was read to the House on yesterday.

Now, sir, I believe in a general way that this gives the outlines of the proposition pending before the House on the report of your committee, and I yield the remainder of my time, or so much as he may desire, to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. TALBERT. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It is.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat, I would like to ask him one or two questions with reference to this matter.

I understand that this is a settlement recommended by the then Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the Land Office, or was it the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LACEY. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury, together with the governor of Arkansas. They appointed experts, who went, examined, and made a statement of the account. The question was submitted to the governor of Arkansas and the Secretaries of the Interior and of the Treasury, and they entered into a written agreement to make the settlement on the basis of the payment by the State of $160,572, and referred it to Congress, as required by the act of Congress which authorized the settlement thus tentatively to be made.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, a balance of $160,000 is to be paid to the United States in settlement of the conflicting claims?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; $160,572.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any provision in the bill which preserves the right to the United States until this money is paid and the claim adjusted in that manner?

Mr. LACEY. There is a provision by which all of the lands revert absolutely to the United States. Not only these lands, but the swamp lands and all others.

Mr. DINGLEY. Unless that amount is paid?

Mr. LACEY. In addition to that amount the State of Arkansas relinquishes all claims set up as to any swamp lands and other lands not yet patented to the State. They all are relinquished.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it is, in the judgment of the chairman of the committee, a fair settlement of the case, so far as the interests of the Government of the United States are concerned?

Mr. LACEY. Well, I have felt that while in my judgment a larger sum ought to be paid, yet taking into consideration all the elements, which have been explained to the House, the antiquity of the claim and various other questions entering into its consideration, I have felt that it was better to accept the settlement agreed on by the State and the two Secretaries as the best that could be done under the circumstances.

I should have made the amount larger myself, but at the same time it seems impossible to arrive at an amount greater than that fixed in the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is not printed with the report a copy of the compromise or settlement made between the Secretaries and the governor of Arkansas, and I do not know what that settlement is in terms, but I understand from the chairman of the committee that this amount is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States before there is any release of the claim of the Government?

Mr. LACEY. It is to be paid in 5 per cent bonds of the United States, and the odd amount of money remaining over the $160,000 is to be paid in cash. I will say that the bonds of the State of Arkansas are now good.

Mr. DINGLEY. You mean that the bonds are at par?

Mr. LACEY. That the bonds would be paid in full.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman will allow me, the bonds not surrendered are to be paid under the compromise on or before the 1st day of January, 1900. The State under the contract reserved the right to anticipate the time of payment, and I hope it will be anticipated. But they must be paid by that time at all events.

Mr. DINGLEY. Have they a market value now at par?

Mr. MCRAE. All of the bonds recognized by the State except these old real-estate bonds are, I think, worth par and above par.

Mr. DINGLEY. And are selling at that on the markets at this time?

Mr. MCRAE (continuing). I do not know whether any bonds are selling at par that draw as low a rate as 5 per cent interest. These bonds, however, to which reference is made here, draw 6 per cent; but I do not know that any of them are on the market. I think the common-school fund of Arkansas and the United States own practically all of them except the Holfords.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. The State is paying promptly the interest on her outstanding indebtedness.

Mr. DINGLEY. There were certain bonds issued by the State of Arkansas that were repudiated, were there not?

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Yes; those were the old Holford bonds.

Mr. MCRAE. The Supreme Court declared those bonds to have been illegally hypothecated and the State only liable for what was received on them. They are not taken into account. These bonds in question have never been repudiated, either by the legislature, the courts, or the people. I will discuss that in my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that before the United States releases the title to its land it ought to have the cash in hand, and not a lot of bonds which there may be some question about hereafter.

Mr. MCRAE. There can be no question about the legality of these bonds. The 160 $1,000 bonds are not to be surrendered until paid. There will be no question, in my opinion, about the payment of the $160,572, the balance due from the State.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. No doubt it will be paid within six months or less time.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right.

Mr. LACEY. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the bonds of the State would be worth their face and could be disposed of without difficulty by the Secretary of the Treasury. Now I yield to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] such time as he may need. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to state at present.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, Arkansas came into the Union June 15, 1836, with a constitution that contained the following provision:

The general assembly may incorporate one State bank, with such amount of capital as may be deemed necessary, and such number of branches as may be required for the public convenience, which shall become the repository of the fund belonging to or under the control of the State, and shall be required to loan them out throughout the State and in each county in proportion to representation. And they shall further have power to incorporate one other banking institution calculated to aid and promote the great agricultural interests of the country, and the faith and credit of the State may be pledged to raise the funds necessary to carry into operation the two banks herein specified: Provided, Such security can be given by the individual stockholders as will guarantee the State against loss or injury.

Both of the banks authorized by this constitution were provided for by the First general assembly of the State, and they were both put in operation.

The first act of the First general assembly was one "to establish the Real Estate Bank," which was an institution private in its character, with a right in the State to select a minority of its directors, owned by private stockholders, who subscribed their stock and attempted to secure its payments by real-estate mortgages. To this private institution the State in its infancy lent its credit by issuing about $3,000,000 of 6 per cent thirty-year bonds, to be sold by the bank at par value.

These bonds were negotiated and the capital to start the bank was in that way raised. Under the provisions of the first act of the general assembly the Real Estate Bank was established at Little Rock, with branches at Washington, Arkansas Post, Batesville, and Helena, and the entire stock first authorized was taken in the eastern portion of the State. Running a line from Batesville to Washington showed all of the stockholders to be east of that line. This caused great dissatisfaction in the western portion of the State, and in consequence of this, at the next session of the general assembly there was another act passed authorizing the further issue of $500,000 of bonds to establish a branch of the Real Estate Bank at Van Buren, and required that the stockholders or subscribers should be confined to certain western counties.

This stock was subscribed and the stock mortgages put upon record to secure it, but the bonds, which are now known as the Holford bonds, could not be sold at par and were illegally hypothecated by the bank to the North American Trust and Banking Company for only $125,000. As this was not sufficient to establish the branch bank, the funds were placed in the parent bank at Little Rock and the branch bank was never put in operation. The consequence was, when the State attempted to foreclose on the Holford bond mortgages she was defeated on the ground of failure of consideration.

The bank suspended specie payment on the 2d day of November, 1839, and on the 2d day of April, 1842, became hopelessly insolvent and made an assignment of its real estate, credits, and effects, bonds, bills, notes, and money. The State proceeded against the bank by quo warranto to seize the franchise, and the supreme court in passing upon the question said, "she has abused her trust and perverted its object, and this works a forfeiture of her charter." There was a great deal of expensive litigation and much delay in winding up the affairs of the bank, and the net assets realized were only sufficient to pay a very small part of the bonds loaned by the State to it, and so the legal liability still rests upon the people after the lapse of nearly sixty years.

They do not and will not dispute the legal and moral obligation to pay so many of these bonds as are now owned by the United States, for they were all negotiated strictly in accordance with the law of the State which authorized their issue and sale, and as a matter of fact the bank received a dollar in cash for every dollar of the bonds delivered to the United States, as trustee for the Smithsonian and Chickasaw funds. But the unredeemed bonds issued on behalf of both banks, including interest to October 1, 1868, was $4,993,503, and that sum represents the loss to the State on account of the unfortunate bank ventures. The State has never recovered her credit, lost largely by the efforts to sustain these banks.

THE CLAIM OF THE UNITED STATES.

The United States invested $538,000 of the Smithsonian fund and $90,000 of the Chickasaw fund in these bonds. The United States also invested $3,000 of the Chickasaw orphan fund in 5 per cent bonds. As of the date of January 1, 1874, the $90,000 of Chickasaw bonds and interest were funded into $252,000 new 6 per cent bonds, due January 1, 1900. The principal of all the bonds amounts to $793,000, and in the pending compromise the State is charged with that, and in addition the interest thereon to the time of maturity, which is $818,803, making in all the sum of $1,611,803.61. No interest is charged against the State after the maturity of the bonds, although upon their face they bear interest until the payment of the principal. If interest should be added to this date, the amount is nearly $3,000,000.

From time to time, as the State defaulted in the payments, Congress appropriated money to protect the trust funds invested in the bonds, and the United States now own in their own right all of the bonds, and the Smithsonian and Indian funds have nothing to do with them. When the bonds matured in 1861 the State had seceded from the Union and was engaged in an effort to sustain the Confederacy. The whole country was then in a state of cruel war, which, after four years, left the State peopled principally with widows and orphans, aged men, and maimed soldiers, without any organized State government; her relations to the General Government uncertain; a new and ignorant citizenship to deal with, and aliens as rulers.

With this condition of affairs, it is unnecessary for me to say that nothing was or could be done to pay the debt to the United States. From then until now the people who survived the wreck and ruin of that sad conflict of the sections and the more disastrous effects of the reconstruction period that followed it have labored with all their energies to rebuild their lost fortunes; but the high taxes, hard times, floods, and droughts have made it almost impossible to do more than support the State government, and they are yet unable to fully meet the demands pressing upon them for public schools and other important purposes. With the present low price of cotton, our great farm product, the probabilities of the State ever being able to pay the principal and interest of these real-estate bonds in money are very slight, even if willing to do so.

I do not hesitate to say that I do not believe she can pay the full amount of them by taxation, and for that reason I have sought to effect a compromise. I regret this condition as much as anyone possibly can, for I love the State passionately, and I wish she were strong enough financially to meet all of her just and legal debts without asking any reduction or compromise. But knowing as I do the inability of the State and the demands upon her, I have for twelve years earnestly and persistently worked and anxiously hoped for some amicable adjustment which would make it possible for her to establish a credit and in an honorable way provide for her other debts. With these bonds settled, the State will be in a condition to pay or adjust upon honorable terms the remainder of her debt. The State is improving in many ways, and with this menace removed, I shall expect such an influx of immigration and capital as will astonish the world.

THIS IS A COMPROMISE.

Confessing her inability to make payment of these old bank debts, the State has for many years urged a settlement by compromise, relying largely upon the liberality of the United States to allow her to use her claim to land and land indemnity, the only available assets she has for such a purpose. By the act of August 4, 1894, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury were fully authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and finally settle with the State all matters growing out of the old Real Estate Bank bonds and the unadjusted land grants, upon such terms and conditions as to them might seem just and equitable, subject to approval by Congress.

THE CREDITS ALLOWED THE STATE.

with the exception of the sum of $55,116.20, the amount of the 5 per cent fund, are not of legal cognizance and could not be enforced in any court. But under the act of August 4, 1894, she was allowed credits aggregating the sum of $1,396,115 for lands which the State insists were donated and granted her by the United States, but never patented.

The balance to be paid by the State in money is fixed in the agreement at $160,572, of which the sum of $572 is to be paid within thirty days after the approval of the compromise settlement by Congress, and the remainder, which is represented by 160 $1,000 bonds, at or before the maturity thereof, January 1, 1900, and all coupons attached and due after January 1, 1895, with the option on the part of the State to pay such bonds before maturity, with only the interest which may have accrued at the time of payment.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF COMPROMISE.

The agreement was sent to Congress for confirmation February 23, 1895. Certain parts of it were objected to in the name of settlers and purchasers who had bought lands the title to which was in dispute and because the compromise was alleged to be too liberal with the State in the matter of waiving interest and in allowing $5 per acre for indemnity lands. For these reasons and for want of time the Fifty-third Congress took no action. The same bill was reintroduced in the House and Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress. On March 30, 1896, the bill S. 502 passed the Senate without amendment, was referred to the House Committee on Public Lands, and its consideration was substituted for a like bill, H. R. 37.

On May 5, 1896, the bill was favorably reported to the House by Mr. Meiklejohn with an amendment intended to confirm, without the payment of anything, the title of all purchasers from the State of unconfirmed swamp lands, and also imposed upon the State a condition which she is required to accept, to the effect that she shall release to the United States all claim to all swamp lands which have been disposed of under the public-land laws or which have been granted, confirmed, certified, or patented by the United States under any other act of Congress. This required the State to yield such claim as she may have to lands that have been patented by the United States under railroad or other grants.

The governor of the State refused to accept the amendment, but invited the consideration of the general assembly to the conditions sought to be imposed upon the State by calling attention to it in his annual message in January, 1897.

The Speaker and those of the majority party in the House of Representatives of the United States refused to allow consideration unless the amendment should be first accepted by the State. The State, by concurrent resolution on the 10th day of March, 1897, ratified and confirmed said compromise and agreed to accept the conditions contained in what was called the Meiklejohn amendment and pledged the faith of the State to carry it out; but the Fifty-fourth Congress had previously expired, on the 4th of March, 1897, and so no action was taken in the House. The same bill was introduced in the House and Senate in the present Congress (Fifty-fifth). On March 29, 1897, the bill S. 3 passed the Senate without amendment and was referred to the House Committee on Public Lands, and was favorably reported with the pending Meiklejohn amendment. The State has twice ratified the compromise, and up to this time has met every condition imposed upon her in order to have this old claim finally and fully settled. This is all she can do. We feel that she now has a right to ask Congress to dispose of the matter.

THE BENEFITS TO ACCRUE TO THE UNITED STATES

under the settlement are (1) that the State must pay the sum of $160,572 into the Treasury of the United States before January 1, 1900, and (2) must release all her claim to the money received by the United States for confirmed swamp lands sold by the United States; (3) title will forever be quieted in the United States to about a million acres of land now in dispute between them and the State; (4) and it prevents any claim against the United States for indemnity lands by the land-grant railroad companies if the lands certified to the State for railroad purposes should be held to have previously passed to the State under the swamp-land grant.

THE GREAT BENEFITS TO ACCRUE TO THE STATE are (1) an honorable release from the old bonds and make it possible for her to reestablish her credit and honor in the financial world; (2) a final settlement of the old contentions and disputes growing out of the several land grants, which have cost the State more than she can hope to realize from them, and which have been a fruitful source of troublesome litigation and annoyance to the people of the State and still beclouds the title to the homes of thousands of the best citizens of the State; (3) it will open to the settlers under the homestead and other public-land laws all of the vacant lands now in dispute between the State and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this is a brief history of an old, confused, and complicated controversy and a fair statement of the claims upon the one side and upon the other.

Mr. BARNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. BARNEY. Is it not true that the State of Arkansas never realized anything out of these $2,000,000 of bonds issued to the Real Estate Bank of that State?

Mr. McRAE. The bonds were issued by the State to the bank, and she has paid millions of dollars on account of them, but has received practically nothing from the bank.

Mr. BARNEY. Is it not also true that there are hundreds of thousands of acres of land in the State of Arkansas that are owned by nonresidents, the title to which is now in doubt, and is perfected by this bill?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; there are about 1,000,000 acres of land the title to which is in dispute. A part of it is claimed by the State and a part has been disposed of, some to residents and some to nonresidents, who are anxious to have their titles quieted.

The bill as amended by the committee is intended to settle, and I think will settle, not only the old complicated accounts between the State and Government, but also all conflicts of title growing out of the swamp and other grants to the State. After many years of labor on the part of the Arkansas delegation both in the Senate and House the bill is now in such a parliamentary condition that the House can vote on it, and I appeal with all the earnestness I possess to my friends on both sides of this Chamber to vote for it and let it pass without further delay.

Mr. LACEY. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be on the committee amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the period at the end of the bill and add the following:
"upon the declarations and conditions hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 2. That the amount of $362,971.35, with which the State is credited in said compromise and settlement for 132,594.27 acres of indemnity land, at the price of $5 an acre, be, and the same is hereby, reduced to the amount of $331,485.63, the value of said indemnity land at $2.50 an acre, the double minimum price of Government land; and the State of Arkansas is hereby credited with the sum of $331,485.63 for 265,188.54 acres of additional selected unadjusted swamp land, at $1.25 per acre, the minimum price of Government land, leaving the balance to be paid by the State of Arkansas to the United States under said compromise and settlement $160,572.

SEC. 3. That the title of all persons who have purchased from the State of Arkansas any unconfirmed swamp land and hold deeds for the same be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and made valid as against any claim or right of the United States, and without the payment of said persons, their heirs or assigns, of any sum whatever to the United States or to the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 4. That the State of Arkansas does hereby relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all lands heretofore confirmed, certified, or patented to the State which have been entered under the public-land laws; and does hereby cede, relinquish, and quitclaim to the United States all right, title, and interest under the acts of September 28, 1850, March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, in and to all lands in the State which have been heretofore granted, confirmed, certified, or patented by the United States under any other acts, and the title to such lands is hereby confirmed in the grantees, their heirs, successors, or assigns, anything in this act or any other act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That this act shall be of no force or effect until the State of Arkansas shall have accepted and approved the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained by an act of the general assembly or by an instrument in writing duly executed by the governor under the authority conferred upon him by the legislature of said State, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the approval of this act: Provided further, That whereas the general assembly of the State of Arkansas did, on the 10th day of March, 1897, accept and approve the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained before the passage of this act, making the same effective and conclusive; therefore, this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a committee amendment?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNEY. I ask in this connection unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the committee report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, the report in question, which was made by myself, is as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 3, entitled "A bill to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out the period at the end of the bill and add the following:

"Upon the declarations and conditions hereinafter provided."

"SEC. 2. That the amount of $362,971.35, with which the State is credited in said compromise and settlement for 132,594.27 acres of indemnity land, at the price of $5 an acre, be, and the same is hereby, reduced to the amount of $331,485.63, the value of said indemnity land at $2.50 an acre, the double minimum price of Government land; and the State of Arkansas is hereby credited with the sum of $331,485.63 for 265,188.54 acres of additional selected unadjusted swamp land, at $1.25 per acre, the minimum price of Government land, leaving the balance to be paid by the State of Arkansas to the United States under said compromise and settlement $160,572.

"SEC. 3. That the title of all persons who have purchased from the State of Arkansas any unconfirmed swamp land and hold deeds for the same be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and made valid as against any claim or right of the United States, and without the payment of said persons, their heirs or assigns, of any sum whatever to the United States or to the State of Arkansas.

"SEC. 4. That the State of Arkansas does hereby relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all lands heretofore confirmed, certified, or patented to the State which have been entered under the public-land laws; and does hereby cede, relinquish, and quitclaim to the United States all right, title, and interest under the acts of September 28, 1850, March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, in and to all lands in the State which have been heretofore granted, confirmed, certified, or patented by the United States under any other acts, and the title to such lands is hereby confirmed in the grantees, their heirs, successors, or assigns, anything in this act or any other act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That this act shall be of no force or effect until the State of Arkansas shall have accepted and approved the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained by an act of the general assembly or by an instrument in writing duly executed by the governor under the authority conferred upon him by the legislature of said State, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the approval of this act: Provided further, That whereas the general assembly of the State of Arkansas did, on the 10th day of March, 1897, accept and approve the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained before the passage of this act, making the same effective and conclusive; therefore, this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage."

The compromise and settlement referred to was made by John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, and Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, and James P. Clarke, governor of Arkansas, on behalf of the State of Arkansas, on the 23d day of February, 1895, pursuant to an act of Congress approved August 4, 1894, and an act of the general assembly of the State of Arkansas approved April 8, 1893. These statutes are as follows:

An act to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, or any three persons they may jointly select or cause to be selected on behalf of the United States, are hereby fully authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and finally settle with the governor of the State of Arkansas, or with such person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of that State to act in its behalf, upon such terms and conditions as to them may seem just and equitable, subject to approval by Congress, as hereinafter provided, all or any of the differences between the Government and the said State growing out of and arising from the issue of certain bonds by the said State which are now owned in their own right or held in trust by the United States; the 5 per cent fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved June 23, 1836; the unpaid portion of the distribution fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved September 4, 1841; the swamp and overflowed lands in place granted by the act approved September 28, 1850, and not heretofore approved to the State; the land and money indemnity due the said State under the acts approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and all other claims and demands of whatever kind or nature; and any compromise or settlement they may make with the said State shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof, for its further action, said compromise not to be effectual and final until approved by Congress.

Approved, August 4, 1894.

An act to authorize the governor to compromise and adjust, prosecute, and secure all claims of the State of Arkansas against the United States.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Arkansas, That the governor be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with the proper authorities of the United States, with a view of compromising, adjusting, and settling all or any of the claims of the State of Arkansas that have accrued or that may hereafter accrue under existing and future laws and grants; and he is further authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and settle the same upon such terms and conditions as he may deem just and right, after having examined into all the facts in relation thereto, the sum or sums agreed upon for such claim or claims as he may compromise and adjust to be applied upon the bonds of the State owned by the United States. The governor is fully empowered to relinquish and quitclaim to the United States any or all claims or demands adjusted or unadjusted upon the surrender to the State of such of her bonds as he may stipulate for in the compromise.

Approved, April 8, 1889.

At the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress Senate bill No. 502 passed the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands of the House and reported to the House with the same amendment now recommended (except the last provision, made necessary for reasons hereinafter stated), but said bill never came up for consideration.

The general assembly of the State of Arkansas, in anticipation of the passage and approval of the bill, passed the following act over the governor's veto, which became a law March 10, 1897, and which makes necessary the last provision reported as an amendment to this bill:

An act proposing ratification of settlement made by Secretary of Treasury, Secretary of Interior, and the governor of Arkansas of the differences between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

Whereas the settlement of the matter of difference between the United States and this State, as set out in the report from the Committee on Public Lands in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and in the Public Lands Committee amendment on the part of the said committee upon Senate bill 502, and wherein the whole subject, with the compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas, as agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior and the governor of the State of Arkansas, are fully set out and discussed in said report, and it is evident that the bill providing for the settlement as it originally passed the Senate of the United States can not be passed without the adoption of the said amendment; and

Whereas it is to the interest of in every way to the State of Arkansas to adjust and settle this important matter, therefore be it resolved by the senate, the house concurring:

Resolved, That the settlement of the matter of difference between the United States and this State, lately concluded by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, acting for the General Government, and the governor of this State, whereby the General Government is to surrender to this State all of the bonds of this State now held, except 160 thereof with coupons attached subsequent to January 1, 1895, and the State on its part is to release and quitclaim to the United States all claims adjusted and unadjusted growing out of the swamp-land grant of 1850, and all other grants, together with the conditions contained in the said Meiklejohn amendment to said bill, be, and the same is hereby in all things ratified and confirmed, and the faith of the State of Arkansas is hereby pledged to carry out in good faith the terms of the said settlement as are imposed upon it as a duty, and we advise and request our members in Congress and the Senate to use all honorable means at their command to bring about the passage of said bill with said amendment.

This bill having been returned by the governor with his objections thereto, and after reconsideration having passed both houses by the constitutional majority, it has become a law this the 30th day of March, 1897.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Little Rock, Ark.

I, Alex C. Hull, secretary of state of the State of Arkansas, do hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a true, complete, and full copy of senate concurrent resolution No. 7, entitled "An act proposing ratification of settlement made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Interior, and the governor of Arkansas, of the differences between the United States and the State of Arkansas," as vetoed by the governor and passed over his veto, as appears by comparing the same with the original roll of said senate concurrent resolution No. 7, now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at Little Rock, this 7th day of April, A. D. 1897.

[SEAL.] ALEX C. HULL, Secretary of State,
By R. B. JETT, Deputy.

This legislation is for the purpose of finally settling an old claim of the United States against the State of Arkansas, and which may be briefly stated as follows:

The State of Arkansas, by an act approved October 26, 1836, authorized the issue of $2,000,000 6 per cent interest-bearing bonds of that State, to run thirty years, to aid the Arkansas Real Estate Bank, of that State; but the United States, as the trustee of the Smithsonian fund, in the year 1838 invested $538,000 of that fund in those bonds. This bank defaulted, so that this loan was a dead loss to the State of Arkansas.

The United States, as trustee of the Chickasaw fund, also (at the same time) invested $90,000 of that fund in the bonds of the State of this same issue.

The United States also holds three 5 per cent registered bonds of the State of Arkansas, purchased out of the Chickasaw orphan fund, which, with interest to the date of maturity, amount to $5,700.

The State of Arkansas defaulted in the payment of both the principal and interest of all of these bonds except as she is entitled to the credit hereinafter mentioned, and the total amount now due thereon, calculating interest only to maturity, is $1,611,803.61.

The State of Arkansas claims an offset to this indebtedness, which may be briefly stated as follows:

The State was entitled, under the act of June 23, 1836 (5 Stat. L., 58), to 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale, by Congress, of lands lying within its borders, and the United States withheld these 5 per cent earnings under section 3481, United States Revised Statutes, to be applied in payment of the interest on these bonds, and on December 1, 1860, there had been so withheld by the United States $148,279.72 and applied in payment of interest on said bonds, and which said sum is credited to the State of Arkansas in arriving at the gross sum before mentioned as due upon said bonds.

Since December 1, 1860, there has been withheld by the United States of these 5 per cent earnings, which was never applied, and which is not credited to the State in the above statement, the sum of $55,116.20.

In addition to the above sum of $55,116.20, to which the State of Arkansas, is unquestionably entitled to credit, that State has various claims against the United States under the public land laws for lands and cash indemnity, which, under the act of August 4, 1894, may be considered as an offset in this compromise.

Under the authority conferred by that act, on the 1st day of January, 1895, the Secretary of the Treasury named Burton T. Doyle, assistant chief of the warrant division of the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Interior named George C. Ross, an assistant attorney in the Interior Department, as agents to investigate and state the accounts between the United States and the State of Arkansas. These agents went to the State of Arkansas and took proofs upon this offset claimed by that State, and made a detailed report, which may be found printed on pages 2-5 of the appendix to the report of Mr. Meiklejohn (Report No. 1634) upon this same bill in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Based upon that report, a compromise was entered into between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury, on the part of the United States, and the governor of Arkansas on the part of that State, subject to the approval of Congress, by the terms of which the State of Arkansas is to pay the United States the sum of $160,572—$572 in cash within thirty days and the balance of $160,000 on or before January 1, 1900.

The settlement was arrived at by crediting the State of Arkansas for lands and cash indemnity and the sum before mentioned as being due that State under the act of June 23, 1836.

Your committee, in recommending the ratifying of this settlement with the proposed amendments, do not thereby desire to be understood as admitting that the sum of $160,572 is all that is either legally or equitably due from the State of Arkansas to the United States, for they believe that if interest is charged the State of Arkansas, to date, according to the terms of the bonds and the law under which they were issued, there is a much larger sum so due; but, in view of all the facts and circumstances connected with the case, they believe it is advisable to thus settle this old controversy:

First. The bank for the aid of which these bonds were given by the State defaulted and the State never realized a dollar upon the whole sum borrowed.

Second. Since the indebtedness was incurred the State of Arkansas has passed through the throes of civil war, and thereby, in common with many other States, suffered great loss of property.

And, above all, the claim is more than 60 years old, and hence much confused and complicated, and for which reason it is now absolutely impossible to determine the exact rights of the parties. We regard this as a compromise and settlement and not an adjudication, and think it ought to be accepted in that light.

In addition to this, this compromise will settle forever the title to nearly a million acres of land in the State of Arkansas, which are now in conflict and are a continuing menace to many of the citizens of Arkansas and other States. These titles are confirmed and quieted in the grantees by the amendment to this bill, and thus set at rest forever.

First, of the State's preemptors on unconfirmed swamp lands who want title to their homes, some of which have been improved for the past twenty-five years.

Second, of bona fide settlers and purchasers from the land-grant railroads holding under patent from the United States for more than forty years.

Third, of those who have erroneously entered confirmed swamp lands under the United States settlement laws.

Fourth, of those who want an opportunity to acquire title to the lands now in dispute between the State and the General Government.

The development and progress of this State has been greatly retarded by this dispute of titles. The title to these lands comes through grants from the General Government, and while the United States does not warrant such titles, we believe it to be equitably bound to make them good when it is possible to do so.

The compromise as reported, the report of the commissioners, with the proofs taken, all of the correspondence relating to this matter, and the hearings before the Committee on the Public Lands of the Fifty-fourth Congress, are fully set forth in the report of Mr. Meiklejohn (Report No. 1634) before referred to, and reference is made to them for fuller information upon the bill. They are so voluminous that it was not deemed necessary or advisable to reprint them as a part of this report.

Both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in their reports for 1897, have urgently recommended the early settlement of this controversy, "so that the business of that Department with reference to the lands in question may be resumed and proceeded with to a conclusion."

The bill as amended would read as follows:

An act to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the compromise and settlement effected February 22, 1895, between the United States and the State of Arkansas by John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, and Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, and James P. Clarke, governor of Arkansas, on behalf of that State, which was made under and by virtue of the authority conferred by an act of Congress approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas," and the act of the general assembly of Arkansas, approved April 8, 1889, authorizing the governor to act for that State, be, and the same is hereby, approved and given the full force and effect of law upon the declaration and conditions hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the amount of $662,971.25, with which the State is credited in said compromise and settlement for 132,594.27 acres of indemnity land, at the price of $5 an acre, be, and the same is hereby, reduced to the amount of $331,485.63, the value of said indemnity land at $2.50 an acre, the double minimum price of Government land; and the State of Arkansas is hereby credited with the sum of $331,485.63 for 265,188.54 acres of additional selected unadjusted swamp land, at $1.25 per acre, the minimum price of Government land, leaving the balance to be paid by the State of Arkansas to the United States under said compromise and settlement $160,572.

SEC. 3. That the title of all persons who have purchased from the State of Arkansas any unconfirmed swamp land and hold deeds for the same be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and made valid as against any claim or right of the United States, and without the payment of said persons, their heirs or assigns, of any sum whatever to the United States or to the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 4. That the State of Arkansas does hereby relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all lands heretofore confirmed, certified, or patented to the State which have been entered under the public-land laws; and does hereby cede, relinquish, and quitclaim to the United States all right, title, and interest under the acts of September 28, 1850, March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, in and to all lands in the State which have been heretofore granted, confirmed, certified, or patented by the United States under any other acts, and the title to such lands is hereby confirmed in the grantees, their heirs, successors, or assigns, anything in this act or any other act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That this act shall be of no force or effect until the State of Arkansas shall have accepted and approved the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained by an act of the general assembly or by an instrument in writing duly executed by the governor under the authority conferred upon him by the legislature of said State, and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the approval of this act: Provided further, That whereas the general assembly of the State of Arkansas did, on the 10th day of March, 1897, accept and approve the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained before the passage of this act, making the same effective and conclusive, therefore this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest, this being a Senate bill with House amendment, that you ask a conference with the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the House insist upon the amendment and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LACEY, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. SHAFROTH.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement in reference to my colleague, Mr. WHITE. I have received a communication from him, in which he says:

I was unavoidably absent yesterday, but would have voted for the Cuban resolution had I been present.

RENT OR LEASE OF CERTAIN PORTIONS OF FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8162.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8162) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent or lease certain portions of forest reserve.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, under such rules and regulations as he from time to time may make, to rent or lease to responsible persons or corporations applying therefor suitable spaces and portions of ground near, or adjacent to, mineral, medicinal, or other springs, within any forest reserves established within the United States, or hereafter to be established, and where the public is accustomed or desire to frequent, for health or pleasure, for the purpose of erecting upon such leased ground sanitariums or hotels, to be opened for the reception of the public. And he is further authorized to make such regulations, for the convenience of people visiting such springs, with reference to spaces and locations, for the erection of tents or temporary dwelling houses to be erected or constructed for the use of those visiting such springs for health or pleasure. And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the terms and duration and the compensation to be paid for the privileges granted under the provisions of this act.

Insert as section 2 the following:

"SEC. 2. That all funds arising from the privileges granted hereunder shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a special fund, to be expended in the care of public forest reservations."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] to explain this bill.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, this bill requires very little explanation. In establishing forest reserves necessarily the boundaries included a great many mineral, medicinal, and other springs, to which the public was accustomed to resort during vacation time. Under existing regulations and forest-reservation laws there is no power vested in any of the Departments to make any provision under the laws for the occupation of these grounds by those who seek these springs for the erection of sanitariums, for buildings, or even cottages for persons desiring to fit them up, or even for camping grounds.

This bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, upon such terms and in such manner as he sees fit, to rent places near this class of springs either for hotels, sanitariums, or cottages, to be used exclusively by the owners of the building. It is cordially indorsed by the Commissioner of the Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it calls for any appropriation or any outlay of money?

Mr. LACEY. There is no outlay. It will produce some revenue; not probably very much. There are hot springs in some of the reservations, and they want to build bath houses and hotels, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the parties will pay to the Government a leasehold rental for the use of the land.

Mr. TALBERT. This includes no expense caused by appointment of supervisors?

Mr. LACEY. It causes no expense whatever. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COLSON. I would like to ask the gentleman, Does the leasing of this property exclude the general public or require them to pay?

Mr. TONGUE. This is to accommodate the public. It allows parties to secure a lease of some lands in some places near these hot springs in the various reservations, and of course the public will have to pay for the privilege of using the hotels.

Mr. COLSON. Is there any provision for the regulation of the charges?

Mr. TONGUE. The lands are to be taken under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COLSON. Do the regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior provide anywhere the rates for campers, and anything of that kind? Are such matters left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I was unavoidably called away at the time the explanation was made by the gentleman from Oregon. My question is, Does this bill provide for leasing and operating the mineral deposits?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. TONGUE. It simply allows the leasing of places in the vicinity of the different springs which are on these reservations and confines the parties exclusively to that which they may lease under such terms as are prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. It does not even allow them to sell any part of it. It is for campers and for people going to summer resorts.

Mr. RIDGELY. I did not know but what it went further and provided for the leasing of mineral lands.

Mr. LACEY. The Department recommended that the bill be enlarged so as to provide for leases for grazing, but the committee thought best not to complicate this question with a broad and sweeping proposition like one for grazing, and let it stand on its basis.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should not have objected to it if it had that provision.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. LACEY. The Committee on Public Lands has no further business on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

COPIES OF OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 427.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 427) for the preservation and protection of public records and documents, and providing for the use of copies thereof as evidence.

Be it enacted, etc., That a copy of any document, record, paper, or map in the official custody of any public officer of any State or Territory of the United States, or the Indian Territory, or the District of Columbia, or of the United States, certified under the hand and official seal of such officer or officers, where there is a seal, or of the State or United States, as the case may be, or verified by the oath of the public officer having the custody of same to be a true, correct, and full copy of the original, may be admitted and read and used in evidence in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in the courts and before special tribunals of the United States in the like manner and with the same force and effect as the original if produced and put in evidence.

SEC. 2. That no document, record, paper, or map in the official custody of any officer of the United States shall be produced or introduced in evidence except upon the order of a court or of a judge thereof or special tribunal made upon application supported by affidavit showing that for good reasons specified the production and inspection of the original is essential to the protection of the rights of the parties and the just determination of the cause or proceeding in which same is to be used and that a copy will not suffice, or when the trial or hearing is being conducted in the same building where such original is kept, or when the officer or Department having the official custody of same refuses or neglects to furnish a copy on request.

SEC. 3. That whenever the original of any such document, record, paper, or map is required to be and is produced in court it shall not be taken from the custody of the officer required by law to keep same, but after inspection and at the close of the trial or hearing shall be returned to the office from which taken.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Territory," insert the words "or Alaska."

In section 2, page 2, at end of line 2, insert "required to be."

In section 3, page 2, after the word "same," line 4, insert "or the person delegated to produce same."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report, as that fully explains the bill.

The report (by Mr. RAY of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 427) entitled "A bill for the preservation and protection of public records and documents and providing for the use of copies thereof as evidence," report the same favorably, and recommend that the bill pass with amendments.

The bill was prepared and introduced in accordance with suggestions made by the Attorney-General of the United States, who points out briefly the reasons for its enactment in a letter, a copy of which is annexed and made a part of this report.

Documents, papers, and maps filed in accordance with law in any public office and public records in the custody of public officers should never be removed from the office where required to be kept, except when absolutely necessary for the protection and preservation of the rights of parties interested. Whenever removed for use in court or before special tribunals such records, documents, and papers are liable to be mislaid and lost, and during their absence from the proper office all persons desiring to inspect or use same are prevented from so doing.

There is no reason why the papers and documents referred to should be produced in court, except when an inspection of the original is absolutely essential. Certified or sworn copies may be substituted and will answer every purpose. The expense of procuring certified or sworn copies will be trivial. Public officers should not be subjected to the expense, inconvenience, and loss of time involved in appearing in court at places oftentimes far distant from the public office where the records are kept for the simple purpose of producing such papers, documents, or records.

The bill carefully provides for cases where the production of the original is necessary for the protection of the rights of parties and a just determination of the cause or proceeding pending, and also provides for the production in court of the originals in all cases where the court or hearing is being held in the same building where the records, papers, and documents are kept. A similar law has been enacted in nearly all of the States.

The bill covers the case where a copy is not furnished on request.

The bill passed the House in the Fifty-fourth Congress, but was not reached in the Senate.

Amend as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Territory," insert the words "or Alaska."

In section 2, page 2, at end of line 2, insert "required to be."

In section 3, page 2, after the word "same," line 4, insert "or the person delegated to produce same."

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a provision looking to the protection of public records.

The form is similar to that enacted by New York and other States.

As the law now stands, there is nothing to prevent lawyers from havi issued subpœnas duces tecum, requiring public officers to produce documents, thus taking them from their places of safe-keeping. It is, of course, quite manifest that this interferes with the public duties of officers and jeopardises public records. The only limit now is the discretion of judges, and this varies very much.

The Secretary of the Interior recently called to my attention a complaint made to him by a surveyor-general, to the effect that he was compelled to produce in court and leave in court public records in his official keeping.

I think that some such measure as the one I have embodied in the draft sent you should be speedily enacted into a law.

Respectfully,

JUDSON HARMON, Attorney-General.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me that anything need be said in behalf of this bill. It simply provides for using copies in place of the original, but any party to a proceeding may have the original if it is necessary for use or inspection. It saves great expense, trouble, and annoyance to the officers of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How does he obtain the original?

Mr. RAY of New York. If it is desired?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If he desires the original, under this bill how does he obtain it?

Mr. RAY of New York. He simply applies to the judge and makes affidavit that the original is necessary for the proper determination of the case, and thereupon the judge makes an ex parte order requiring the original to be produced.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The reason I ask is this: I want to know if it will not work great inconvenience and hardship in places. Take, for instance, a town like mine, where the general land office and the surveyor-general's office are in close proximity to the court-house, and where it is expensive at times to get authenticated copies. I want to know if the inconvenience will not be great under those circumstances; would it not work great hardship and involve considerable expense?

Mr. RAY of New York. I think not, because in those cases they could easily have an order to produce the original in court without expense. There would be no contest about it. They would simply make an affidavit that they wanted the original produced, and it could be produced and used. You see now oftentimes it is necessary, in order to get a document into court, to subpœna the officer, and he travels oftentimes 20, 50, or 100 miles simply to produce a document, and then parties who desire to inspect the document at the place where lawfully kept are unable to do it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The expense of the certified copies for use at the trial—is that to be taxed as a part of the cost in the case?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is not provided for here. There is a general law covering that subject. It would be a disbursement in the case and taxable in the costs.

Mr. SULLIVAN. And I presume the expense of bringing the original paper with a subpœna duces tecum would be greater than procuring the copy.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, yes; oftentimes ten times as large.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair). The Chair understands that there are several committee amendments, and the vote will be taken on the amendments together, unless there is objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 4104) regulating the jurisdiction of United States courts, and for other purposes, and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], who reported the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all suits of a civil nature at law or in equity brought originally in a court of the United States or removed thereto from a State court, the party bringing such suit therein originally, or removing the same from the State court, shall not be permitted to question the jurisdiction of the United States court over such case, and if the case proceeds to a hearing or trial on the merits without the jurisdiction being questioned by motion or plea, none of the parties to the record shall be thereafter permitted to question the jurisdiction of the United States court in such case: Provided, however, That if in any such suit it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of the trial court that the parties have collusively brought said suit, either originally or by removal, into the United States court without right so to do, or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the United States court before judgment is entered on the merits that the case is one in which the jurisdiction of the United States court can not be rightfully exercised under the real facts of the case, the court shall of its own motion dismiss the case or remand it to the State court from which it was removed; and shall in all cases dismissed or remanded for want of jurisdiction make such order as to costs as may be just and proper.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add at the end of section 1 the following:

"Provided, however, That if in any such suit it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of any court in which such suit shall be pending that the parties have collusively brought said suit, either originally or by removal, into the United States court without right so to do, or that the case is one in which the jurisdiction of the United States court can not rightfully be exercised under the real facts in the case, the court may of its own motion dismiss the case or remand it to the State court from which it was removed, and shall in all cases dismissed or remanded for want of jurisdiction make such order as to costs as may be just and proper, but the order dismissing or remanding said cause to the State court shall be reviewable by the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court, as the case may be, on writ of error or appeal, agreeably to the law of procedure in such case."

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois explain what is meant by this language in the bill, if I caught it correctly, that a party shall not be permitted to question the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The language is that the party bringing a suit originally in the United States court, or removing it to the United States court, shall not thereafter be permitted to question the jurisdiction.

Mr. LINNEY. It does not refer to the adverse party?

Mr. CONNOLLY. It requires the adverse party to raise the question of jurisdiction in apt time before going to trial on the merits of the case, or he will be estopped to raise it.

Mr. LINNEY. Is it not regarded in all of our courts an elementary principle of law that the question of jurisdiction can be taken advantage of at any time, and that any proceeding of a court not having jurisdiction is not only voidable but absolutely void?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That has been the rule since the passage of the act of March 3, 1875. Prior to that time the parties were required and expected to raise the question of jurisdiction——

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I will state that there are views of the minority in this case, and I ask that they be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, they will be read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The views of the minority were read, as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on the Judiciary do not agree with the committee in reporting favorably the bill (H. R. 4104) entitled "A bill regulating the jurisdiction of United States courts, and for other purposes." The decision in Walker vs. Collins (167 U. S., page 57) is cited to support the proposed legislation, but we submit that neither in that case nor elsewhere, as we believe, is there sufficient reason for the passage of this bill. We learn from Walker vs. Collins, supra, that Collins and others sued Walker and others in a Kansas State court. The defendants had the cause removed into the United States circuit court, "the plaintiffs interposing no objection" to such removal (167 U. S., page 58). In the United States circuit court the plaintiffs filed a motion to remand the cause to the State courts. "The record does not show that any action was taken by the court upon this motion" (167 U. S., page 59). It may be presumed that the motion to remand was abandoned.

After judgment for the plaintiffs the defendants, Walker and others, by writ of error, carried the case to the United States Supreme Court, and in that court raised the question of the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court into which they had caused the case to be removed from the State court. The United States Supreme Court sustained the contention that the United States courts acquired no jurisdiction under the order of removal from the State court. The Supreme Court, in reviewing and affirming other decisions upon the same point, said (167 U. S., page 59) that—specially provided for, can not be removed from a State court into the circuit court of the United States as one arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States unless that appears by the plaintiff's statement of his own claim, and if it does not so appear the want can not be supplied by any statement in the petition for removal or in the subsequent pleadings."

Now, if this bill be passed the law will be changed very materially. Under it the plaintiff may state a case, like the one above mentioned, cognizable exclusively in the State court, and yet the defendant, by his pleading, may remove such cause into the Federal court. Under existing law the Federal courts can not thus acquire jurisdiction. The proposed legislation would extend their jurisdiction—practically extend it—over controversies now cognizable solely in the State courts. We do not believe there is any reason for weakening the State courts or for further increasing the power or reach of the Federal courts.

Nor do we believe that there is any danger to be apprehended from the operation of the law as clearly declared in Walker vs. Collins, supra. With Walker vs. Collins for their guidance, the State courts will err but seldom, if at all, in disposing of such applications for removal as the one in review in that case.

Therefore we submit that there is no need for the legislation recommended by the committee; that it would be legislation in the wrong direction, and would be productive of bad results.

DAVID A. DE ARMOND.
W. L. TERRY.
O. W. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this legislation has appeared since the practice under the act of March, 1875. Prior to the act of March 3, 1875, it was the general rule in United States courts that the party claiming the benefit of a question of jurisdiction should plead to the jurisdiction, or otherwise he was estopped after judgment on the merits. The passage of the act of March 3, 1875, made it the duty of the court to consider questions of jurisdiction, upon motion of either of the parties litigant, or upon its own motion, at any stage of that litigation, before trial or after trial, in the original court or in any court to which the case might subsequently come on appeal or writ of error.

This condition of things resulted in a great hardship, and is today working great hardship upon parties. The case that brought this most prominently to the attention of the court, of Federal judges, and of lawyers practicing in those courts was the case of Walker against Collins, reported in 167 United States Supreme Court Reports.

That was a suit commenced in the State court in Kansas. A writ of attachment had been issued from the Federal courts; it had been levied upon personal property claiming to be the property of the defendant in attachment. After seizure and sale of the property, other parties who claimed to be owners of the property brought suit against the marshal and his deputies for the wrongful levy of the writ upon their property, the writ not being against the claimant. The marshal removed the suit under the Federal law to the United States court.

In the United States court, contrary to the statement of the minority in their report here, the question of jurisdiction of the United States courts was raised. It does not appear clearly in the opinion of the Supreme Court how far that question of jurisdiction was pressed; but it was raised in the Federal court by the plaintiff in the suit below, and the question was not determined by that court. It went to trial on its merits. Verdict and judgment were rendered against the marshal, and the marshal appealed to the circuit court of appeals, and there the case was heard on the merits and the judgment was reversed for some technical reason.

The case went back to the State court; it was there tried and the jury again gave a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Again an appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals, and that judgment was affirmed, and then the marshal and deputies took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error. Now, in the Supreme Court the marshal raised the question that the Federal court in Kansas had no jurisdiction of the controversy, although the marshal himself had removed the case from the State court to the Federal court in Kansas and had gone through these other several courts, hearing the case on the merits, and never questioned the jurisdiction of the Federal court.

And yet when it came to the Supreme Court, and where it was manifest upon the record that the judgment of the court below would be affirmed, the marshal then for the first time raised the question and argued before the Supreme Court that he had successfully imposed upon the Federal court in Kansas in causing it to take and retain jurisdiction in that case, and the Supreme Court of the United States sustained his contention and reversed the judgment because of lack of jurisdiction in the Federal court in Kansas.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that according to the law as it now stands a man may remove a cause from a State court to a Federal court, and then, after he has gone to the court of last resort for trial of his case, may there raise a question of the jurisdiction of the court to which he himself appealed in the first instance?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir; that is exactly the state of the law as settled.

Mr. DALZELL. And this bill is intended to remove that anomaly?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, to do away with that state of the law. It proceeds upon the theory that the law should henceforth be that a man who invokes the jurisdiction of the Federal court shall forever thereafter be estopped from questioning the jurisdiction of the court which he himself has invoked.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill goes a little further than that, does it not? Does it not provide that the other party also shall be estopped from raising the question of jurisdiction unless he moves to get the case back into the State court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Unless he raises the question before a trial upon the merits. That was the rule prior to the law of 1875.

Mr. LINNEY. Unless he raises it in the State court or the Federal court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. He can not go into a trial on the merits in a State court and afterwards, upon the question of jurisdiction, go into the circuit court.

Mr. LINNEY. But is it not the general rule that even after a trial has proceeded to verdict a motion in arrest of judgment is allowed upon the ground of want of jurisdiction, the whole proceeding having been an absolute nullity?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is the rule under the law of 1875. Under that law one party may put the other to years of expense in attending court after court in trying his case upon the merits, and then being defeated, may go to the court of last resort and there raise the question of jurisdiction, although he himself may first have invoked jurisdiction.

Mr. LINNEY. Does not the question of jurisdiction always have reference to the power of the court? And where the question is as to the jurisdiction of the court—for instance, where an action of felony is brought in a justice's court, that court having jurisdiction only of misdemeanors and those of only a limited character—does it not logically and necessarily follow that where the court has not jurisdiction the whole proceeding is a nullity even though the case may have advanced to the point of final judgment, and the question of jurisdiction—the want of power on the part of the court to try the case—may then be raised?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is true as to a criminal case, but not as to a civil case.

Mr. DALZELL. But is it not a maxim that consent can not give jurisdiction?

Mr. LINNEY. That is right.

Mr. DALZELL. And does not this bill propose to enact into law the maxim that consent may give jurisdiction?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; this bill is simply a reinstatement of the law as it was prior to the act of March 3, 1875. Under the law as it stood prior to that act a party was required to raise the question of jurisdiction by plea. Of course if the matter in controversy is one outside of the jurisdiction of the court, so that the court can not act, its judgment would be a nullity. But this bill goes still further. It deals with the parties to the litigation by saying that the party who invokes the jurisdiction will be prohibited from ever questioning that jurisdiction. It further says that a party brought into the Federal courts must raise the question of jurisdiction before a trial upon the merits. That is the common-law rule. If you desire to raise the question of jurisdiction, you must do it by plea to the jurisdiction before you plead to the merits.

Mr. ROYSE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROYSE. Does not the rule which the gentleman has just stated apply exclusively to the jurisdiction over the person, not over the subject-matter of the suit?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. ROYSE. And you can raise the question as to the jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit at any time?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. ROYSE. And this bill, as I understand, relates only to jurisdiction over the person?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is all. The courts could not construe it to go further.

Mr. DALZELL. Is the gentleman correct in that statement?

Mr CONNOLLY. Yes, sir. I invite gentlemen to look at the proviso, which empowers and requires the court itself to act on the question of jurisdiction:

Provided, however, That if in any such suit it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of the trial court that the parties have collusively brought said suit, either originally or by removal, into the United States court without right so to do, or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the United States court before judgment is entered on the merits that the case is one in which the jurisdiction of the United States court can not be rightfully exercised under the real facts of the case, the court shall of its own motion dismiss the case or remand it to the State court from which it was removed.

Mr. PAYNE. That is before the judgment is rendered. But now suppose that after the judgment is rendered the court is discovered to have no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Do you mean to say that the Supreme Court would not declare such an act unconstitutional and that the consent to try the matter by the parties in interest over which the court had no jurisdiction would confer no proper authority upon the court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, Mr. Speaker; I am satisfied that the bill I have read—and my attention has been called to the matter—is not the correct bill. The report shows that an amendment has been made in that respect.

Mr. TONGUE. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean to contend that it is necessary to pass a bill in order to give a court general jurisdiction to try a cause where the only question of jurisdiction is over the person and not the subject-matter of litigation, and where the parties have waived the question of personal jurisdiction?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; I am not discussing that phase of the question at all. That is not involved here.

Mr. TONGUE. But does the gentleman mean to hold that it is necessary to pass this bill to validate the action of such a court, and under such circumstances?

Mr. CONNOLLY. My controversy is simply as to the question of practice and not with reference to the question raised by the gentleman from Oregon. It is simply a question of practice as to the time when the question of jurisdiction as to the authority of the court shall be raised. It is, in other words, restoring the practice to what it was prior to the act of March, 1875.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me ask if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; there is a minority report.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have that report read.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this exactly the same as the old law?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; it is not a restoration of the old law. Section 5, of March 3, 1875, provides:

SEC. 5. That if, in any suit commenced in a circuit court or removed from a State court to a circuit court of the United States, it shall appear to the satisfaction of said circuit court, at any time after such suit has been brought or removed thereto, that such suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within the jurisdiction of said circuit court, or that the parties to said suit have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable or removable under this act, the said circuit court shall proceed no further therein, but shall dismiss the suit or remand it to the court from which it was removed, as justice may require, and shall make such order as to costs as shall be just. * * *

Now, that act of 1875 changed the rule with reference to the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. PAYNE. What was the law previous to that?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That the party questioning the jurisdiction of the court should plead to the jurisdiction.

Mr. DALZELL. Why not reenact the old law?

Mr. CONNOLLY. The simple reason is that the purpose of this old law was to give to the litigant, without the question of jurisdiction having been raised at all, the right to raise that question. There was no difference as to the source from which the lack of jurisdiction rose.

Mr. PAYNE. Under that law did the Supreme Court ever hold that a case brought under the law, where the question of jurisdiction was not raised at the time, estopped a party in interest from raising that question; in other words, that he could not, after the case had been determined, raise the question of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action in the Supreme Court?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes; in innumerable cases.

Mr. PAYNE. And under the old law, where the question of jurisdiction is not raised at the time, the party was estopped from making that plea afterwards?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. If my colleague will allow me——

Mr. CONNOLLY (continuing). Not, however, as to the subject-matter of the case. I yield to my colleague with pleasure.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not think the House understands the purpose of the bill as reported from the committee with the amendments, and I notice that my colleague has before him and has used the House bill without this amendment. The amendments are important and materially change the effect of the bill as read to the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the bill read as it is proposed to be passed.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I saw immediately after I commenced reading that I had the wrong bill, and so stated.

Mr. PAYNE. Let us have the bill read with the amendment proposed.

Mr. RAY of New York. This is the bill with the amendment:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all suits of a civil nature at law or in equity brought originally in a court of the United States or removed thereto from a State court, the party bringing such suit therein originally, or removing the same from the State court, shall not be permitted to question the jurisdiction of the United States court over such case, and if the case proceeds to a hearing or trial on the merits without the jurisdiction being questioned by motion or plea, none of the parties to the record shall be thereafter permitted to question the jurisdiction of the United States court in such case: Provided, however, That if in any such suit it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of any court in which such suit shall be pending that the parties have collusively brought said suit, either originally or by removal, into the United States court without right so to do, or that the case is one in which the jurisdiction of the United States court can not rightfully be exercised under the real facts in the case, the court may of its own motion dismiss the case or remand it to the State court from which it was removed, and shall in all cases dismissed or remanded for want of jurisdiction make such order as to costs as may be just and proper, but the order dismissing or remanding said cause to the State court shall be reviewable by the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court, as the case may be, on writ of error or appeal, agreeably to the law of procedure in such case.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Now, all the bill, as amended by the committee, does is this: It says that if a party invokes the jurisdiction of the court and goes on with his case to judgment, he shall not be permitted to turn around and say that the court has no jurisdiction. It does not purport to give any jurisdiction over the subject-matter, for if the suggestion is made by anyone to the court, and the court sees that it has no jurisdiction, then it dismisses the whole proceeding, and if the court finds that there has been any collusion in the matter or bad faith, then it may impose costs upon the party who has wrongfully brought or prosecuted the case.

Mr. DALZELL. And that is at any time.

Mr. RAY of New York. At any time.

Mr. DALZELL. Before the case is finally ended.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I would suggest to my friend that the word "may" ought to be "shall," so that it will provide that the court shall, when it discovers a want of jurisdiction, dismiss the case.

Mr. RAY of New York. That was discussed in the committee; but my friend knows perfectly well that the word "may" is always construed to mean "shall" when that is the purport of the bill. No objection will be made to such an amendment, and I will offer it in behalf of the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. When a man invokes the jurisdiction of this court and goes into it, suppose it is found afterwards that the court has no jurisdiction. Then is the man estopped from withdrawing, or what would be the result then?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is not estopped from withdrawing at all, but he is estopped from bringing a suit as an experiment, getting a judgment in the lower court in his favor, and then when he finds that he is liable to be beaten on the merits, or has been beaten, turning around and saying, "Well, the court has no jurisdiction anyhow." He is estopped from doing that.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, he is not to judge himself. But suppose it is decided by some other court that the lower court has no jurisdiction. I want to know what his status is and "where he is at." What will become of his case? Must he go on whether there is any jurisdiction or not?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly not; but if a judgment has proceeded against him on his own invitation, he can not then turn around and get rid of the effect of that judgment by saying, "Now, I will try out the jurisdiction."

Mr. TALBERT. After judgment is obtained?

Mr. RAY of New York. After judgment is obtained.

Mr. TALBERT. But suppose he finds out before judgment is obtained that the court has no jurisdiction. Then is he estopped?

Mr. RAY of New York. On the mere suggestion to the court from him or any other person, the court is directed to dismiss the case—my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says we ought to use the word "shall" instead of "may"—on the mere suggestion the court of its own motion has to dismiss the case, and if it finds any bad faith on the part of either party to the controversy it may impose costs.

Mr. TALBERT. That is the point I wanted to get at.

Mr. DALZELL. Does not my friend think the word ought to be "shall" instead of "may?"

Mr. RAY of New York. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] has no objection to it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand it, all this bill does is to estop the raising of the question of the jurisdiction of the person?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is all.

Mr. PAYNE. But that the question of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter can be raised at any time, under the amendment?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; on mere suggestion, the court will dismiss.

Mr. CONNOLLY. A judgment where the court had no jurisdiction would be a nullity, anyhow.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. ROYSE. Our Constitution provides that the controversy must be between citizens of different States. This would not authorize citizens of the same State to bring a suit and estop themselves from raising the question of jurisdiction, would it?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. DALZELL. That would necessarily be collusive.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It would not estop the court either, if that appeared in the progress of the case.

Mr. RAY of New York. It simply has the effect of stopping an imposition on the court, stopping parties going into court by way of experiment, and when they find they are getting beaten, turning around and raising the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. May I be permitted to call the attention of the gentleman to a matter that I do not understand? I understand this bill assumes to enact that hereafter any person objecting to the jurisdiction must do it by a plea, as was the law previous to 1875. I want to ask the gentleman what he has to say upon this: We have a statute now which prescribes that the practice in any State wherein a Federal court is held shall be the practice in that Federal court, in all cases other than in equity and admiralty. We lawyers who practice in the Federal courts understand the rule.

In view of that, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Lewis vs. Roberts, 144 U. S., held that, the code of procedure in the State of Nebraska providing that in the courts of that State a general denial, doing nothing but denying the whole complaint, denies the jurisdiction and puts that question at issue with every other issue in the case, in a suit coming from a Federal court in the State of Nebraska a general denial did raise the question of jurisdiction. Now, all but five of our States in the Union are code States. Would this act interfere with that?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly not. That is a denial of jurisdiction. The courts have held that.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then, I ask you, a general denial in a civil action in a Federal court in a code State would still be a general denial of the jurisdiction, and the case being tried on to the end without any plea to the jurisdiction, judgment obtained would be a good judgment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. This is a general provision answering to a matter of pleading.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. That covers all cases except one.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It only covers common-law cases. It covers every case where the jurisdiction is questioned or at issue; and the Supreme Court having held, as you say, that a general denial filed in the State of Nebraska, or any other State where a general denial raises the question of jurisdiction, will raise it in the Federal court of that district. That leaves it as it is.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Do you not think from your judicial experience that there is there a conflict between your bill providing the plea of abatement and that code provision which admits a general denial?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That takes place of and in lieu of the plea in abatement.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Would it not follow, if the distinguished gentleman makes a general denial under the laws of Nebraska and lets that case go to judgment and then raises the question of jurisdiction in order to plead, the court's attention not having been called to the special plea——

Mr. CONNOLLY. That would be developed in the trial of the case. This provides that if on the trial of the case the facts are developed showing the jurisdiction of the Federal court has been collusively sought, or showing that it is a case in which the jurisdiction of the United States courts is defective, the court shall upon its own motion dismiss the case. If the gentleman from Washington will observe, a general plea in abatement shall be made.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. As I just came in, I understood that it was a statement from the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The language of the bill is that it shall be questioned by a motion or plea; that plea may be according to the code State, it may be, of the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Plea is a general definition as distinguished from answer, and it would have to stand upon its own definition.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Answer in its place and pleading is well understood and recognized by the Supreme Court and all the circuit courts. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas, who represents the minority.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I will very briefly state the material objection that the minority of the committee have to this bill. It is a maxim of the law with which all lawyers are familiar that consent does not confer jurisdiction, and can not do it. This bill changes that old maxim of the law, which, like other old maxims of the law, has been founded upon the experience and wisdom of centuries. It is dangerous to reverse the principles embodied in these old maxims of law that have the sanction of centuries. Under this bill two parties, for purposes of their own, possibly good, or it may be sinister, can go into a court, and if the judge has a mind to overlook the matter, he thereby, by their consent, takes jurisdiction of a case that does not belong to his court; and then if no appeal or writ of error is taken—in other words, if consent is continued—jurisdiction is thereby obtained contrary to the general law of the land.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman allow me? The gentleman is forgetting the amendment which was put in the bill providing that the question shall be raised by the court itself, and any court in which the case may be taken by appeal.

Mr. TERRY. I understand perfectly well; but suppose there is no appeal, no writ of error; you can take a case under this bill that belongs to the State courts and by consent of the parties, if the judge happens to be sleepy, or does not see the thing, or if for any other reason he does not act——

Mr. CONNOLLY. Can he not do that now?

Mr. TERRY. I do not desire to be interrupted just now. You can correct me afterwards if I misstate the matter. If that thing goes unchallenged, I say the substance of this bill is to confer jurisdiction under this guise which is not conferred by the general law of the land.

Mr. LANHAM. Will you point out the language that sustains that statement?

Mr. TERRY. I will finish my statement, and then you can make any statement you please. I want to be brief. Now, I feel it is just to the members of this House that they should understand why the minority of the Judiciary Committee objected to this bill. There is a majority of them here who can explain all these things. If they can explain them, they will have liberty to do it. I prefer not being interrupted, because I am hoarse to-day and am speaking with some difficulty.

Another objection that I have to the bill is that in this way, indirectly, you extend and amplify the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. I think they have enough jurisdiction already. The Constitution and laws of the United States have wisely apportioned to the Federal courts that amount of jurisdiction which the people, when the matter was fully considered, thought was sufficient for those courts to have. Now, I do not want to aid persons seeking to evade the jurisdiction of the State courts, which is the residuum of all the judicial power of the American people except that which has been specifically apportioned to the Federal court.

Now, let the State courts keep their jurisdiction, and do not allow parties, by operation of a bill of this kind, to reverse a maxim of the law that is as old as the old English oaks beneath which the common law of our English-speaking race was born; a maxim that is older than those English oaks; one that has come down in the old Latin phrase and dates way back of the history of England, before it was ever known to the world. Let us not reverse this old maxim of the law, which every lawyer understands, "Consent can not confer jurisdiction." This bill does that.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is no purpose whatever in this bill to confer jurisdiction by consent. There is no purpose in this bill to change the general rules and order of pleading which now exist. It is not intended by it to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Its purpose is to prevent any party from invoking and experimenting with the jurisdiction of the court and, after judgment has been rendered against him, then coming in and denying or excepting to such jurisdiction.

It is the purpose of this bill to prevent any collusive suits being brought in the courts of the United States, and the very moment that the fact of nonjurisdiction appears, suggested however it may be, it will be the duty of the court to dismiss the case at once.

Now, it seems to me that it can not be reasonably claimed that a plaintiff should be allowed to invoke the jurisdiction of a court to try his case upon its merits and then, when unsuccessful in his contention, take advantage of his own wrong, repudiate the forum he has chosen, and say that the court had no jurisdiction. The purpose of the bill is to preserve the jurisdiction of courts in a proper way, to prevent a wrongful experimentation with it, to dignify judicial proceedings, and prevent imposition upon the courts.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I only rise, as I did before, to emphasize the position of my colleague from Texas. There is not a word or syllable or line in the bill as amended that extends the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. You will see the amendment to this bill provides that through whatever channel the suggestion is made to the court that it has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, when brought to the attention of the court, it is the duty of the court to dismiss the suit. It endangers no one.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. If the parties do not call it to the attention of the court and the court does not happen to see it, then, under this bill, the suit is retained and the court has jurisdiction. It has previously been held by the United States courts for years and years that in a case where a proper citizenship did not exist, that fact could be taken advantage of even against an execution or process on a judgment, and this bill would remove or eliminate that principle, which has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States for years and years. This bill is trying indirectly to reverse the decision referred to in the one hundred and sixty-seventh United States Reports. You do not reverse the decision, but you change the law which the court promulgated in that case. You are getting around the law. It is another case in which you take a "hard case" and attempt to legislate and cover that particular state of facts. There is another maxim of the law that "hard cases make bad law," and when you enact a general statute to cover or get around the circumstances of hardship in a particular case, you are legislating in the wrong direction.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, to resume what I was saying, there is nothing in this bill that expands or broadens the jurisdiction of any court of the United States. There is nothing in the bill that purports to do that. In the ordinary conduct of judicial proceedings there ought always to be a point somewhere when the parties are estopped and bound by the proceedings already had.

Now, my friend from Arkansas suggests that the parties themselves may be asleep. That is not the usual course up at New York; they are generally awake on both sides. He suggests that the court may be asleep; that is not the usual course of things up in New York. Generally during the conduct of the case the parties are awake and the court is awake; but, however that may be, if the court or the parties at the time the case is originally tried fail to see that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, still this bill provides that at any time during the trial, or at any time on appeal when the want of jurisdiction is brought to the attention of the court, it shall be the duty of the court to at once dismiss the suit or the proceedings. If that is not done and it goes to final judgment and no appeal is taken, then we say that neither party shall be permitted to attack the judgment and destroy the force and effect of it by raising the question of no jurisdiction. Third persons may.

We do not say that of the opposing party during the pendency of the action. We only say it of the party who brought the suit, who instituted the proceedings. No one is harmed, no one can be harmed. It is simply a question of practice to prohibit a party who brought the suit from raising the question of jurisdiction himself after it has gone to final judgment, or during its progress if the question is not raised by a pleading. During the progress of the suit, or trial, he may make the suggestion to the court, and if the court sees there is no jurisdiction, then, of course, it is made the duty of the court by the terms of this bill to at once dismiss the proceedings. The suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a good one. In order that there shall be no question the word "must" should be substituted for the word "may," and then everybody will be protected, as the bill simply prohibits a party, after he has invoked the jurisdiction of the court and after judgment has been obtained against him, from raising the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I see no good reason why this bill should not be passed. I think the opposition which has been manifested here comes purely from a misapprehension. The purpose of the bill is not to change the method of procedure, but rather to fix the time within which a party shall avail himself of the objection to the jurisdiction if such objection exists. The effect of the measure is to provide that after a party has invoked the jurisdiction of the court and the case has passed through a trial which has resulted to his disadvantage he shall not be permitted to come in and say, "True, I have invoked the jurisdiction of this court; true, I caused a trial of the case to be had; true, I have lost my case; but now I make the point that the court had no jurisdiction."

Mr. LANHAM. In other words, he can not take advantage of his own wrong.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He has no right to take advantage of his own wrong in that way. The purpose, and the sole purpose, of this bill is to cut off a party from taking advantage of his own wrong.

Mr. RAY of New York. In accordance with the suggestion of my friend from Pennsylvania, I move to amend the amendment by striking out, after the word "court," the word "may," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "shall;" so as to read: "The court shall of its own motion dismiss the case," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the passage of the bill). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 39, noes 23.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 21 voting therefor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair thinks it is too late to make the point of no quorum. In making this ruling, the Chair follows two previous decisions upon the same point. The bill is passed. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL JAIL, FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. HENDERSON. On behalf of the Committee on Judiciary, I call up House bill No. 5521, and yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5521) declaring the Federal jail at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., a national prison for certain purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal jail at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., in addition to the purposes for which it is now used, is hereby declared to be a national prison, for the confinement of persons convicted of crimes and misdemeanors in the United States courts and commissioners' courts in the Indian Territory, in cases where the term of imprisonment does not exceed one year, admission into said prison to be under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill has met the approval of the Attorney-General as well as the Committee on Judiciary. I ask for the reading of the report, which fully explains the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The report (by Mr. TERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill 5521, return the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill seeks to authorize the use of the Federal jail at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., as a prison for persons convicted in the Federal courts in the Indian Territory in cases where the term of imprisonment does not exceed one year, under rules to be prescribed by the Attorney-General.

The Federal jail referred to in the bill has a capacity for the safe-keeping of more than 500 prisoners, and the great lack of prison accommodations in the Indian Territory renders the use of this jail as a prison for short-term convicts expedient and economical.

The bill was submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion, and after an examination he states that there is no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, this United States jail is situated in the district of my colleague [Mr. LITTLE], to whom I now yield. I believe he desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. At the instance of the Federal judge presiding in the western district of Arkansas, and with the approval of my colleague from the Third district [Mr. MCRAE], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"And said jail may also be used for the care and confinement of United States prisoners in the Texarkana division of the western district of Arkansas."

Mr. LITTLE. The necessity for this amendment arises from the lack of Federal jail facilities in the Texarkana division.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is this an amendment offered to the bill as reported from the committee?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir; by myself; not on behalf of the committee.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. My reason for offering this amendment now is because of information which has come to me since the bill was reported to the House, that there is a great lack of prison facilities in the Texarkana division of that district. As I have already stated, the amendment has been offered at the instance of the presiding judge of the western district of Arkansas, and with the concurrence of my colleague [Mr. MCRAE], who represents that portion of the State.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where is that class of prisoners confined now?

Mr. MCRAE. In the county jail. Fort Smith is the only court in our State which has a United States jail in its limits, and this, the Texarkana division, is one of the divisions of the same district.

Mr. RAY of New York. All right; no objection.

The amendment of Mr. LITTLE was considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES VS. MORRIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3933) to permit certain parties to intervene in the equity cause of the United States against Morris and others, pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person not heretofore made a party to the equity cause of The United States against Morris and others, pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in general term, who claims any interest in the lots or parts of lots in squares 63, 89, and 148, or in any of them, the title to which is shown to be undetermined by the report of said court made to Congress under date of March 2, 1896, may, within three months from the passage hereof, intervene by petition in said cause and assert his claim to any such land in such manner as the court may direct; and in case the interest of any such claimant shall be established to the satisfaction of the court, it is hereby vested with jurisdiction and authority to award to such claimant payment of the value of his land heretofore ascertained by said court, as provided for in an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes" (Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, chapter 419).

The committee recommend the following amendments:

Amend line 6 by striking out the word "any," after the word "claims," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "to have had an."

Amend line 12 by striking out the word "his" and inserting in lieu thereof the letter "a;" and further amend line 12 by inserting after the last word in the line the following: "fund growing out of the conversion of the title to."

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman in charge of this bill to make some explanation of what it proposes.

Mr. JENKINS. I will do so, Mr. Speaker, briefly.

This bill does not involve any appropriation upon the part of the Government, nor does it affect the rights of any persons outside of the bill whatever. It is reported by the Judiciary Committee unanimously and as a simple act of justice to a party who has been denied his rights by a decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Some time ago, in August, 1886, the Congress of the United States passed an act providing for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats within the District of Columbia; and, in brief, the bill provided that an action should be commenced in the name of the United States, by the Attorney-General of the United States, for the purpose of acquiring title to all of the lands commonly known as the Potomac River Flats, whether held by the United States or by individuals. This was done for the purpose of improving that part of the District lying along the banks of the river.

It was determined then that there were some individuals who had some property rights in the land, and a case was made up and commenced by the United States against this party mentioned here in "Morris and others," and that was the only title used to designate the action. The interests of the individual owners of the property were never ascertained. The notice was very general. The proceeding was commenced on the 26th of November, 1886, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The parties interested were notified to appear before the court on or before the 3d day of January, 1887, to assert their rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were several parties who claimed property rights therein, and they never had any knowledge whatever of the pendency of this action. It is plain, when we come to examine the records, that they were not guilty of any negligence on their part, and it was impossible for them to know or realize that any of their property rights were involved in this suit.

The Congress of the United States appropriated and paid into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the owners of this property the sum of $26,684.29.

The supreme court of the District proceeded to ascertain who were the parties entitled to that fund, and they disposed of all of the money so appropriated excepting the sum of $1,726.21. It was impossible, the courts say, to determine who was entitled to the money arising from what was known as the proceeds of square 63, lot No. 1, and lots Nos. 10 and 11 in the same square; and also with reference to square 84, lot 14, and part of square 148, being lot 2 of that square.

A few days after the supreme court of the District of Columbia had entered its decree, a man by the name of Pearce discovered the pendency of the action, and went before the court, on a proper application, and asked to be made a party to the suit, and satisfied the court that he was entitled to the moneys arising out of the disposition of lot 2, in square 148. But the supreme court of the District of Columbia held that, in accordance with the notice, these parties having been required to assert their rights on or before the 3d day of January, 1887, it was impossible for that court, without some further action by the Congress of the United States, to allow him to be a party, and denied the application, as will appear more fully by reference to the record of the case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this sum of $1,726.21 is still in the Treasury of the United States waiting the claim of ownership by the parties entitled to it, but on account of the Supreme Court's decision it will be impossible for the owners of the fund to obtain it unless this bill is passed. The bill simply provides that the owners—or the parties in interest—may make application to be made parties to the suit within the time specified in the bill, and if they are unable to satisfy the court that they are entitled to the fund, of course it will not be paid to them.

When this action was commenced by the United States, the Government employed the Hon. Hugh T. Taggart, as shown by the record, to look after the interests of the United States, and this bill and a statement of facts in the case were submitted to that gentleman for his information, and he reported to the Judiciary Committee at considerable length. His letter, dated March 10, 1896, is made a part of the record of the Judiciary Committee in this case. I can not better state the conclusion of the matter than to adopt the language of the gentleman in closing his communication to the committee, wherein he says:

The Government has, of course, no interest in the matter beyond the payment of the money to the true owner, a result which the passage of the bill would no doubt accomplish.

I see no objection, under the circumstances, to its passage.

It involves no expense. The money is in the Treasury of the United States. There appears to be no question that the three parties whose names are not disclosed by the bill are entitled to this fund, one of them to the sum of $1,210.32 and the other two to the sum of $525.89.

Mr. TALBERT. Is that all that is involved in the bill? Does it not involve other claims that may come up beyond this amount of $1,726?

Mr. JENKINS. No other amount at all.

Mr. TALBERT. It is confined to the amount stated there?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. It would not open up any other case?

Mr. JENKINS. No. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are no objections and if no one desires to ask any questions, I ask for a vote on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4099) to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit courts in certain cases, and yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] who reported the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the several circuit courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of suits in equity brought by any tenant in common or joint tenant for the partition of lands in cases where the United States is one of such tenants in common or joint tenants, such suit to be brought in the circuit court of the district in which such land is situate.

SEC. 2. That when such suit is brought by any person owning an undivided interest in such land, other than the United States, against the United States alone or against the United States and any other of such owners, service shall be made on the United States by causing a copy of the bill filed to be served upon the district attorney of the district wherein the suit is brought, and by mailing a copy of the same by registered letter to the Attorney-General of the United States; and the complainant in such bill shall file with the clerk of the court in which such bill is filed an affidavit of such service and of the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of the bill is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the Government, and within sixty days after service upon him as hereinabove prescribed, unless the time shall be enlarged by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and the cause shall proceed as other cases for partition by courts of equity, and in making such partition the court shall be governed by the same principles of equity that control courts of equity in partition proceedings between private persons.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended the following amendment:

"Whenever in such suit the court shall order a sale of the property or any part thereof, the Attorney-General of the United States may, in his discretion, bid for the same in behalf of the United States. If the United States shall be the purchaser, the amount of the purchase money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States upon a warrant drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury on the requisition of the Attorney-General."

Mr. CONNOLLY. The sole purpose of this bill is to enable the United States to get its own out of real estate in which it may own an undivided interest. It may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true that there has never been a law whereby the United States, when it becomes the owner of an undivided interest in real estate, can ever get that interest out, nor can the co-owners of the United States get their interest separated. Throughout the United States wherever two or more individuals own real estate, the courts are open to them to go in and have the real estate partitioned between them equitably, and if it can not be partitioned, then to be sold and the proceeds distributed; but as the law has always been, when the United States becomes an owner with somebody else in a piece of real estate, that becomes a permanent investment on the part of the United States and its co-owners.

No court is open to them by which the interest of the several owners may be determined and set apart. This law is intended to correct that condition of things. I know that there are many pieces of real estate owned throughout the United States by the Government in that way, in common with other people, and every such piece of property lies dead and of no value to the United States at all. There is to-day in the city of Philadelphia a very valuable piece of business property, in which the Government obtained an undivided interest by a sale upon execution. It lies there and never can be realized on under the present state of the law.

This bill provides that the circuit courts of the United States shall be open to any co-owner of property, under circumstances of that kind, to go into court and make the United States a party, have the real estate divided, the interest of the United States set off to the United States, and the interest of the co-owner set off to him. It also provides that in case it can not be divided without injury, then, according to the common rule, the court shall have jurisdiction to order the sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds; and for the purpose of protecting the interest of the Government in such property, it provides that the Attorney-General shall have a right to bid on that property at that sale, and if it shall be struck off to the United States, then that a warrant shall be drawn for the amount of that bid and paid by the Treasurer of the United States. That is necessary in order to protect the United States, so that it shall not be struck off for a mere song. The bill is unanimously reported by the committee, and there can be no objection conceived to the bill. There is a great necessity why it should become the law. I ask for a vote.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 3707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to grant to the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory;"

TO PREVENT THE ABATEMENT OF CERTAIN ACTIONS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6901 and yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] who reported the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6901) to prevent the abatement of certain actions.

Be it enacted, etc., That no action by or against an officer of the United States in his official capacity, or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of his death, or the expiration of his term of office, or his retirement or resignation or removal from office, but, in such event, the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed, at any time within six months thereafter, may allow the action to be continued by or against his successor in office.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be so construed as to cover actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings for extraordinary relief.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Insert after the word "action," in line 3, the words "for mandamus or injunction."

Strike out of line 3 the words "an officer," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the head of any Department or bureau."

Insert in line 9, after the word "thereafter," the words "showing a necessity for the continuance of the action to obtain a settlement of the questions involved."

Add after the word "office," in line 10, the following: "and the court may make such order as shall be equitable for the payment of cost accrued prior to such substitution."

Strike out section 2.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the Clerk read the bill as it would be if amended as proposed.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires it, and there is no objection, the Clerk will read the bill as it would be if amended.

The bill was reported as it would read when amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill ought to be passed as it was originally introduced, instead of the amendments being adopted. I think if there is any reason why one of these suits should not abate when the officer against whom it is filed goes out of office, that it should apply to all, and should not be limited, as the amendment limits it, to cases of injunction or mandamus. If there is reason why a suit should not abate when an injunction is filed or a mandamus is filed against an officer of the United States in his official capacity, then the same reason will apply to all other extraordinary remedies; and for that reason I think that this law is good. I think it is probable that the bill should pass; but if it should apply to one it should apply to all cases, and the same relief to parties litigant should be allowed in their cases as proposed to be allowed here in favor of mandamuses and injunctions. Therefore I am opposed to the amendments.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, the reason why the committee limits this to cases of mandamus and injunction is because the members of the committee could conceive of no other possible kind of case that would come within the reason and spirit of this legislation. If the gentleman can suggest any other kind of an action that could possibly exist to control an official in a case, I should be glad to know it, because it is the sole purpose of limiting it to mandamus and injunctions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are cases where a writ of prohibition might issue against an officer. If there is no other case, it certainly can not hurt the language of the bill as it stands. But there are cases in which it is possible that some citizen of the United States might desire to take out a writ of prohibition against some officer of the United States. And why should not that right be given the same as in the writ of injunction and mandamus?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Because a writ of mandamus or a writ of injunction will cover every case of this kind that is covered in a writ of prohibition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will not in all cases. It will in my friend's State, where they have a code procedure.

Mr. CONNOLLY. We have no code. A writ of prohibition is to prohibit the court from proceeding.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not in States where the common-law rule applies.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman will find that injunction writs, sought to restrain a public officer from doing something that is claimed to be contrary to his official duty—that injunction covers the case, or where it is sought to compel him to do something that he had personally refused to do in his official capacity, a writ of mandamus covers that case; and it limits these cases to the heads of Departments and bureaus, because we can conceive of no reason why it could extend to any other officers except those heads of Departments and bureaus.

In 999 out of 1,000 of these cases they arise between some citizen and the head of a Department or the head of a bureau as to the right of a bureau to make a decision against him as against anybody; and when attention was called to this matter by the fact that the Supreme Court at its very present session decided the case of somebody against Butterworth, the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Butterworth having died, it involved a question that ought to be settled. It involved a question of a construction of the law that commenced under the administration of Commissioner Seymour, Commissioner of Patents.

Some individual has been for years trying to get action by that Bureau different from the action that Commissioner Seymour took in refusing him certain rights that he claimed. Seymour went out of office while the action was pending, and the suit abated. Butterworth was appointed, and the suit was resumed against Butterworth. It ran along against him through the various courts until it came to the Supreme Court, and during its pendency he died and the suit again abated. Now the plaintiff is compelled to go back and commence against Commissioner Duell, the new Commissioner of Patents, without any assurance that Duell will live or remain in office long enough for the plaintiff to obtain a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States. The purpose of the bill is that the suit may survive if the defendant dies.

The plaintiff may file a petition showing the necessity for the continuance of the action to obtain a settlement of the questions involved. It does not seek absolutely to impose the costs that have accrued upon the new defendant, but leaves that to the discretion of the court. So that with this law it would be found when this new official comes in while a suit of that kind is pending before the court as against his predecessor, the new official will have to carry out the law; and if he carries it out within the purpose of the suit pending in the case there is no further necessity for prosecuting it.

If, however, he declines to comply with the demands made upon him, then, upon filing petition in the court showing his declination and showing the necessity for a continuance of the suit against him in order to have the action settled, the court is authorized to have the suit survive against him and make whatever order is equitable. The gentleman concedes that the law is right as far as it goes, but thinks it might apply in other cases besides mandamus and injunctions, but the committee could conceive of no other case where the suit could be brought by or against an official, in his official capacity, in order to obtain a construction of law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly that the bill ought to become a law, but there is no reason in the world, it seems to me, why this limitation should be put upon it which is included in the amendment.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The committee did not see any other contingency in which it could be applied.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There might be some case. I admit that injunction and mandamus are the main cases to which it will apply, but when you are putting a law on the statute book, why not have it broad enough to cover other cases? There is no reason in the world, if it is proper to give this right for a case to be revived against the successor of a Government officer in a case of mandamus and injunction, why it should not be extended to other extraordinary remedies.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Nobody has been able to discover any other remedy to which it could apply. In the Attorney-General's office they could not conceive of any. I conferred with them before this amendment was prepared.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman desire a separate vote upon any amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on the amendment which limits the bill to cases of mandamus and injunction.

The SPEAKER. The question is, then, upon agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, page 1, after the word "action," insert the words "for mandamus or injunction."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

FRAUDULENT EXECUTION OF PAPERS CONCERNING PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 6160) to amend section 4746 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] who reported the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4746 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That every person who knowingly or willfully makes or aids, or assists in the making, or in any wise procures the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit, declaration, certificate, or paper, or writing purporting to be such, concerning any claim for pension or payment thereof, or pertaining to any other matter within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions or of the Secretary of the Interior, or who knowingly or willfully makes or causes to be made, or aids or assists in the making, or presents or causes to be presented at any pension agency any power of attorney or other paper required as a voucher in drawing a pension, which paper bears a date subsequent to that upon which it was actually signed or acknowledged by the pensioner, and every person before whom any declaration, affidavit, voucher, or other paper or writing to be used in aid of the prosecution of any claim for pension or bounty land or payment thereof purports to have been executed who shall knowingly certify that the declarant, affiant, or witness named in such declaration, affidavit, voucher, or other paper or writing personally appeared before him and was sworn thereto, when in fact such declarant, affiant, or witness did not personally appear before him or was not sworn thereto, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year or more than five years."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 9, page 1, after the word "certificate," insert the word "voucher."

In lines 13 and 14, page 2, after the word "thereto," insert "acknowledged the execution thereof."

In line 16, page 2, after the word "thereto," insert the words "or did not acknowledge the execution thereof."

In line 18, page 2, strike out the words "less than one year or."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is suggested by the Commissioner of Pensions, and seeks only to bring within the penal provisions those persons who certify that others have come before them and are identified and have executed the pension papers, when in fact they have not appeared before the notary or the person so certifying.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask the gentleman if this is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is.

Mr. TALBERT. Has the committee come into possession of the evidence of considerable fraud upon the Pension Department, and is that the reason they have brought this bill forward?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; the Commissioner of Pensions has sent a letter, which is embodied in the report of the committee accompanying the bill. He also sent a subsequent letter.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to hear those letters read.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The substance of the first letter is in the report of the committee, which is printed. Does the gentleman desire it read by the Clerk entire, or shall I read simply extracts?

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman states that the committee have come into possession of evidence of fraud practiced on the Pension Department, and I think the House should be put in possession of that information. There have been many disputes in the House as to whether there were frauds or not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill has to do entirely with notaries public. I will read one or two instances from the Commissioner's letter, which I think will satisfy the gentleman.

Jesse C. Hansee, an attorney, who had one office at Hoboken, N. J., and another office at Ellenville, N. Y., caused papers to be signed in blank within the State of New Jersey and subsequently taken to New York, where notaries in his employ filled out the papers and attached their jurats thereto. Subsequently Mr. Hansee abandoned his Ellenville office and caused notaries employed by him in the city of Hoboken to resort to identically the same practice. George F. Seymore, one of the notaries so employed by him, was tried in a number of cases and acquitted, as it was, in effect, held by the trial judge that neither section 4746, as it now exists, nor any other Federal statute, was applicable to the case, though the judge stated that he was satisfied from the evidence adduced that the State law had been violated by the notary in falsely certifying to papers.

The same series of offenses were committed in various other sections of the country; notably at Norfolk, Va.; Nashville, Tenn.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Amelia, Ohio; Pensacola, Fla.; Mobile, Ala., etc.

That is all this amendment seeks to do—to bring within the penal statute those persons who certify that people came before them and acknowledged the papers, when in fact they never came before them, but were absent at the time.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have had no opportunity to read this bill or the report, and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of it if there are any penalties that apply to the pensioner himself?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Frequently affidavits are made by the pensioner that he never reads and does not know what is in them, and I want to know whether it reaches him or not.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman should not have stated that. The law reaches any man who makes a false affidavit whether he is a pensioner or not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am referring simply to this amendment.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. If the gentleman will allow me one further observation. For instance, a pensioner desires to get evidence in the State of Pennsylvania and he lives in Ohio. He forwards his papers and knows nothing as to whether the affiants have appeared or not. I do not want anything to go into this bill which makes him a particeps criminis in such a case as that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no; there is nothing of that kind.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, these are all the bills I am directed to report at this time from the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPERIMENTS IN MINOR COINAGE.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called). I call up joint resolution (H. Res. 37) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make experiments to determine the best material for minor coinage, and to submit to Congress new designs for coins.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is this joint resolution in order under this call? As I understand, it makes an appropriation.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. It is on the House Calendar. It may be there irregularly.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is clearly out of order on this call. It will be referred to the Union Calendar.

ALLOWANCE FOR WASTAGE IN COINING.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I call up the bill (H. R. 7089) to amend section 3542 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the amount that may be allowed the coiner and melter and refiner of the coinage mints and assay office at New York for the wastage of gold and silver.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3542 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3542. When all the coins, clippings, and other bullion have been delivered to the superintendent it shall be his duty to examine the accounts and statements rendered by the coiner and the melter and refiner. The difference between the amount charged and credited to each officer shall be allowed as necessary wastage, if the superintendent shall be satisfied that there has been a bona fide waste of the precious metals, and if the amount shall not exceed, in the case of the melter and refiner, one-half thousandth of the whole amount of gold and one-thousandth of the whole amount of silver delivered to him since the last annual settlement, and in the case of the coiner one-half thousandth of the whole amount of silver and one-quarter thousandth of the whole amount of gold that has been delivered to him by the superintendent. All copper used in the alloy of gold and silver bullion shall be separately charged to the melter and refiner, and accounted for by him."

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. It is. The effect of the bill is simply to reduce by one-half the limit allowed for wastage to the coiner and melter and refiner at our mints. The Secretary of the Treasury reports to the committee by letter that in the practical operation of coinage the actual amount of wastage does not exceed 25 per cent of the limit allowed by law, and he therefore recommends that the limit be reduced one-half, as provided in the bill. That is the only effect of the measure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman will allow me to ask this question: In our mints what becomes of the metals extracted which are neither gold nor silver? The bars tendered for coinage contain a certain quantity of other metals which sometimes are very valuable—for instance, platinum.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. The gentleman is asking me a question which I can not answer. I was not aware of the fact which he states.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wished to know how the money realized from those metals is accounted for.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I knew that there were metals of less value intermingled sometimes with gold and silver, but I did not know that there were metals of great value.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then all that this bill attempts to do is to reduce the amount allowed the coiner and melter for wastage?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. The bill reduces the legal limit of the amount allowed to the melter and coiner as wastage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do those officers derive any emolument from that source?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Not at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The wastage is all accounted for?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And where the actual loss exceeds the limit you do not want it to fall on the individual, but on the Government?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Exactly the reverse.

Mr. LACEY. There is no "conspiracy against silver" involved in this measure? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I have no knowledge of any "crime of 1873" or anything of that kind involved in this bill. It merely reduces the maximum limit of wastage allowed to the coiner and melter respectively.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman said that there was a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. It is embodied in the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. And he indorses this bill?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Yes, sir; and it is unanimously recommended by the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHARLES W. STONE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I believe there is no other bill to be called up from our committee.

LAWS FOR THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was called.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

This bill, I will state, is a very lengthy one—thirty or more pages. It is on the House Calendar, and I think, perhaps, the reading of the report will satisfy gentlemen, and thus save the time of reading the bill.

But I see the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] shakes his head, which I take to be an objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was only expressing in that way my opinion that as a general proposition no bill should be passed by the House without being read.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why would it not be better to make a statement covering exactly what the bill accomplishes?

Mr. PAYNE. Why not let this go over until the next day when the committees are called?

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a bill of great importance and ought to be passed now.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, then, let it be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all criminal prosecutions in the Indian Territory against officials for embezzlement, bribery, and embracery the word "officer," when the same appears in the criminal laws heretofore extended over and put in force in said Territory, shall include all officers of the several tribes or nations of Indians in said Territory.

SEC. 2. That when in the progress of any civil suit, either in law or equity, pending in the United States court in any district in said Territory, it shall appear to the court that the property of any tribe is in any way affected by the issues being heard, said court is hereby authorized and required to make said tribe a party to said suit by service upon the chief or governor of the tribe, and the suit shall thereafter be conducted and determined as if said tribe had been an original party to said action.

SEC. 3. That said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in their respective districts to try cases against those who may unlawfully and forcibly enter upon lands and tenements and detain the same, and also those who, having originally made a lawful and peaceable entry upon lands and tenements, unlawfully and by force hold the same beyond the legal period, and also those who claim to hold as members of a tribe and whose membership is denied by the tribe, but who continue to hold said lands and tenements notwithstanding the objection of the tribe; and if it be found upon trial that an unlawful and forcible entry has been made or that the said lands and tenements are held by force, or that the same, after lawful or peaceable entry, are held unlawfully, or that the same are held unlawfully against the tribe by those claiming to be members thereof, and the membership and right are disallowed by the court, then said court shall cause the parties charged with unlawfully holding said possessions to be removed from the same and cause the lands and tenements to be restored to the person or persons or nation or tribe of Indians entitled to the possession of the same: Provided always, That a person in possession of agricultural lands, holding the possession thereof under an agreement, lease, or improvement contract with either of said nations or tribes, or any citizen thereof, executed prior to January 1, 1898, may, in defense of said action, show that he is and has been in peaceable possession of such lands, and that he has while in such possession made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and that he has not enjoyed the possession thereof a sufficient length of time to compensate him for such improvements. Thereupon the court or jury trying said cause shall determine the fair and reasonable value of such improvements and the fair and reasonable rental value of such lands for the time the same shall have been occupied by such person, and if the improvements exceed in value the amount of rents with which such person should be charged the court, in its judgment, shall specify such time as will, in the opinion of the court, compensate such person for the balance due, and award him possession for such time unless the amount be paid by claimant within such reasonable time as the court shall specify. If the finding be that the amount of rents exceed the value of the improvements, judgment shall be rendered against the defendant for such sum, for which execution may issue, and such judgment shall become a lien upon the improvements situated thereon.

SEC. 4. That all persons who have heretofore made improvements on lands belonging to any one of the said tribes of Indians, claiming rights of citizenship, whose claims have been decided adversely under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, shall have possession thereof until and including December 31, 1898; and may, prior to that time, sell or dispose of the same to any member of the tribe owning the land who desires to take the same in his allotment: Provided, That this section shall not apply to improvements which have been appraised and paid for, or payment tendered by the Cherokee Nation under the agreement with the United States approved by Congress March 3, 1893.

SEC. 5. That before any action by any tribe or person shall be commenced under section 3 of this act it shall be the duty of the party bringing the same to notify the adverse party to leave the premises for the possession of which the action is about to be brought, which notice shall be served at least thirty days before commencing the action by leaving a written copy with the defendant, or, if he can not be found, by leaving the same at his last known place of residence or business with any person occupying the premises over the age of 12 years, or, if his residence or business address can not be ascertained, by leaving the same with any person over the age of 12 years upon the premises sought to be recovered and described in said notice; and if there be no person with whom said notice can be left, then by posting same on the premises.

SEC. 6. That the summons shall not issue in such action until the chief or governor of the tribe, or person or persons bringing suit in his own behalf, shall have filed a sworn complaint, on behalf of the tribe or himself, with the court, which shall, as near as practicable, describe the premises so entered upon or detained, and shall set forth either an unlawful and forcible entry and detention or an unlawful and forcible detention after a peaceful entry, or a detention without the consent of the person bringing said suit or the tribe, by one whose membership is denied by it: Provided, That if the chief or governor refuse or fail to bring suit in behalf of the tribe then any member of the tribe may make complaint and bring said suit.

SEC. 7. That the court in granting a continuance of any case, particularly under section 3, may, in its discretion, require the party applying therefor to give an undertaking to the adverse party, with good and sufficient securities, to be approved by the judge of the court, conditioned for the payment of all damages and costs and defraying the rent which may accrue if judgment be rendered against him.

SEC. 8. That when a judgment for restitution shall be entered by the court the clerk shall, at the request of the plaintiff or his attorney, issue a writ of execution thereon, which shall command the proper officer of the court to cause the defendant or defendants to be forthwith removed and ejected from the premises and the plaintiff given complete and undisturbed possession of the same. The writ shall also command the said officer to levy upon the property of the defendant or defendants subject to execution, and also collect therefrom the costs of the action and all accruing costs in the service of the writ. Said writ shall be executed within thirty days.

SEC. 9. That the jurisdiction of the court and municipal authority of the city of Fort Smith for police purposes in the State of Arkansas is hereby extended over all that strip of land in the Indian Territory lying and being situate between the corporate limits of the said city of Fort Smith and the Arkansas and Poteau rivers, and extending up the said Poteau River to the mouth of Mill Creek; and all the laws and ordinances of said city, as far as the same are applicable, are hereby put in force therein: Provided, That no charge or tax shall ever be made or levied by said city against said land or the tribe or nation to whom it belongs.

SEC. 10. That all actions for restitution, ejectment, and possession of real property under this act must be commenced by the service of a summons within two years after the passage of this act, where the wrongful entry, detention, and possession began prior to the date of its passage; and all actions which shall be commenced hereafter, based upon wrongful entry, detention, and possession committed since the passage of this act must be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrued. And nothing in this act shall take away the right to maintain an action for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer given by the act of Congress passed May 2, 1890 (26 U. S. Stat., page 95).

SEC. 11. That when the roll of citizenship of any one of said nations or tribes is fully completed as provided by law, and the survey of the lands of said nation or tribe is also completed, the commission heretofore appointed under acts of Congress, and known as the "Dawes Commission," shall proceed to allot the exclusive use and occupancy of the surface of all the lands of said nation or tribe susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof, as shown by said roll, giving to each, so far as possible, his fair and equal share thereof, considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of same; but all valuable oil, coal, asphalt, and mineral deposits in the lands of any tribe are reserved to such tribe, and no allotment of such lands shall carry the title to such oil, coal, asphalt, or mineral deposits; and all town sites shall also be reserved to the several tribes, and shall be set apart by the commission heretofore mentioned as incapable of allotment. There shall also be reserved from allotment a sufficient amount of lands now occupied by churches, schools, parsonages, charitable institutions, and other public buildings for their present actual and necessary use, and no more, not to exceed 5 acres for each school and 1 acre for each church and each parsonage, and for such new schools as may be needed; also sufficient land for burial grounds where necessary. When such allotment of the lands of any tribe has been by them completed, said commission shall make full report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval: Provided, That allotments herein provided for shall not impair any vested legal rights heretofore granted by Congress. But parties asserting rights under this proviso may bring their suits in the United States courts in the Indian Territory to hear and determine their legal rights, if any; and parties to said suits shall have the right of appeal as in other cases: Provided further, That such suit shall be instituted within six months from the passage of this act, and not operate to delay or hinder the execution of this act or the making of allotments herein provided for; nor shall any court have or exercise jurisdiction thereunder, by injunction or otherwise, to so suspend or delay the execution of this act or the making of allotments thereunder; nor shall this act be deemed or construed as a recognition of any claims made or asserted by any railway company to any land grant whatever: Provided further, That whenever it shall appear that any member of a tribe is in possession of lands, his allotment may be made out of the lands in his possession, including his home if the holder so desires: Provided further, That if the person to whom an allotment shall have been made shall be declared, upon appeal as herein provided for, by any of the courts of the United States in or for the aforesaid Territory, to have been illegally accorded rights of citizenship, and for that or any other reason declared to be not entitled to any allotment, he shall be ousted and ejected from said lands; that all persons known as intruders who have been paid for their improvements under existing laws and have not surrendered possession thereof who may be found under the provisions of this act to be entitled to citizenship shall, within ninety days thereafter, refund the amount so paid them, with 6 per cent interest, to the tribe entitled thereto; and upon their failure so to do said amount shall become a lien upon all improvements owned by such person in such Territory, and may be enforced by such tribe; and unless such person makes such restitution, no allotments shall be made to him: Provided further, That the lands allotted shall be nontransferable, and shall be liable for no obligations contracted by the allottee, and shall be nontaxable: Provided further, That all towns and cities incorporated under the provisions of this act are hereby authorized to secure, by condemnation or otherwise, all the lands actually necessary for public improvements, regardless of tribal lines; and when the same can not be secured otherwise than by condemnation, then the same may be acquired as provided in sections 907 and 912, inclusive, of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas.

SEC. 12. That when report of allotments of lands of any tribe shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior, as hereinbefore provided, he shall make a record thereof, and when he shall confirm such allotments the allottees shall remain in peaceable and undisturbed possession thereof, subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to provide rules and regulations in regard the leasing of oil, coal, asphalt, and minerals in said Territory, and all such leases shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior; and any lease for any such minerals otherwise made shall be absolutely void. No lease shall be made or renewed for a longer period than fifteen years, nor cover the mineral in more than 640 acres of land, which shall conform as nearly as possible to the surveys. Lessees shall pay on each oil, coal, asphalt, or mineral claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $200 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years, and $500, in advance, for each succeeding year thereafter, as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made. All such payments shall be a credit on royalty when each said mine is developed and operated and its production is in excess of such guaranteed annual advanced payments; and all lessees must pay said annual advanced payments on each claim, whether developed or undeveloped; and should any lessee neglect or refuse to pay such advanced annual royalty for the period of sixty days after the same becomes due and payable on any lease, the lease on which default is made shall become null and void, and the royalties paid in advance shall then become and be the money and property of the tribe. Where any oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral is hereafter opened on land allotted, sold, or reserved, the value of the use of the necessary surface for prospecting or mining, and the damage done to the other land and improvements, shall be ascertained under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and paid to the allottee or owner of the land, by the lessee or party operating the same, before operations begin: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been acquired with the consent or authority of Congress, but all such interests shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to the rate of royalty and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That when, under the customs and laws heretofore existing and prevailing in the Indian Territory, leases have been made of different groups or parcels of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, and possession has been taken thereunder and improvements made for the development of such oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, by lessees or their assigns, which have resulted in the production of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral in commercial quantities by such lessees or their assigns, then such parties in possession shall be given preference in the making of new leases, in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior; and in making new leases due consideration shall be made for the improvements of such lessees, and in all cases of the leasing or renewal of leases of oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral deposits preference shall be given to parties in possession who have made improvements. The rate of royalty to be paid by all lessees shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to the collection of individual royalty on oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral, under existing contracts, for the period of nine months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 14. That the inhabitants of any city or town in said Territory having 200 or more residents therein may proceed, by petition to the United States court in the district in which such city or town is located, to have the same incorporated as provided in chapter 29 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, if not already incorporated thereunder; and such city or town government, when so authorized and organized, shall possess all the powers and exercise all the rights of similar municipalities in said State of Arkansas. All male inhabitants of such cities and towns over the age of 21 years, who are citizens of the United States or of either of said tribes, who have resided therein more than six months next before any election held under this act, shall be qualified voters at such election. That mayors of such cities and towns, in addition to their other powers, shall have the same jurisdiction in all civil and criminal cases arising within the corporate limits of such cities and towns as, and coextensive with, United States commissioners in the Indian Territory, and may charge, collect, and retain the same fees as such commissioners now collect and account for to the United States; and the marshal or other executive officer of such city or town may execute all processes issued in the exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred, and charge and collect the same fees for similar services, as are allowed to constables under the laws now in force in said Territory.

All elections shall be conducted under the provisions of chapter 56 of said digest, entitled "Elections," so far as the same may be applicable; and all inhabitants of such cities and towns, without regard to race, shall be subject to all laws and ordinances of such city or town governments, and shall have equal rights, privileges, and protection therein. Such city or town governments shall in no case have any authority to impose upon or levy any tax against any lands in said cities or towns until after title is secured from the tribe; but all other property, including all improvements on town lots, which for the purposes of this act shall be deemed and considered personal property, together with all occupations and privileges, shall be subject to taxation.

And the councils of such cities and towns, for the support of the same and for school and other public purposes, may provide by ordinance for the assessment, levy, and collection annually of a tax upon such property, not to exceed in the aggregate 1 per cent of the assessed value thereof, in manner provided in chapter 129 of said digest, entitled "Revenue," and for such purposes may also impose a tax upon occupations and privileges.

Such councils may also establish and maintain free schools in such cities and towns, under the provisions of sections 6258 to 6276, inclusive, of said digest, and may exercise all the powers conferred upon special school districts in cities and towns in the State of Arkansas by the laws of said State when the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act.

For the purposes of this section all the laws of said State of Arkansas herein referred to, so far as applicable, are hereby put in force in said Territory; and the United States court therein shall have jurisdiction to enforce the same, and to punish any violation thereof, and the city or town councils shall pass such ordinances as may be necessary for the purpose of making the laws extended over them applicable to them and for carrying the same into effect: Provided, That nothing in this act, or in the laws of the State of Arkansas, shall authorize or permit the sale, or exposure for sale, of any intoxicating liquor in said Territory, or the introduction thereof into said Territory; and it shall be the duty of the district attorneys in said Territory and the officers of such municipalities to prosecute all violators of the laws of the United States relating to the introduction of intoxicating liquors into said Territory, or to their sale, or exposure for sale, therein: Provided further, That owners and holders of leases or improvements in any city or town shall be privileged to transfer the same.

SEC. 15. That the United States hereby consents and authorizes each of the Five Civilized Tribes to convey by deed in fee, to any city or town which is now or may hereafter be incorporated under the provisions of this act, the lands embraced within the limits of said corporation and upon which said city or town is located, upon such terms and for such price as shall be agreed upon between said tribes and said corporation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. If any of the cities and towns herein referred to shall purchase the lands within the corporate limits of said city or town, the chief executive officer of said corporation is hereby authorized and directed to plat the ground thus purchased into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys, and dedicate to the public said streets, alleys, and grounds reserved for public use for parks and schools; and upon said plat being approved by and filed with the Secretary of the Interior, said Secretary shall appoint an officer who, in conjunction with a person to be chosen by the city or town council, shall appraise the lots embraced in said plat at their cash value, and separate and apart from any improvements that may be located upon the same; and should said appraisers be unable to agree upon the value, the judge of the United States court for the district in which the city or town is located shall select a third person, who is not interested in said town, to assist them, and the determination of a majority of such appraisers shall be conclusive; and any person having buildings upon any of the said lots may purchase the said lots at 50 per cent of the appraised value thereof; but if the person owning the buildings upon said lots shall not purchase said lots within six months after the appraisal, as herein provided, then said lots may be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, at a price not less than 50 per cent of the appraised value thereof; and if the price received shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of such lots, the remainder shall be paid to the owner of the said improvements. Lots not occupied by any person may be sold at private sale at the appraised value, or at public auction at such times and places as shall be provided for, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make. The proceeds of the sales of said lots shall be applied, first, to the payment of the purchase price of the land on which said town or city or village is located, and after said payment is made all sums realized from the sale of said lots shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury for the use and benefit of the public schools of said city or town, and be paid out as directed by the proper school officers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That until title shall be obtained under the provisions of this section the use of all vacant lots in cities and towns now or hereafter incorporated shall be disposed of upon such conditions as may be provided by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in surface, the use of which is reserved to present coal operators, shall be included such lots in towns as are occupied by lessees' houses, either occupied by said lessees' employees or as offices or warehouses: Provided, however, That in those town sites designated and laid out under the provision of this act, where coal leases are now being operated and coal is being mined, there shall be reserved from appraisement and sale all lots occupied by houses of miners actually engaged in mining, and only while they are so engaged, and in addition thereto a sufficient amount of land, to be determined by the appraisers, to furnish homes for the men actually engaged in working for the lessees operating said mines and a sufficient amount for all buildings and machinery for mining purposes: And provided further, That when the lessees shall cease to operate said mines, then, and in that event, the lots of land so reserved shall be disposed of as provided for in this act.

SEC. 16. That it shall be unlawful for any person, after the passage of this act, except as hereinafter provided, to claim, demand, or receive, for his own use or for the use of anyone else, any royalty on oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral, or on any timber or lumber, or any other kind of property whatsoever, or any rents on any lands or property belonging to any one of said tribes or nations in said Territory, or for anyone to pay to any individual any such royalty or rents or any consideration therefor whatsoever; and all royalties and rents hereafter payable to the tribe shall be paid, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe to which they belong: Provided, That where any citizen shall be in possession of only such amount of agricultural or grazing lands as would be his just and reasonable share of the lands of his nation or tribe and that to which his wife and minor children are entitled, he may continue to use or receive the rents thereon until allotment has been made to him: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any member of a tribe whose allotment of lands may hereafter disclose oil, coal, asphalt, or other minerals from using the same for his, her, or their own use and benefit, or from disposing of any timber contained on his, her, or their allotment.

SEC. 17. That it shall be unlawful for any citizen of any one of said tribes to inclose or in any manner, by himself or through another, directly or indirectly, to hold possession of any greater amount of lands or other property belonging to any such nation or tribe than that which would be his approximate share of the lands belonging to such nation or tribe and that of his wife and his minor children as per allotment herein provided; and any person found in such possession of lands or other property in excess of his share and that of his family, as aforesaid, or having the same in any manner inclosed, at the expiration of nine months after the passage of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 18. That any person convicted of violating any of the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not less than $100, and shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid (such commitment not to exceed one day for every $2 of said fine and costs), and shall forfeit possession of any property in question, and each day on which such offense is committed or continues to exist shall be deemed a separate offense. And the United States district attorneys in said Territory are required to see that the provisions of said sections are strictly enforced and they shall at once proceed to dispossess all persons of such excessive holding of lands and to prosecute them for so unlawfully holding the same.

SEC. 19. That no payment of any moneys on any account whatever shall hereafter be made to any of the tribal governments or to any officer thereof for disbursement, but payments of all expenses incurred in transacting their business and of all sums to members of said tribes shall be made under direction of the Secretary of the Interior by an officer appointed by him; and per capita payments shall be made direct to each individual in lawful money of the United States, and the same shall not be liable to the payment of any previously contracted obligation.

SEC. 20. That the commission hereinbefore named shall have authority to employ, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, all assistance necessary for the prompt and efficient performance of all duties herein imposed, including competent surveyors to make allotments, and to do any other needed work, and the Secretary of the Interior may detail competent clerks to aid them in the performance of their duties.

SEC. 21. That all rights of way granted to railroad corporations whose lines have heretofore been constructed and at the time of the passage of this act are being operated, and those granted by act of Congress which are now in the course of construction, or are hereafter constructed as provided in the act or acts of Congress granting the right, together with such lands as they were or are authorized to take or acquire for depot or rights of way, sidings, and freight or storage purposes, are hereby confirmed.

SEC. 22. That in making rolls of citizenship of the several tribes, as required by law, the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes is authorized and directed to take the roll of Cherokee citizens of 1880 (not including freedmen) as the only roll intended to be confirmed by this and preceding acts of Congress, and to enroll all persons now living whose names are found on said roll, and all descendants born since the date of said roll to persons whose names are found thereon; and all persons who have been enrolled by the tribal authorities who have heretofore made permanent settlement in the Cherokee Nation whose parents, by reason of their Cherokee blood, have been lawfully admitted to citizenship by the tribal authorities, and who were minors when their parents were so admitted; and they shall investigate the right of all other persons whose names are found on any other rolls and omit all such as may have been placed thereon by fraud or without authority of law, enrolling only such as may have lawful right thereto, and their descendants born since such rolls were made, with such intermarried white persons as may be entitled to citizenship under Cherokee laws.

It shall make a roll of Cherokee freedmen in strict compliance with the decree of the Court of Claims rendered the 3d day of February, 1896.

Said commission is authorized and directed to make correct rolls of the citizens by blood of all the other tribes, eliminating from the tribal rolls such names as may have been placed thereon by fraud or without authority of law, enrolling such only as may have lawful right thereto, and their descendants born since such rolls were made, with such intermarried white persons as may be entitled to Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship under the treaties and the laws of said tribes.

Said commission shall have authority to determine the identity of Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, and to that end they may administer oaths, examine witnesses, and perform all other acts necessary thereto; and if they find that such persons have removed to and in good faith become residents upon the lands in the Choctaw Nation, and are entitled to enrollment under said article, they shall place their names on the rolls made by them.

The roll of Creek freedmen made by J. W. Dunn, under authority of the United States, prior to March 14, 1867, is hereby confirmed, and said commission is directed to enroll all persons now living whose names are found on said rolls, and all descendants born since the date of said roll to persons whose names are found thereon, with such other persons of African descent as may have been rightfully admitted by the lawful authorities of the Creek Nation.

It shall make a correct roll of all Choctaw freedmen entitled to citizenship under the treaties and laws of the Choctaw Nation, and all their descendants born to them since the date of the treaty.

It shall make a correct roll of Chickasaw freedmen entitled to any rights or benefits under the treaty made in 1866 between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes and their descendants born to them since the date of said treaty; and a sufficient amount of land shall be reserved from allotment for their use under the provisions of said treaty in case it be found that they are entitled thereto, and 40 acres shall be allotted to each, to be selected, held, and used by them until their rights under said treaty are determined.

The several tribes may, by agreement, determine the right of persons who for any reason may claim citizenship in two or more tribes, and to allotment of lands and distribution of moneys belonging to each tribe; but if no such agreement be made, then such claimant shall be entitled to such rights in one tribe only, and may elect in which tribe he will take such right; but if he fail or refuse to make such selection in due time, he shall be enrolled in the tribe with whom he has resided, and there be given such allotment and distributions, and not elsewhere.

No person shall be enrolled who has not heretofore removed to and in good faith settled in the nation in which he claims citizenship: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to militate against any rights or privileges which the Mississippi Choctaws may have under the laws of or the treaties with the United States.

Said commission shall make such rolls descriptive of the persons thereon, so that they may be thereby identified, and it is authorized to take a census of each of said tribes, or to adopt any other means by them deemed necessary to enable them to make such rolls. They shall have access to all rolls and records of the several tribes, and the United States court in Indian Territory shall have jurisdiction to compel the officers of the tribal governments and custodians of such rolls and records to deliver same to said commission, and on their refusal or failure to do so to punish them as for contempt; as also to require all citizens of said tribes, and persons who should be so enrolled, to appear before said commission for enrollment, at such times and places as may be fixed by said commission, and to enforce obedience of all others concerned, so far as the same may be necessary, to enable said commission to make rolls as herein required, and to punish anyone who may in any manner or by any means obstruct said work.

The rolls so made, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final, and the persons whose names are found thereon, with their descendants thereafter born to them, with such persons as may intermarry according to tribal laws, shall alone constitute the several tribes which they represent.

The members of said commission shall, in performing all duties required of them by law, have authority to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and send for persons and papers; and any person who shall willfully and knowingly make any false affidavit or oath to any material fact or matter before any member of said commission, or before any other officer authorized to administer oaths, to any affidavit or other paper to be filed or oath taken before said commission, shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and on conviction thereof shall be punished as for such offense.

SEC. 23. That where members of one tribe, under intercourse laws, usages, or customs, have made homes within the limits and on the lands of another tribe they may retain and take allotment, embracing same under such agreement as may be made between such tribes respecting such settlers; but if no such agreement be made the improvements so made shall be appraised, and the value thereof, including all damages incurred by such settler incident to enforced removal, shall be paid to him immediately upon removal, out of any funds belonging to the tribe, or such settler, if he so desire, may make private sale of his improvements to any citizen of the tribe owning the lands: Provided, That he shall not be paid for improvements made on lands in excess of that to which he, his wife, and minor children are entitled to under this act.

SEC. 24. That all leases of any property of any kind belonging to any tribe hereafter made by the tribe or any member thereof shall be absolutely void, and all leases heretofore so made shall terminate at the expiration of one year after the passage of this act unless herein otherwise expressly provided; but this shall not prevent individuals from leasing their allotments when made to them as provided in this act.

SEC. 25. That all moneys paid into the United States Treasury at St. Louis, Mo., under provisions of this act shall be placed to the credit of the tribe to which they belong; and the assistant United States treasurer shall give triplicate receipts therefor to the depositor.

SEC. 26. That all claims of any kind which either the United States may have upon any of the said tribes or nations of Indians or the said tribes or nations of Indians may have upon the United States shall be submitted to a joint committee of the Senate and House, said committee to consist of two members of the Senate and three members of the House, and the said committee shall sit as a board of arbitration for final determination, and without any unnecessary delay the said board shall make the award and provision for the settlement of whatever sum or sums awarded by it.

SEC. 27. That before any allotment shall be made of lands in the Cherokee Nation, there shall be segregated therefrom by the commission heretofore mentioned, in separate allotments or otherwise, the 157,600 acres purchased by the Delaware tribe of Indians from the Cherokee Nation under agreement of April 8, 1867, and the use and occupancy of 160 acres of said land shall be allotted to each registered Delaware Indian now living, and the remainder thereof shall be reserved to the descendants of deceased registered Delawares, subject to the judicial determination of the rights of said descendants and the Cherokee Nation under said agreement.

SEC. 28. That on and after the passage of this act the laws of the various tribes or nations of Indians shall not be enforced at law or in equity by the courts of the United States in the Indian Territory.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 15, section 11, strike out, after the word "month," the words "from the passage of this act" and insert "after the allotment of any lands affecting alleged grants."

Insert, in line 2, page 12, after the word "Interior," in section 13, the words "and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases."

Also insert, in section 15, page 17, after the word "make," the words "the purchase money for all lots sold by the city or town under the provision of this act shall be made in four equal annual payments, the first payment to be made within ninety days after the purchase."

In line 3, page 18, strike out "agreement" and insert "act."

Strike out section 26 and renumber the following sections to conform to this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy only a few moments in the explanation of this measure.

The provisions of the bill will relate entirely to the Indians within the Indian Territory and the property therein. The question of the conditions existing there has been much mooted for many years. They were the cause of the creation of the so-called "Dawes Commission." The matter has been considered for some years as to the best mode to deal with this matter.

The conditions in the Territory have been carefully examined by the committees of the House and of the Senate. Early in the present session of Congress a subcommittee from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs met with the subcommittee from the House Committee on Indian Affairs and considered this whole subject for many weeks. They had hearings for a large number of days, and as a result of their consideration, substantially this bill was drawn. It was then presented by the subcommittee to the full Committee on Indian Affairs, and was considered by them line by line and word by word for four weeks, the committee meeting every day, and as a result of that consideration this bill is now presented to the House with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendments recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BOARD OF LOCAL INSPECTORS OF STEAM VESSELS, ALASKA.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. Speaker, we have not finished with our business.

Mr. PAYNE. I will make a motion in order at this time. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill No. 3627.

Several MEMBERS. What is the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. To create a board of local inspectors of steam vessels for the customs district of Alaska.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Indian Affairs is not precluded from presenting the business before that committee, at the next call of committees, by this action?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. PAYNE. I now insist upon my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill which the Clerk will read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1895, chapter 146, third session Fifty-third Congress (page 690, volume 28, United States Statutes at Large), be amended by inserting the word "Alaska" in the last line of the third paragraph of said act, after the word "Alabama" and preceding the word "and."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been explained to the House half a dozen times, and I think the committee understand it. Unless there is a general desire to debate it, I move that the committee rise and report it favorably to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will give us just a word of explanation. I do not remember about the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. This is a bill to make an inspection district of vessels and boilers in the District of Alaska for the purpose of inspecting a number of vessels about to be used in the Alaskan trade. There are some forty or fifty of them. I have here a communication which I have received since the matter was before the House, or attempted to be brought before the House, from the supervising inspector in California, urging the immediate passage of this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the bill reported unanimously?

Mr. PAYNE. It is reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, really I have reluctance to interfere with anything that might not be regarded as directly concerning me. This happens to be a matter in which my constituents are directly interested, involving my district. I did not know that my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] contemplated bringing this matter before the House. He brought it before the House some time since. At that time, as he says, he explained its provisions, and I likewise explained to the House the objections to the measure. Upon an objection to unanimous consent made by a gentleman on the floor, the bill went over.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will tell you what are the objections to this measure, in order that you may understand the matter. If you then feel that you should pass the bill notwithstanding that, you will, of course, be controlled by your own discretion, against which I would at no time urge objection.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is right when he says that he has a communication from the officer at San Francisco recommending the passage of this bill.

As the law now stands, the inspection district at that end of the country includes Washington and Alaska. The ships are inspected at the city of Seattle, the main entrepôt. Since the Alaskan excitement and the development of the country, ships to the number of more than a hundred a day are going to and fro during the season of navigation. Many companies are organized, and insist upon putting upon the water ships which are worthless, and many of which jeopardize the safety of freight and the lives of passengers intrusted to them. Many of these companies have sought to get their ships inspected and passed at the port of Seattle.

The inspector there, Captain Bryant, is not of my politics. He is a gentleman who for a long time had experience in the State of Maine, on the waters and in the ports there. He has been captain of a vessel and has had vast experience, one of the most highly respected men in all the Pacific Slope. He and his assistants have constantly declined to permit these unseaworthy vessels to proceed to sea. He has insistently opposed the granting of licenses to them, and it has brought upon him something of a warfare. Petitions have been circulated asking to have him removed, upon the ground that he is an arbitrary inspector and has unjustly reported against vessels going to sea, much to the detriment of certain companies.

These gentlemen have sent petitions to Washington seeking his removal; but upon investigation the officers here in Washington have reported him a most competent, careful, and vigilant man, and the statement has been made that his errors, if any, lie in an abundance of caution, and not in recklessness of conduct. Not only have they indorsed his course, but in every wise have manifested their approval and requested that he be not disturbed.

You will at once see, gentlemen, that something had to be done by these companies in order to put their ships upon traffic before August, at which time the Alaskan traffic to a degree closes. So they have, as I am informed, devised this plan. I have been so informed by papers and resolutions from the different assemblages of harbors, which are the assemblies of masters and captains, and through the civic bodies, which are the chambers of commerce and other similar bodies.

Petitions have come to me reciting that these different individuals and companies who are making war against the inspector are doing so for the purpose of allowing their unseaworthy vessels to go upon the waters, and that they have now devised the plan of creating a subinspection district, removing the headquarters from Seattle to St. Michaels, and having appointed there a man who would be accommodating to their desires.

Instead of bringing the vessels, then, to the port of Seattle, where they must now be inspected, in their circulating round they will run from St. Michaels to different parts of Alaska, back to Puget Sound and thence to St. Michaels, where the favored inspection may be had, and they be sent to sea in a condition which will jeopardize the safety of freight and the lives of passengers. It is urged that if you create this inspection district and divide it from Puget Sound you merely subserve the purpose of these gentleman.

Now, it is urged in opposition to this bill—and I bring it to your attention—that if this were an honest effort on the part of these gentlemen to create an inspection district, because of an overburden, the purpose could just as well be accomplished by sending a deputy from San Francisco or from Seattle to St. Michaels. He could there inspect all these vessels, if it were necessary.

But in order to demonstrate and accentuate the fact that there is no necessity for it, I have stated to you the purpose which I understand underlies this effort. It is now insisted that there shall be an officer created at St. Michaels for the purpose of avoiding this close scrutiny, this life-saving service, which has been inaugurated by this efficient gentleman, whose faithful and intelligent discharge of his duty at the city of Seattle has secured the approval of all parties except the owners of these unseaworthy craft.

I do not speak of a man that is of my party faith and holding any office under my party's creed. I speak of an efficient man, rendering efficient service, and whose efficient service in the salvation of life and cargo is now being rewarded in the presentation of a bill, which my friend is anxious to culminate in this matter by those seeking to make his success in the discharge of his duty impracticable. I have thus expressed the consensus of opinion that has come to me from all sources and from all organizations of seamen; and if these be the reasons that animate this measure, it certainly ought to be defeated. If the reasons which I have given in good faith are not correct, then I ought to be defeated, and that is an end of this matter.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. Does this contemplate the appointment of a supervising inspector, an inspector of hulls, and an inspector of boilers?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. Making three officers?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. To the latter part of my friend's inquiry, whether this provides for three officers, I am unable to assent. That it creates an office performing three duties I admit. How they will divide it out I do not know.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. As to this gentleman at Seattle, is he able to go on and perform the duty imposed on him in inspecting all these ships?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. From the information that comes to me, not only can he and assistant do the work, but he can do double the work. I also call to your attention, since my friend from Kansas gives me the cue, that this enlarged number of vessels which it is insisted shall be inspected are inspected in the two months covered by the months of June to August; and this extra number can not only be served in that single district, but double the number could be served.

In many instances he declines to let the ships go out, and it is insisted that he does not let them go out, not because they are unworthy, but because he does not have force enough to inspect them. He says there is not a ship that has been put on on those waters in the last ten years that he is not personally acquainted with and knows everything about. If there is a doubt, he casts the doubt against the ship rather than let it go out until properly equipped.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is not the superior officer of this inspector the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The officer directly his superior is General Dumont, the Inspector-General, a most competent and accommodating official, and under him is Mr. Bermingham, the inspector at San Francisco; then ranks Inspector Bryant.

Mr. DOCKERY. Have these superior officers indorsed the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I am informed through the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that the Supervising Inspector-General, Dumont, has so indorsed it, and that it has also been indorsed by the supervising inspector at San Francisco. As to the latter's indorsement, I have nothing to say in its favor; but as to General Dumont, his indorsement could not have been procured unless he felt the measure a just one. He and I merely differ. A difference grew up between Inspector Bryant and his immediate superior at San Francisco. San Francisco is the home of many of these vessels that were condemned, and that was where the trouble was created and has ever since been.

All I know from the Treasury Department is what my friend from New York tells me and my private conversation with General Dumont. I have no further information than that, although I have gone frequently to the Department for that purpose without more success.

Until more information comes to me, I must continue to oppose this measure. It is detrimental to the commerce of my city and is a war upon an old and trusted friend and public servant.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that general debate upon this bill be closed in ten minutes, so that we can get through with the bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed in ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington is entirely mistaken about the intention and scope of this bill. Entirely so. In the first place, with reference to this inspector at Seattle which the gentleman from Washington speaks of, General Dumont, the Supervising Inspector here in Washington, and the inspector in San Francisco, the supervising inspector there, both commend him as a most worthy officer, and they have no objection in the world to his keeping out these old hulks that come under his inspection at Seattle. What we want to do is to put the same kind of a man at St. Michael, in Alaska, to inspect the same kind of vessels that go in there.

I will ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee and the recommendation of the Supervising Inspector-General, General Dumont, and also the letter of the supervising inspector at San Francisco. I ask the Clerk to read the letter to General Dumont first.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the bill, if I am not mistaken, it is for the appointment of an inspector for Alaska?

Mr. PAYNE. An inspector for Alaska, where there is none. If the House will give attention to the reading of these letters, I do not think there will be any trouble about passing this bill or the propriety of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

STEAM-VESSEL INSPECTION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING INSPECTOR FIRST DISTRICT,
San Francisco, Cal., March 29, 1898.

SIR: I again respectfully call the attention of the Department to the constantly growing and absolute necessity for a local board of inspectors of steam vessels in Alaska (Sitka district).

I understand that the bill providing for such inspectors passed the Senate and was introduced in the House, where it went over to enable a member of Congress in Washington to ascertain if it would interfere in any way with the Seattle board, which probably desires assistant inspectors appointed. Such assistants would in no way help out the situation in Alaska, as they could not issue licenses in that Territory, nor could they issue certificates in the Seattle district should that board be sent to Alaska for two or three months each year.

The Alaska board should be provided with a clerk, as its necessarily long absence from its office, perhaps two months or more at a time when on a tour of inspection of the Yukon River, would leave no one to attend to the correspondence and other matters of the office during its absence.

Alaska is, as you are aware, possessed of thousands of miles of seacoast and inland waters, which, owing to the influx of gold searchers, has called into existence there a large number of steamers, some at remote and somewhat inaccessible points. Such can be reached only by chance. I have now applications for the inspection of twenty-five fishing steamers in northwestern Alaska. Surely some provision should be made for their inspection and the examination of their officers as to their qualifications for license.

The Seattle board can this year, as heretofore, inspect the steamers in southeastern Alaska, but can not, without detriment to the service, be absent from its home office about three months inspecting steamers in northwestern Alaska and the Yukon. Next year a local board at Sitka could inspect the steam vessels in southeastern Alaska heretofore inspected by the Seattle board before going to the northwest, and thus relieve the Seattle board of extra duty and absence from its home port. Neither the local board at Portland or San Francisco can be spared for so long a time as requisite to inspect Alaskan steamers.

If provision be made for a local board for Alaska, permit me to suggest that it be selected as early as practicable and in this city, where it can receive the necessary practical instructions for the proper performance of its duties before leaving for Alaska, where it must of necessity, from its isolation from the outside world, be thrown upon its own resources for a considerable time. Therefore it should be well equipped from the start.

Very respectfully,

JOHN BERMINGHAM,
Supervising Inspector, First District.

Gen. JAMES A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, if the Clerk will read the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury at the bottom of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1898.

SIR: The attention of Congress is called to the fact that there are large numbers of light-draft river steamers being constructed for trade on the Yukon River, to accommodate the anticipated large movement of passengers and freight to the Klondike gold fields.

The steamers referred to will mostly be shipped in sections from the various places where they are being constructed, the parts to be assembled and put together after reaching St. Michaels.

In order that the hulls and boilers of these steamers may be properly inspected in accordance with the requirements of Title LII, Revised Statutes, and be manned by duly licensed masters, pilots, and engineers, it is deemed by this Department of the greatest importance that a local board of inspectors be created for the customs district of Alaska, for the purpose of inspecting the steamers referred to and the licensing of the officers thereof, in order that the traveling public visiting the Klondike regions may receive the benefits of the steamboat-inspection laws to which they are entitled.

I have the honor to submit herewith the draft of a bill, prepared by the Supervising Inspector-General, that if adopted by Congress will accomplish the object sought.

Respectfully, yours, L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee have followed the reading of the letters, they will see the absolute necessity for this legislation. Heretofore, before the discovery of gold in Alaska, there have been so few steamers engaged in trade that they were inspected by the board at Seattle, composed of an inspector of boilers and an inspector of hulls. I may as well say to the House that the salary of inspectors depends upon the number of vessels they inspect in the course of the year, and that the maximum involved is, I believe, 100 vessels. At any rate, the number of vessels as fixed beyond which the salary can not be increased has long since been passed at Seattle. The inspector of boilers and the inspector of hulls inspect a great many more vessels at that port than is required for the maximum salary. If this business is taken away, still the inspectors at Seattle get the maximum salary.

Now, there is no other way to have these vessels inspected. The vessels are now taken on larger steamers or vessels to St. Michaels, on the Yukon River, transported in parts or sections, and then assembled to engage in that trade; and for the protection of life and property it is absolutely necessary that the Government have some inspectors there at St. Michaels to perform that duty. The inspectors at Seattle can not do it; the inspectors at San Francisco can not do it. There has been a suggestion made by the Department that in case the bill did not pass they would have to appoint assistant inspectors at San Francisco and send inspectors to St. Michaels to perform this duty.

That would not save anything to the Government. They could not send the assistants there, because the assistants are not authorized to sign the documents after the inspection is made—the certificates; but there is a supervising inspector in San Francisco, and he could remain with the assistants and sign the certificates of inspection. But, of course, that would be a useless ceremony to go through. There does not seem to be any other way except to pass this bill, unless, for the mere whim of the gentleman from Washington, you think it is better to allow the vessels without inspection to engage in trade, transporting life and property at the risk of being blown up or going to the bottom of the river in case the vessels are unseaworthy, simply because the gentleman seems to think there is some particular local interest in Seattle that will be subserved by not doing this thing for the District of Alaska.

But I can assure the gentleman it will make no difference with the inspectors at Seattle; they will get all the business they can do; they will get business sufficient to give them the maximum salary they are entitled to. It will not curtail their fees in the slightest degree, and the gentleman will get their votes all the same, if he can get them, if this measure passes.

As I understand the gentleman from Washington in private conversation, and I had a right to so understand, he told me three weeks ago that he would raise no objection to the bill when it came up in the House if he only had a chance to explain. The bill came up, and after the gentleman had made his explanation some other gentleman made an objection to the consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Seattle immediately crossed the Hall to me and said he would get the gentleman who made the objection to withdraw it, so I could get the bill before the House. Now, I think it time the bill passed. I think the men ought to be appointed. They ought to be instructed. They ought to be sent to St. Michaels to inspect these vessels. The Treasury Department says there are forty or fifty vessels there that should be inspected at once.

Mr. SULZER. How many additional inspectors does the bill create?

Mr. PAYNE. Only two—an inspector of boilers and an inspector of hulls.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired. The bill will now be read for amendments.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am really a little at a loss to understand the inflammable indignation that my esteemed friend from New York takes upon himself in this matter and which has prompted him to inform the House that this bill would pass unless it were to conciliate some "whim of the gentleman from Washington." Sir, a gentleman who rises here to oppose a matter in which his own district is interested ought not to be characterized as expressing a "whim" of his own. Besides, I have not manifested to this House in any wise whatever that I had any "whim" in regard to this matter to be gratified or opposed. I do not know what it is within the gentleman that causes him to give that construction to my opposition to this measure.

He says, Mr. Chairman, that I told him in private conversation I would not object to the measure. If there are gentlemen in this House who feel it appropriate that private conversations should always be related, when the narration may serve their ends, then let such gentlemen detail those private conversations as they really were and not as they were not. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman call it "a private conversation" when, after he has objected to a bill and I have told him I want to bring it up, he says he will withdraw his objection? Does he call that "a private conversation?"

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Now, if the petulant impetuosity of my distinguished friend can be submerged for a moment in silence [laughter], I will proceed. I hope my friend will take his seat and be calm. I respond to him by saying that what I told him was that when this matter was brought up I would not object to its consideration. I repeat that assertion. I told him that I would not object to its consideration when he sought unanimous consent. Such has ever been my practice here. I have never objected to the consideration of any measure in which any other gentleman was interested, whether it affected me directly or otherwise.

But I have never stated to my friend that I would not oppose his measure when it was considered, and my esteemed friends in this House will all bear me witness that when this matter did come up in the House, the distinguished Speaker occupying the chair, I asked the Speaker to give me recognition while I explained my opposition to the bill. I made no objection to its consideration. I opposed its passage, as I am doing now. It is true that another gentleman did object. It is likewise true that subsequently I did see the gentleman from New York and assured him that objections to the consideration of the bill when unanimous consent was asked, I would do what I might to avoid. I stand by that.

I do not understand my friend from New York. I do not understand what has seized him all at once, that he should find it necessary at this time to express himself on this subject without addressing himself strictly to the objections I make to the bill, unless he is without further mental invention and has reached that unhappy condition which we are told some of the Mississippi steamboats sometimes reach, when every time they proceed to blow their whistles their engines have to stop. [Laughter and applause.] I do not want the reflective powers of my friend to be stultified in that manner. I prefer his invention of excuses and reasons have a full flow and not be forced to personal characterization of a gentleman's motives for lack of something better to say.

I have again to say to the gentleman and to the House that I have no more personal knowledge of this matter than he has. I have such knowledge as I have been compelled to gain from the only sources accessible to any of us—from the people of my State, from these different organizations that have sent here their protests against this measure, informing me that this is a fight between the local board and this gentleman at San Francisco who makes the recommendation in favor of the bill.

It is true—but I did not refer to it, because I desired to divorce this subject from the slightest personal consideration—that these inspectors say that during nine months of each year they make comparatively nothing; that during the two very full months, when a large number of vessels are plying to and fro, they must make the maximum of their compensation. Their personal interests may to some degree influence them; and I agree with my friend from New York——

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman know that those men get a yearly compensation based on the number of vessels inspected during the year, so that it does not matter whether the mass of their work is done during three months or twelve months?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I must repeat my statement that those men must reach a certain number of vessels inspected before they can get the highest compensation. If within the whole year they reach the maximum, then the gentleman's position is well taken. But if you take two months out of their year, so that they can not reach the maximum during the year, their compensation is, of course, proportionately diminished.

Then comes the other feature of the case. All the commerce that has come to the locality I represent will be to this extent cut off, and the persons to be affected make objection on that ground, and I represent their objections.

I have stated this case to you, gentlemen, with complete fairness. I have dissembled nothing. I have given you the reasons in opposition to this measure as voiced to me from sources which best can speak. Of the commercial bodies competent to form a judgment on this question, not one of them sustains this measure—all of them oppose it and accentuate that which I now say to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, without asking further time, I close by saying that I am called upon to oppose the bill because my constituency ask me to do it. I have given the reasons against the bill as I have derived them from the persons best competent to speak. If my friend from New York has shown reasons of greater weight in support of the bill than the objections I have urged against it, then you, gentlemen, know your duty and will perform it. I am not one to complain. But I think the bill ought to be defeated because the motive behind it is to put unworthy vessels upon the sea and unjustly war against a deserving community.

Mr. PAYNE. It still remains true, Mr. Chairman, that unless this bill passes the vessels on the Yukon River can not be inspected by the inspectors at Seattle. I hope, therefore, the bill will be passed.

I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DINGLEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration Senate bill No. 3624, had directed him to report the same to the House favorably without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEWIS of Washington) there were—ayes 55, noes 29.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PAYNE. Evidently, Mr. Speaker, no quorum is present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7445. An act to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.," and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3457. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. OSBORNE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also lay before the House, if there be no objection, pending the motion to adjourn, several requests of gentlemen to print remarks.

Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin asks leave to print remarks on the joint resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. VINCENT asks leave to print remarks upon the joint Cuban resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and

Mr. BARNEY asks leave to print remarks on the same joint resolution.

Is there objection to these several leaves to print?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. It was my intention, Mr. Speaker, to have submitted a request for unanimous consent that all members who desired to do so might have leave to print on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made.

Mr. BARTLETT. So I understood.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6095) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Private Land Claims to try and determine the title to a part of the Yeleta grant, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1074); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 4223, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 9875) for changing and rebuilding the Moline bridge across Rock River, in the county of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, accompanied by a report (No. 1075); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1623) to increase the pension of Susan D. Yates, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1072); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9195) granting a pension to Foster C. Carl, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1073); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8950) increasing the pension of Mrs. Sarah Fry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1076); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9140) granting an increase of pension to Felix Tait, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1077); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (R. H. 9729) to increase the pension of William S. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1078); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5092) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1079); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 9861) to increase the efficiency of the National Guard and the United States Naval Reserve—to the Committee on the Militia.

By Mr. FOOTE: A bill (H. R. 9867) for the relief of Frank Hanmer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9868) granting a pension to Caroline Lathrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9869) granting an increase of pension to Erasmus D. Fillmore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEATWOLE: A bill (H. R. 9870) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Donlan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9871) to increase the pension of Herman Piel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9872) to correct the military record of George E. Day—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9873) granting a pension to Dennis O'Shey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LESTER: A bill (H. R. 9874) for the relief of John C. Coleman, of Emanuel County, Ga.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHOWALTER: A bill (H. R. 9876) correcting the military record of Jeremiah Friend, late of Company I, Seventy-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 9877) for the relief of D. G. Rice—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARHAM: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cedarville, Cal., in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cedarville, Cal., for the passage of bills to forbid the interstate transmission of gambling matter by telegraph and to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BENNETT: Petition of Aaron Claflin and 5 other citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BULL: Petition of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Providence, R. I., in favor of raising the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Providence, R. I., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. BURTON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cleveland, Ohio, for the passage of a bill to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cleveland, Ohio, for the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CANNON: Petition of citizens of Lockport, Ill., in favor of the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Woonsocket, R. I., for the passage of a bill to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Woonsocket, R. I., and Woman's Christian Temperance Union and church of Westerly, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Woonsocket, R. I., and Woman's Christian Temperance Union and First Westerly Church, of Westerly, R. SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1898.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. J. MANTON SMITH, D. D., of London, England.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the ordinary morning business may, by unanimous consent, be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota, that the ordinary morning business be laid aside? The Chair hears no objection, and that is the order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3391) for the relief of W. H. Barnard and Robert Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 5511) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross with its track the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park;

A bill (H. R. 6468) authorizing the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias to erect and maintain a sanitarium and bath house on the Government reservation at the city of Hot Springs, Ark.;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 14) authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., in 1898, to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 24) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the act of December 21, 1861, and July 16, 1862.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 3457) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black River, at or near Pocahontas, Ark.; and

A bill (H. R. 7445) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.," and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that Senate joint resolution 149 be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota requests that Senate joint resolution 149 be laid before the Senate. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 149) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, on yesterday evening I had the honor of obtaining the floor for the purpose of making some remarks upon the resolution before the Senate and upon the subject under consideration generally. I stated then, before an adjournment was taken, that on the 10th day of December, 1896, I had the honor of addressing the Senate on the joint resolution (S. R. 168) introduced by me at that time, declaring the extinction of Spanish title and the termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Gulf of Mexico.

On that occasion, referring to the condition of affairs then existing in Cuba, I called attention to the magnitude of the problems which even in that early day of the struggle of the Cuban patriots for independence had grown out of that condition. Those problems I then took opportunity to observe would demand solution in the early future, and I ventured the assertion that the determination of the policy to be pursued in the solution of those problems would result in the independence of Cuba and lead to the conclusion that a people with such a history and such an education as the Spanish people have must be expelled from all participation in the control of any territorial possessions on this hemisphere.

Since that time the deplorable condition of affairs in Cuba has become more and more intensified, and the necessity for action by this Government, upon the lines of policy which at that time were indicated by me, has become more and more apparent, until now the hour for action is about to strike.

Step by step Spain has been pushed back from dominion in the New World, as she was crowded from control in Europe. Now she is to lose another of her possessions. Her oppressed subjects in Cuba are about to become the arbiters of their own destiny. This result is inevitable; for, as has been aptly remarked by some one:

> Some incurable vice in her organization, or it may be in the temperament of her people, neutralizes all the advantages Spain ought to derive from her stubborn hardihood, her nearly perfect capacity for endurance, and the somber genius alike for war, for art, and for literature which have so often marked her sons. No race outside her own borders, even if Spanish by origin, has ever been able to endure her reign, and every race which has resisted has ultimately succeeded in withdrawing itself from her control.

If permitted to pursue her pitiless course in Cuba, she would go on without remorse, and, if she could, she would exterminate the million and a half of patriots who deprecate her tyrannical policies and her cruel and bloody methods in peace as well as in war. Her ruthlessness is apparent in the conditions now existing in Cuba as related by four eyewitnesses who are members of this Senate.

The story as told by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has challenged the attention of the whole civilized world. That narrative shows that at our very door the cruelty of Spain is blackening the history of the time with deeds that cry aloud to heaven for vengeance. With a careful pen the honorable Senator wrote his tale of woe. He gave to it no coloring that truth did not absolutely require him to use. He did not allow his emotions to lead him into any expression of anger. He compelled himself to relate the harrowing facts which had come under his observation without using any of the forms of indignant speech which were doubtless suggested to his mind.

He told the story of Cuban suffering fully, it is true, but with a gentleness of expression that, under the circumstances, was wonderful, and in almost any other man than the judicial-minded Senator from Vermont would have been impossible. But this story of suffering and outrage, thus mitigated in the telling, has aroused the indignation of America and stirred the conscience of the world.

This distressful story was corroborated by the distinguished Senators from New Hampshire, Nebraska, and Mississippi, all of whom have visited the island and have borne testimony in this Chamber to the cruelty of Spanish warfare in Cuba in a most eloquent and forcible manner, giving the story over again of the horrible condition of the suffering and death of the reconcentrados.

In addition to the statements of these distinguished gentlemen, General Lee, in his testimony before the Committee on Foreign Relations since his arrival, says that he regards the condition of the reconcentrados as being just as bad as it has ever been; that great suffering still exists and will continue to exist until they are relieved by the hand of charity from this or some country other than Spain, and that very little of the reported appropriation by Spain of $600,000 for the sustenance of the reconcentrados will be spent for the relief of the suffering people there.

That there is any extremity to which Spain would not go in an attempt to wreak her desire for vengeance upon the United States I do not believe. The officials, in the exercise of authority conferred by her, have robbed, imprisoned, and even murdered citizens of this Republic. Our flag has been insulted repeatedly on her soil, and while in the discharge of their duties representatives of this Government have been threatened with violence. And, worse still, one of our battle ships, while on a friendly call at Havana, was destroyed by the explosion of a mine and 266 of her crew murdered in cold blood.

These heroes were not permitted to die in battle striking blows in the service of their country. They were assailed by Spanish treachery working in darkness. But, although they were not permitted to die in the hurly-burly of battle, while exalted into patriotic fervor by the excitement of war, they will never be forgotten by their grateful countrymen. In no part of the land or sea are they unknown.

Sir, this tragedy has aroused a spirit of resentment throughout the length and breadth of the Republic, and the patriotic people of all sections of the country are demanding that the President and the Congress shall resent the assault upon the Maine as an act of war by Spain, and that the resenting blow shall be struck without unnecessary delay.

Sir, there seems to be good reason for this demand. All the evidence goes to show that the Maine was destroyed by an outside force; that whatever the destroying agency was, it was placed in position in the harbor by the officials of the Spanish Government; that the officials of the Spanish Government, whose duty it was to know of the existence and location of the destroying agency, conducted the vessel to its anchorage, and that only officials of Spain could have used or have permitted others to use the means by which the destroying agency was utilized for the purpose for which it was intended.

The testimony of Captain Sigsbee, commander of the Maine, shows that every precaution had been taken to prevent accidents; that every portion of the ship had been inspected, including the magazines, coal bunkers, etc., and that he felt sure that the ship was blown up by an outside force.

Ensign Powelson, who was present on the wreck of the Maine every day while the divers were making their investigations, speaking of the important discoveries made by them during his presence, testifies that the bow of the vessel where the explosion occurred was pushed up and that diver Morgan, while walking on the bottom, fell into a hole on the port side and reported that everything in the vicinity of this hole seemed bent upward. The plates were found split, forming a V, pushed over and bent down over the 10-inch magazine. He further says that diver Smith worked himself forward and down to the keel on the bottom plating, at the point where the keel went into the mud, at which point he found a hole in the mud about 6 feet deep and 15 feet in diameter.

General Lee, in his testimony before the Committee on Foreign Relations, stated that he was satisfied that the explosion causing the destruction of the Maine came from a force from outside of the ship. He also states that the man who did the work of destroying the Maine must have been an officer thoroughly acquainted with explosives of all sorts, and one who knew all about the manner of producing the explosion.

He further states, as was stated here on the floor by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], that upon the night of the disaster the Spaniards were rejoicing among themselves, drinking champagne in honor of the event, and in many portions of the city were making merry on account of the destruction of the Maine, its officers and crew.

From all this and much more that can be stated of the evidence taken by the naval board and by the Committee on Foreign Relations there seems to be no way by which Spain can escape responsibility for the destruction of the battle ship or by which we can overlook the force of the suggestion that the destruction of the vessel, under the circumstances stated, was in fact effected by the treachery and work of Spanish officials.

If the assertion is made that war can not be justified by circumstantial evidence that the nation upon which war is to be made has been guilty of an offense which she denies, viz, the destruction of the Maine, and that only in the extremest of cases could we be justified in acting on the principle of international law that a state may interfere in a hostile manner in the affairs of another state guilty of a wrong against humanity or liberty, we would be justified, nevertheless, in interference with the action of Spain in Cuba in the interests of commerce and the repose of our own society.

Long ago, indeed, acting outside of every consideration of sympathy for the Cuban patriots, acting wholly in our own interests, we should have in some way avoided the necessity under which we have acted, of being in effect an ally of Spain in her efforts to suppress a people who are so gallantly struggling for freedom.

But, sir, whatever may have been our sins of omission against liberty in the armed controversy in progress between Spain and Cuba, we propose now to do our duty to God and humanity, liberty, and to ourselves by saying to Spain: "Hold your hand! You shall not outrage liberty and humanity in Cuba any longer. You must withdraw your army and abdicate your authority."

This we must say now, and if Spain shall see proper to resent our action we shall not hesitate to take up the gauntlet and appeal to the God of battles and to the judgment of mankind to justify us in our course.

Mr. President, it is said that Spain will appeal to other monarchical governments to aid her in her struggle with the United States, and that she will base her appeal for assistance upon the ground that our interference in her attempt to suppress insurrection is a violation of the doctrine asserted by the allied powers of Europe in 1821, when Greece was struggling for her independence, namely:

> That useful and necessary changes in legislation and administration ought only to emanate from the free will and intelligent conviction of those whom God has rendered responsible for power. All that deviates from this line necessarily leads to disorder, commotions, and evils far more insufferable than those which they pretend to remedy.

This is the doctrine of the divine right of kings, and if it were asserted by a world in arms, America would be compelled to resist it to the bitter end and set up in opposition to it the divine right of the people to govern themselves. In the language of Webster, speaking in the Senate of the United States seventy-five years ago:

> That the people hold their fundamental privileges from the sovereign power is a sentiment not easy to be diffused in this age any further than it is enforced by the direct operation of military means.

Against this doctrine we have set up the American doctrine "That useful and necessary changes in legislation and administration ought to emanate from the free will and intelligent conviction of the people." Tried by this principle, the right of Spain to rule in Cuba must be denied, since it is a fact that a large majority of the people of the island desire independence and the right to rule themselves.

In the light of this fact and of other facts that appeal to our humanity and to our business, commercial, and political interests stands displayed to all the world the duty of America to interfere in the affairs of Cuba and compel Spain to withdraw her army and her civil authority from the island and permit the people thereof to enjoy the inalienable rights of man, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In attempted refutation of all that has been said of the misgovernment of Cuba and of the cruelty of Spain, the assertion has been made, and is even yet being made, that there exists no real cause of complaint by us against Spain, no cause that can justify us in interfering in the pending conflict in Cuba; that a sensational press has produced, without good reason, the excited condition of the public mind which is demanding that our Government shall take up arms against the Spaniard and expel him from the continent.

This is an attempt to hide from the world the truth of the present situation; it is another of the many attempts that selfish interests have made to excuse the influence of kingly power at the expense of liberty, and to exalt peace in the humiliation of that spirit of freedom which should be ever slow to wrath, indeed, but always swift in vindication of its glorious mission and of its exalted dignity in the affairs of mankind.

As much as any other man I deprecate the sensationalism of the press, which perverts truth and makes a molehill of fact a mountain of falsehood; but the sensationalism of the press has not made Spain, in all her history, vindictive and cruel; a nation productive in wonderful fertility of great men, but of incapable statesmanship and bloody deeds; the nation of the inquisition, of the Duke of Alva, and of General Weyler. The press did not create the facts which have been established irrefutably by the testimony delivered in this presence by the honorable Senators from Vermont, New Hampshire, Nebraska, and Mississippi.

The sensationalism of the press did not compel Weyler to resort to the system of warfare, repugnant to all our ideas, under which hundreds of thousands of inoffensive men, women, and children have been subjected to the horrors of slow death by starvation; under which Ruiz and others were murdered; under which an innocent Cuban maiden was imprisoned and threatened with a fate the anticipation of which created a sentiment of horror in the heart of every man and woman in America.

Was it the sensationalism of the press that prompted a minister of Spain, accredited to this Government, to insult the President of the Republic and that instigated the crime of the destruction of the battle ship Maine and the murder of hundreds of her gallant crew? No, no; the press of America has done nothing more in this instance than to hold the mirror up to Spain and show to that nation her own frightfully distorted features and to reflect upon her vision the story of her crimes against God and humanity, crimes the bloodiest in all the annals of time.

Mr. President, the press has told the truth, but not all the truth, concerning affairs in Cuba, because the situation is so full of horrors it can not be overstated, can not, indeed, be adequately stated in all the length and breadth of its appalling horribleness. It has appeared to me since this discussion has been going on that the press failed to tell the whole truth even as much as we had imagined sometimes that it was telling more than the truth for the purpose of sensation.

Mr. President, in the contemplation of this situation I have been forced to the conclusion that there is but one course that we can pursue with honor. In an effort to alleviate the sufferings of the people of Cuba we have expostulated with Spain and have endeavored to induce her to wage her war of suppression in accordance with the rules of civilized warfare; but our expostulations have been in vain.

She has persisted in her system of inhuman warfare, feebly fighting the insurgents, cruelly starving unarmed men and helpless women and children, insulting and murdering American citizens, and demonstrating in many ways her inability to govern and her determination to listen to nothing but the promptings of a national pride out of which flows a constant stream of misery and death.

Contemplating this condition, I have been forced to the conclusion that we must interfere and put an end to the war of Spain upon the Cubans; that we must do this in the interests of humanity as well as in our own interest.

Sir, to this conclusion the President has come, with many thousands of his fellow-citizens who deprecate the idea of war. He has desired, as every other truly patriotic man has desired, the settlement of the Cuban question by peaceful methods; but he has never been an advocate of the debasing policy of "peace at any price." He knows that peace purchased by dishonorable concessions is debasing and dangerous to popular government; and now, having failed in his laudable efforts to induce Spain to accept the suggestions made by him and to act upon humane principles, he has taken a stand in the interest of the American people and of humanity.

Mr. President, I have no desire for war. It is painful to me to believe that war is imminent, but there seems to be no honorable escape from it. Horrible as war is, yet there are other things worse than war. No honorable-spirited people can afford to sit silently by and see tens and hundreds of thousands of people helpless and starving to death at the nation's door. It matters not whether they are of our own nation or in a country under the domination of some other.

It is, in my judgment, the duty of this Government to intervene in behalf of such suffering people, whatever may be the consequence to our nation in doing so. It is worse than war in its consequence upon us to permit such a condition of affairs in Cuba to longer continue. To do so is a manifestation of indifference and cowardice and neglect of our plain duty as a Christian people.

It may be said that the President should have proceeded to the patriotic task he has entered upon in some other way than along the lines upon which he proposes to act; that he should have recognized or have recommended the recognition by Congress of the independence of the Republic of Cuba either before or at the same time he asked for an authority to intervene with armed force in the affairs of the island.

In this criticism of the President's action I can not, after serious deliberation, concur.

The recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, unaccompanied by any other act on our part, would not accomplish the purpose we have in view—the immediate relief of the Cuban population from starvation and the horrors of the barbarous system of Spanish warfare. The recognition of the independence of Cuba would not be an act of war against Spain, and it would not be a justifiable cause of war by Spain against the United States. It would leave the situation unrelieved in the only way that will be satisfactory to the people of this country.

Recognition of Cuba's independence without immediate interference would include, of course, the recognition of belligerency and entitle this Government to insist that the war should be conducted in accordance with those humane laws that have been ordained by the common consent of the civilized world. But this action would give to Spain more time in which to oppress the Cubans while conducting a diplomatic controversy with us; more time in which to invoke and procure the moral if not the physical support of the European nations. But, it is said, we might interfere with arms at the very moment we would recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic.

But is this true? Could we, if we recognized the independence of the insurgent government, interpose in our own way with our Army and Navy? Would we not then be compelled to act in any armed action against Spain in Cuba in accordance with the wishes of the Cuban Republic and under its authority? And are we sure that under such conditions we would give effect to the wishes of our own Government in reference to Spain? Would we not, by such action, forego our right to punish Spain in our own way for the wrongs she has done to us as a nation, for her shocking violations of the rules of civilized warfare?

I am not forgetful of the suggestion that has been made, that intervention without recognition of the Cuban republican government creates possibilities of financial complications and conditions respecting the ultimate settlement between Spain and Cuba; but upon reflection I have come to the conclusion that there is no force in this suggestion; that it is unworthy of consideration under the circumstances of the existing crisis. And this leads me to repeat what I have said elsewhere in reference to possible financial speculations, viz, that any man, whether a member of Congress or otherwise, who would attempt to make a dollar out of such a crisis is too mean to live. Men who attempt to speculate on the calamities of the poor Cubans or on the blowing up of the Maine ought to be shot.

It therefore seems to me that intervention as suggested by the President—intervention without recognition—is the wisest policy, being the policy under which we can act without delay and without the danger of embarrassing complications with the insurgent authorities.

But I desire to say, Mr. President, that when the time comes, after Spanish rule is driven from that island and after the Cuban patriots have been freed from their domination, I hope the President of the United States, through any agency he may desire, upon looking over that country, may find out what the proper government ought to be, and if those gallant patriots who have been making the fight for liberty have a government there such as ought to be allowed to stand, that he will recognize it immediately after the war shall have been over.

But intervention is the policy under which we may now say to Spain, "You have outraged human nature; you are endangering the peace of the world; you have shown yourself in the government of Cuba to be incapable both in peace and in war; you have insulted this Government, have robbed, imprisoned, and murdered our citizens, and have destroyed great interests of the people of the United States, and now you must withdraw your armies and your civil officers from Cuba so that peace may be made enduring in the island and the people's rights be no longer outraged by tyranny and misgovernment."

The only question, then, that remains is, Have we the right to intervene under international law? This right in us, under existing conditions, I have no doubt exists.

In the report made by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, which is one of the ablest reports ever made to the Senate, in my judgment, I find quotations which have already been read to the Senate, but I shall take occasion to read them again. I shall refer to only a part of what appears in the report.

Arntz, a writer on international law, maintains that the right of intervention exists, to copy from the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations:

1. When the institutions of one state violate or threaten to violate the rights of another state, or when such violation is the necessary consequence of its institutions and the impossibility of an orderly coexistence of states results therefrom.

2. When a government, acting entirely within the limits of its prerogatives of sovereignty, violates the rights of humanity, whether by measures contrary to the interests of other states or by excessive injustice and cruelty which deeply wounds public morals and civilization.

The right of intervention—

is a legitimate one, because however important may be the rights of sovereignty and independence, there is one thing of still greater importance, and that is the law of humanity and human society, which ought not to be outraged.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we can place the right to intervene upon that last sentence, written by the law writer Arntz, that the law of humanity and human society has been outraged by the course pursued by the Spanish army and the Spanish Government in starving to death the hundreds and thousands of poor noncombatants—old men, women, and children.

Without elaborating further the argument that we have a right to intervene, I may call attention to the fact that both President Cleveland and President McKinley have warned Spain that the time might come when, in the language of President McKinley in his message of December 6, 1897—

If it shall hereafter appear to be a duty, imposed by our obligations to ourselves, to civilization and humanity, to intervene with force, it shall be without fault on our part and only because the necessity for such action will be so clear as to command the support and approval of the civilized world.

Mr. President, the time has come when without fault on our part we must intervene in the affairs of Cuba, and that the President may be enabled to do so, he should be directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States.

Let us not hesitate to give to him that authority, and let us give it to him in the confident belief that even now is the day and the hour in which this Government, that was consolidated by the statesmanship of Washington and saved from destruction by the patriotism and wisdom of Lincoln, speaking by the voice of McKinley, shall demand the retirement of Spain from Cuba; and upon her refusal to comply the Republic will thunder this demand from the mouths of a thousand cannons.

Mr. President, I esteem it an honor that I am able to-day to say that I join in the support of the announced policy of President McKinley. I do not care whether he has dotted every "i" or crossed every "t" in his proclamation to the world; everybody knows that he has said plainly enough to Spain, and every American echoes the words, that the Government of Spain shall at once relinquish its authority and government on the Island of Cuba.

After the vote is taken upon the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, there will be but one mind and one voice in the United States.

However much my friends may hesitate and doubt as to the unimportant phrasing of the announcement, nobody on earth, not even Spain, will misconstrue or misunderstand our plain demand.

Mr. President, the greatest criminal trial of modern times is approaching a conclusion. The people of the entire world have been witnesses upon this trial. The indictment against the offender has been proclaimed to every land and has been read in every language.

The Kingdom of Spain has been the first and only nation to merit a reputation so awful in character or to achieve a place in history so completely unparalleled in infamy and wrong. The evidence has been given, and the inquest of the world is now sitting in solemn consideration of that evidence.

The announcement of the verdict is awaited with expectation by every country upon the earth. No other nation in many hundreds of years has been evicted arbitrarily from its holdings and driven into the complete and perfect disgrace of universal ostracism. The punishment is great; God knows that the crime was greater. The humiliation and the bitter disgrace of the fall of a nation which once owned nine-tenths of the great American continent are stupendous and terrific, even in contemplation, but that humiliation and disgrace, complete and awful as they are, do not in even a minute degree compare with the offenses and enormities chargeable against the Government of Spain.

The history of Spain is a history of more than a thousand years of concentrated cruelty. It is a history so extensive and continuous, made up of every conceivable variety of barbaric wrong and outrage, too often instituted by the direct authority of the Government itself, and the identity known to the world as the Kingdom of Spain is now justly and properly recognized as an "outlaw among nations."

It has always been a robber nation. It has always been the merciless appropriator of the property of others. While enjoying the honor of the discovery of America, she appropriated the countries, the islands, and the waters, spied out by that intrepid Italian navigator who commanded her ships and who first set his foot upon San Salvador.

The reward he received from Spain was precisely in kind and keeping with the reward Spain has always given to those who have performed meritorious services for her. He was imprisoned and punished, humiliated and degraded for the offense of adding to the Spanish domain the wondrous territory of the New World. All this territory which was formerly by virtue of discovery and occupation known as Spanish America, has become the home of political freemen, forever emancipated from the narrow and miserable control of a country which governed only by the sword, whose watchword was blood and whose inspiration was death.

From the fertile plains of Argentina far across the River Plata, from the heights of the Andes to the lowlands of the Amazon, from Yucatan to San Francisco, all the valleys and the mountains of Central America and over the entire country of Mexico, through the beautiful glades of Florida, the plains of Texas, almost the whole of the valleys of the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Yellowstone, the golden sands of the Sacramento, and the rugged mountain sides of the Columbia, all this vast and magnificent estate, now the home of twenty independent countries, was once by and through the genius and perseverance of Columbus, the property of Spain. And for all this Columbus received only chains and a prison cell.

And so, forward to the present day. So from 1492 to 1898, the story of Spanish inhumanity is just as true in the nineteenth century as it was in the days of the Inquisition. In Cuba, its ultimatum as held out to the reconcentrados has been simply the alternative of death by starvation or death by the machete. Human life in the Spanish lexicon is a thing of no value. General Weyler started out two years ago with what he termed a policy of pacification. He told his sovereign that in such and such a period he would pacify the insurgent provinces of Cuba.

How did he pacify them? He penned those poor noncombatant women, children, and old men up in barbed-wire inclosures and surrounded them by deep trochas and canals, where they could easily be pacified by the machete. Two hundred thousand Cubans of both sexes and of all ages sleep the sleep of pacification in their graves upon the soil once owned by them. The United States has waited with an awful waiting until by such methods Spain could pacify a people. If an American citizen was charged by mere suspicion with anything whatever, he was locked up in vile prison cells and held incomunicado for such unlimited time as his captors chose.

Thanks to the unwavering sense of justice of the people of the United States, the murderers and the outlaws who now exercise a brief show of authority in Cuba will soon become incomunicado until justice shall be satisfied and the avenging angel shall write the verdict and sentence of the offended world. And if the people of this country shall do nothing more in this century than drive the Spaniards from this country, we as a people shall earn the praises of every lover of freedom and humanity the world over.

Mr. BERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to yield to me for a moment, that I may read a telegram which has been forwarded to me.

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent to read a very important telegram to the Senate, which I desire to have spread upon the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLATT of New York. The telegram is as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 14, 1898.

To Hon. THOMAS C. PLATT:

At a meeting of the Republican Editorial Association of the State of New York, held in Buffalo to-day, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the situation is such as to impose upon the Administration of the United States duties the most responsible and the most delicate, involving the fate of thousands of human beings and the destiny of Cuba; and

Whereas President McKinley, by his wise conservatism and his unwillingness hastily to project this country into the horrors of war, has been made the subject of hostile criticism:

Be it resolved, The Republican Editorial Association of the State of New York in convention assembled hereby gives full and hearty approval of the course of the President and expresses its confidence that he will carry the issue with Spain to a conclusion consistent with the claims of humanity and creditable to the dignity and honor of the nation.

A. O. BUNNELL, Secretary.
EDW. H. BUTLER, President.

Mr. BERRY: Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate except for a very short period of time, and if the Committee on Foreign Relations had brought into the Senate the resolutions which one week ago the whole country believed that they would bring here in favor of the independence of the Cuban Republic, in addition to those they did bring, I would not have spoken at all. If that committee had brought in such a resolution, it was my hope and belief that the Senate might do as it did when the bill appropriating $50,000,000 was presented to the Senate—cast a unanimous vote for the resolution without one word of debate.

Mr. President, when the great question now pending before us was resting in the executive department, when the great responsibility rested upon the President of the United States—and no man ever bore a greater responsibility than that which has rested upon him—there were a number of us on this side of the Chamber who come from the South who believed that it was the wisest, the best, and the most patriotic course to remain silent. We feared that whatever we might say might be construed by some as an effort to gain partisan advantage.

We feared, in view of the history of the country and of the section from which we come, that perchance our words might be distorted and made to injure the fame of the people whom we represent. Therefore we said, while this responsibility rests upon a Republican President, we will seek no party advantage, but uphold him in all that tends to preserve the honor of the country.

But now, Mr. President, each Senator here assumes part of the responsibility of the action we are to take. I have no desire to detain the Senate with a long speech. I have no desire to delay a vote; but I believe that there is a duty resting upon me to give some of the reasons why I think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] should be adopted and placed in the resolutions, and some of the reasons why I believe that, in addition to the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee, we should also declare in favor of the independence of the Cuban Republic.

I can not rid my mind of the belief that if we enter into this contest refusing directly to recognize the Cuban Republic, there will lurk the suspicion in the minds of people both at home and abroad that we mean something more than we say; that there lurks behind this resolution an undisclosed purpose which we will not avow.

I do not profess to be skilled in international law, but I think I know something, Mr. President, of what is due and honorable from man to man and nation to nation. In a great crisis like this we should put our meaning in language so plain that no man can misconstrue our purpose. That is the honest way and the honorable way. If we refuse, as I have said, to declare that the republic now existing in the Island of Cuba is independent, the nations of Europe will believe, notwithstanding our protestations to the contrary, that when we have succeeded we intend to annex those islands to the United States of America.

Mr. President, the nations of Europe do not make war for unselfish purposes; they do not go into a fight to relieve suffering humanity. When their battalions join battle they do it in the hope of some advantage and some benefit accruing to the nation that is making the fight. So they will naturally attribute to us the same motives and the same purposes that they would have in view if they were determined to make war upon another nation; and when we deliberately and specifically refuse to recognize the Cuban Republic—when all the world one week ago to-day believed we would recognize it—we add to that suspicion and that belief. Why go into the contest handicapped in that way?

As to our own people, they do not believe—at least no considerable number of them believe—that there is any disposition on the part of anyone to make this fight in order to acquire additional territory. But, Mr. President, there lurks in the minds of thousands and tens of thousands of American citizens—it may be unjust; it may be untrue; yet they believe it to-day—that if we do not to-day recognize the Cuban Republic, the reason is that we intend to impose conditions and obligations upon that republic that they would be unwilling to assume of their own accord.

That belief exists. It may not be true, and I for one acquit the President of the United States of any such purpose or intention. I believe the President of the United States to be an honest man. If I believed otherwise, I would hang my head in humiliation and shame on this floor to-day. I believe that the great and overwhelming majority of the American people believe that he is honest. But, Mr. President, there is a belief, and I believe, that there is a class of men in this country—not many in number, but large in influence—who hold that the acquisition of money and who hold that what they call business prosperity is above both national and personal honor. I say that that belief exists; and if we refuse to place in these resolutions the recognition of the Cuban Republic, many will believe that the influence of that class of men has been potent in the shaping of the declaration that we are going to make.

Mr. President, I do not want to go into war in that way. I know not what the condition may be in other sections of the Union, but if this battle is to be fought by the volunteer soldiers of the country, those who come from the South will be the flower of our youth; they will be our children and our neighbors' children, and when they join battle I want them to believe that they are actuated by the highest and loftiest patriotism; that they are moved by purely disinterested motives to relieve the suffering people of Cuba and to avenge the outrages which have been perpetrated upon our own people.

I do not want a single suspicion to go forth anywhere that they engage in war for the purpose of acquiring territory or putting obligations upon the Cuban Republic. We do not want to exchange the lives of our citizens for the acquisition of additional territory; we do not want to give the blood of our children in order to guarantee the payment of Spanish bonds, whether they are held in France, in Germany, or in the United States, and we do not want the outside world, or our own people, to believe that any such motive prompts us to action; but we will give all to uphold the honor of the Government.

Mr. President, this is the main reason why I insist upon placing in the resolution to be adopted a recognition of the Cuban Republic. You say that the resolutions reported by the committee mean the same thing; you say that you intend to recognize independence. If so, why not remove every doubt and suspicion as to our ultimate purpose and recognize the republic to-day?

The causes which have moved the American people to a fixed determination to engage in war, if need be, to drive the Spaniards from the Island of Cuba, are not on account of any desire to acquire additional territory. They were not moved to that feeling by reason of the fact that they desired this country to set up a republic of its own manufacture, and foist upon the people of Cuba, it may be, a carpet-bag government of the United States. Such reasons did not move them. That which most touched the people of the United States, Mr. President, and, in my opinion, above all others, was the suffering, the wrongs, and the inhuman outrages perpetrated upon the Cuban people.

When the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] closed his speech on that eventful day in the Senate, I said to the Senator from Missouri, not now in his seat [Mr. VEST], "That speech means war; that speech will stir the people of the United States from Maine to California, and no power on this earth can longer keep them back." That speech, Mr. President, was read in every home and at every fireside throughout this land, and the people answered with one voice that these things, so fairly stated by the distinguished Senator as coming under his own observation, must not and shall not continue. It was that which moved them even more than the destruction of the Maine and the death of our sailors in the port of Havana.

What moved them even more than the destruction of our battle ship was the description given by the Senator from Vermont of the half-starved and half-clad mother who stood upon the sidewalk, with the hands of her starving children in her own, crying for bread as each passer went by. It was then, Mr. President, that the American people said: "If we permit this under the very shadow of our flag, if we allow this to continue right within our reach, we are a nation of sneaks and cowards, and we are unworthy of the respect and confidence of all honorable men." I say, then, that that was the idea the American people had for favoring this war.

There was another thing that appealed strongly to them. Their sympathies had gone out to the struggling patriots in the Island of Cuba. The Cubans had read the history of our own fight for freedom away back in the days of '76. They knew how Washington struggled and how his men suffered at Valley Forge and elsewhere, and they knew that gratitude had welled up in the hearts of every American even to-day toward the French nation because it came forward to aid us in that contest. They felt that the grand old soldier in Cuba, more than 70 years old, who had left his home and his fireside, who had endured every privation, who had resisted every possible attempt to bribe him—they knew that he fondly looked for and hoped the time would come when the strong arm of America would be raised for his relief.

And now, Mr. President, what think you he and his followers will feel when they learn that the long-looked-for day has come and that the aid is not coming in the disinterested way in which you promised? They will say to us, "You said you were coming to help us, but you reserve the right to say that you will dictate the character of government which we shall have." Do you believe that is fair? Do you believe that that will appeal to the sense of justice of the American people?

Mr. President, I do not. I believe if you would enlist the hearts of this entire nation, if you would take the step that would show to the world that our action was dictated by the highest and loftiest patriotism, that it was utterly disinterested, that behind it there lurked no purpose on our part to acquire territory or to impose onerous conditions upon the Cuban Republic and will add the recognition of the republic—if you go to war upon that ground you will receive such a response in this country, from every part of it, as the world has never before seen.

I believe this most earnestly; and it is, Mr. President, this earnest belief alone that induces me at this time to raise my voice in behalf of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. You may take a different course; you may vote that amendment down and pass the resolution recommended by the majority of the committee or the resolution passed by the House of Representatives, but when you do so, I say to you that this Congress will not have met the expectations of the American people.

I say that such a resolution will carry disappointment from one end of the land to the other. If you do it, however; if you will do nothing better; if you will not put it as we want it, I will vote for it in your way, but if you put it in your own way and war comes, as we all think that it will come, I want to say to you, whether my views are adopted or not, that in the upholding of the hands of the President in every effort to honor the nation, in every effort to bring victory to our arms, he shall have my vote and my voice.

I am not here, Mr. President, to-day to parade the loyalty of the people of the South. I think, after thirty years of peace, that should be taken for granted. I am not here to boast what our section will do in the coming contest. Those who will fight the fight are as yet untried. I had rather wait until the record is made up before I speak their praises or predict their action. I think, though, that I can say to-day, and that I can do it without giving offense to mortal man, that the soldiers of the South in the unhappy civil war showed a high and lofty courage upon the field of battle, an uncomplaining devotion to duty, and a patience in the hour of defeat which has challenged the admiration of the civilized world wherever their history is known.

I do not know what the future will bring, I do not know what may come, but if war must come—and I believe it certain; I would have preferred that we should have escaped it, but war is upon us—and while I shall not predict the action of the people of the section from which I come, I indulge the hope that in the near future, at the close of some glorious day upon the plains of Cuba, when the flag of our country waves victoriously over the stricken field, the commanding general may be able truthfully to say that the soldiers of the South and the soldiers of the North each showed such superb and magnificent courage on this day that no mortal man can say that the one is superior to the other. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I want to give notice now that under the rules of the Senate, if there is any more applause in the galleries, I shall have them cleared, as it is my right to do. When we give the use of the galleries to the public, we have a right to request them politely to observe our rules, and if they refuse to observe them, we have a right to clear the galleries. I hope the Senate will not be turned into a beer garden.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair now gives notice to the galleries that under Rule XXXV, if it is invoked by any Senator on the floor of the Senate, the galleries must be cleared. All manifestations of approbation or of disapproval must cease.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, diplomacy is at an end. We stand upon the edge of war. The nation is one under its flag, sword in hand. If the word that now hesitates upon the lips shall be spoken, and the word "forward" shall be given, the tramp of armed men will not cease until the Stars and Stripes float over Morro Castle and Cabanas prison, nor until a shout of joy shall thrill the world like that which received the news that the Bastile had fallen. The key of the Bastile to-day is amongst the cherished relics of Mount Vernon. If it should become the destiny of the United States of America to hold the key of Cabanas prison hereafter amongst the memorials of its heroic deeds, it will be a fit companion piece for that relic which is now amongst the honored heirlooms of its history.

Up to this crisis, Mr. President, I have been for peace. Ere the word "war" be written in the statutes of the United States, if it be possible in the providence of God that the white dove of peace may float upon the scene and displace the angry eagle's cry I would welcome it with joy. If I shall record my vote in this body for war, it will be with but the single conviction that the awful, the solemn, the supreme moment of sovereignty has been struck when the honor and the dignity and the destiny of a free nation commands that that word be spoken. Entertaining such sentiments, I have not been, up to this period, a critic of the President of the United States or of any who have given him counsel.

I am well aware of the great impatience of the public. We have seen that impatience reflected here. I seek for my part to be unaffected by it. I regretted on yesterday to see that there were gentlemen in this Chamber, generally cool-headed, and I doubt not at all times patriotic, who cried out, "Vote now;" who unable to vote then insisted "Vote to-morrow." I wish to cast my vote in my own good time without pressure behind me. War will keep a day; war will keep a week. I would that peace might be preserved and kept forever. It is not the observation of mankind; it is not within the experience of men who have shared in the angry and tumultuous affairs of this world that the feet which hasten to the verge of battle are the feet that stay there longest after they have been once planted. I beg to say to the honorable gentlemen, for whom I entertain the utmost respect and upon none of whom would I reflect in any way, "possess your souls in patience, gentlemen, while the Senate of the United States resolves the awful responsibility of peace or war."

The men who will declare this war, Mr. President, will not be the men who will carry its standards. The frenzied hands that clap and make loud noise before public bodies when some gallant speech is uttered are not the hands that will grasp the gory and shredded flag when death looks honor in the face. The men who declare this war, Mr. President, are not the men who will pay its taxes; they are not the men who will lie in hospital with perhaps no angel of mercy near to drop a tear over the dying soldier's bier.

Mr. President, let the Senate go with its own measured pace and tread; let there be here no rancorous scene; let us remember we do not speak here as Democrats or Republicans. We speak, as I hope, with the impressiveness of that great scene in this body when sectionalism, when party, when individuality bowed its head in silence while the majestic spirit of a people armed its President to prepare for defensive and offensive war.

I would that now, sir, I could feel it consistent with my duty to permit the same eloquent silence to attend this scene. If I say one word it is from the sense of duty which I feel that I owe to the ancient and honored Commonwealth which has so greatly honored me in making me here one of its deputed agents and to that mightly Republic of the West which has received me here as one of its servants, and with whose destiny and fate the interests of my own people are intertwined forever.

Mr. President, I am not content with the resolutions which have passed the House of Representatives. I am not content with the resolutions which have been proposed to this body by the honorable committee of which I am an humble member. In my humble judgment the first step that the United States of America should take in this controversy, the most dignified, the most clear and positive, is to write upon its statute books that it recognizes the independence of the Cuban nation and holds out its beckoning hand to welcome it into that family of sovereigns, to the high place in which it has won its right by the devoted sacrifice of its people and by its own brave sword.

If, sir, the whole assembled Army and Navy of the United States were to dip its colors as Maximo Gomez and the Cuban patriots passed, I should feel, if I stood amongst them, that I would do myself honor to bow before the hero and the brave soldiers who, after thirty years of struggle and after a war of bloody sacrifice, the equal of which is not known in modern times, after having the cold shoulder turned to them by all the nations of Europe, and the United States of America acting around their coasts as the police officers of Spain, have yet shown to the world that they can not be bought with gold; that they can not be intimidated with steel, but that alone they can hold up in the face of an angry world the flag that bears the single star, worthy to shine by those already emblazoned upon the Star Spangled Banner of this great nation.

I rise to speak in behalf of the amendment to the joint resolution offered yesterday at the request of the minority of the committee by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. That amendment to the joint resolution says that the Republic of Cuba is the lawful government of that island. It is necessary from many aspects of this case to make that a part of any action which the United States of America shall take, first in order to remove a patent ambiguity in the joint resolution; in order to remove a great suspicion which has floated into the public mind; in order to disavow, in order to condemn, in order to refute the proposition that the United States of America entertains any, the slightest, idea of turning its arms upon the Cuban patriots and sending the United States troops to conquer Gomez and his followers.

The message of the President of the United States has made this resolution peremptory upon our part. I wish to do injustice to no man. The message of the President of the United States was a deliberate document. We must take him to mean what he has said. Yet, before I read that message, I wish to say that if we are upon the verge of war, it is my conviction that a weak and timid and halting and vacillating policy on the part of the great Government of the United States has brought us there.

This is not in terms the report of your honorable committee. It is its necessary deduction. This is not the declaration of honorable gentlemen who speak for or against these resolutions, but it is the inevitable logic of the facts which they relate. We know the fact that the Virginius, the forerunner and ante-type of the Maine, was boarded by the Spaniards thirty years ago. We know that fifty-three of her sailors, some of them citizens of the United States, were taken from that ship and murdered by Spain. We know had it not been for the great gallantry of an English officer, Sir Lambton Lorraine, who arrived upon the scene, commanded the peace, and undertook to speak for the United States as well as for Great Britain, the rest of the crew would have suffered the same fate. We know that that incident was tied up in the red tape of diplomacy and, after American citizens had been shot, that at the end of the controversy an indemnity of gold was put into the Treasury of the United States therefor.

We know, Mr. President, from these reports how the last Administration and how this Administration have permitted citizens of the United States in Cuba to be treated. We know the lamentable fate of Sanguily, pardoned by the grace of Spain after he had said, "I am an American citizen," and had failed to receive the protection that was due him. We know that even his counsel, Miguel Viondi, was put in jail and incarcerated for defending him, without a word of intervention on the part of the United States. We know that Ruiz was murdered, and that the great Republic has never yet avenged his death.

Mr. President, the last Administration of this Government, which was put in power by the Democrats, and the present Administration of this Government alike have seemed to the American Republic to be hypnotized by some strange and mysterious influence that took out of them the virile instincts of the American people to defend their citizens anywhere and everywhere and at whatever cost. Mr. President, this vacillating policy has brought us to where we are. We must vacillate no more; we must have a clear and simple statement of what we are going to do and add to it the simple words "Be it resolved."

I wish to say this in answer to some of my honorable colleagues who have spoken: The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] yesterday said that he rose to speak to support the President of the United States. I rise to support the United States. There is no individuality in my action. I rise to support my country—greater than any man, greater than all men. If the President of the United States is right in anything which he commends to this body, I will support him. If I think he is wrong, I will not support him.

The President has relegated this issue to Congress. He has handed it over to us and said that he awaits our action. It was our responsibility before he said it; it is doubly our responsibility now that he has washed his hands of it and has left us without any specific recommendation. If it is the intention of the Senator from Delaware to support the President of the United States and to make that the shibboleth and test and standard of every man's action here, I will ask the honorable Senator to tell me, from his leading position as an old and honored member of the Foreign Relations Committee, what is the recommendation of the President of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. I would not have interrupted the Senator, but he seems to have asked me a question which, I suppose, he will not object to my answering.

Mr. DANIEL. I gave the honorable Senator repeated opportunities yesterday to answer.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator does not wish me to answer, I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. DANIEL. I am entirely indifferent.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator is indifferent, after he has asked me a question——

Mr. DANIEL. I did not mean that in any offensive sense.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator, I understood, said he supported not the President, but the country. I agree with him, that I support the country, and not the President qua President; but I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Virginia, if he will allow me, how he is going to support the country efficiently or effectively unless he supports the constituted authority of the country and recognizes him as the leader whom the will of 70,000,000 people placed in that position?

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to state to the Senator that I am myself one of the constituted authorities of this country.

Mr. GRAY. All right.

Mr. DANIEL. And one who was appointed here to make laws to govern the President.

Mr. GRAY. I will support the Senator from Virginia as one of the constituted authorities of this country when he is upholding the honor of the country.

Mr. DANIEL. I welcome the convert.

Mr. GRAY. Now, in respect to the other question, as to what the President of the United States has recommended, and the assertion, as I understood, of the Senator from Virginia that he had recommended nothing——

Mr. DANIEL. No; I did not say that he had recommended nothing.

Mr. GRAY. Let me call his attention——

Mr. DANIEL. I said there was no specific recommendation.

Mr. GRAY. I will read this and ask him whether it is specific. At the close or toward the close of his message he says:

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

I recognize that as a specific recommendation.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that what the Senator is supporting here?

Mr. GRAY. I recognize that as a specific recommendation, which I am trying to carry out so far as my humble voice and single vote may do it.

Mr. DANIEL. I admit that my language was a little too broad. I had regarded that, perhaps, as a kind of general recommendation, and my language was not as clear as it should have been. I asked the honorable Senator yesterday twice whether or not the resolutions of which he is in part the author and of which he is a sponsor here are intended to carry out the recommendations of the President's message; and if not, wherein they differ with them. Will the Senator oblige me by an answer to that question?

Mr. GRAY. So far as I am concerned, I will say that the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations were, if I understood the purposes of that committee aright, intended to carry out the President's recommendation.

Mr. DANIEL. Then this is the first time when the Senate has been so informed, and it seems to have taken a day's reflection to extort a plain and open answer from the Senator from Delaware. If that be true, if it be a fact that the resolutions offered upon this floor by the Foreign Relations Committee are in line with the President's message, if it be true as the answer of the Senator from Delaware implies, I wish here and now to inform the Senate, and I hope that every American in this country will hear the warning I give, that it is the purpose of those who offer and support the resolutions which are now before the Senate to send the American Army to Cuba for the purpose of turning their guns into the face of Maximo Gomez and of crushing the glorious revolution there. Am I right, and is such purpose in these resolutions?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I would hang my head with shame if I believed that the Senator from Virginia were right. I believe he is absolutely and eternally wrong.

Mr. DANIEL. I am delighted to know it. I wish that the Senator had told us so yesterday.

Mr. GRAY. There was no occasion for my telling the Senator so yesterday, for it is the first time I have ever heard that suspicion announced.

Mr. DANIEL. I have not stated it as a suspicion.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator has stated it as more than a suspicion.

Mr. DANIEL. I do state it now as one of the recommendations of the President of the United States to this body, and when you place yourself and seek to place your colleagues in the attitude of voting for resolutions to support the President, and inform them that those resolutions do support the President, and undertake to chide me and others upon this floor——

Mr. GRAY. I have undertaken to chide no one. The Senator has undertaken to chide me.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; I am obliged to do it, with all respect.

Mr. GRAY. I can stand it.

Mr. DANIEL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GRAY. I can.

Mr. DANIEL. When the Senator and those who agree with him say that they stand here to support the President without qualification and inform us that these resolutions are in line with the President's recommendation, and when I turn to the President's recommendation and when I see that he has recommended to this body that it turn over to him the Treasury and the Army of the United States in order that he may put hostile constraint upon Maximo Gomez and the Cuban patriots, I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware another question: Whether he is not glad that I have given him an opportunity to repudiate such conclusion?

Mr. GRAY. I am not glad, because no man with an American heart in his bosom, saving the Senator from Virginia, would ever have harbored the suspicion or made the insinuation or the direct charge of so base a motive against the President of the United States or any of his colleagues on this floor.

Mr. DANIEL. I will read to the honorable Senator the message of the President. I will show him that there are two men in the United States besides myself who entertain the same view of this message, and I will leave him this message to speak for itself.

As I intend to discuss the message, I am going to read the propositions of its leading thought. On page 8 will be found the repudiation by the President of any suggestion that he proposes a crusade of forcible annexation. He says:

That can not be thought of. That, by our code of morality, would be criminal aggression.

I read from page 1 as to the character of the revolution in Cuba:

Since the present revolution began, in February, 1895, this country has seen the fertile domain at our threshold ravaged by fire and sword in the course of a struggle unequaled in the history of the island and rarely paralleled as to the numbers of the combatants and the bitterness of the contest by any revolution of modern times where a dependent people striving to be free have been opposed by the power of the sovereign state.

I call the attention of my honorable colleagues, in passing, to the fact that here is a recognition of the magnitude and of the dignity of this great revolution, characterized as unparalleled in some respects in modern times or in the history of any dependent people striving to be free.

The next proposition, pages 10 and 11, is the one read to the Senate day before yesterday by the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], which shocked the Senator from Massachusetts, who would not believe it was there until it was read to him. I will read it:

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war, according to the large dictates of humanity and following many historical precedents where neighboring States have interfered to check the hopeless sacrifices of life by internecine conflicts beyond their borders, is justifiable on rational grounds.

Now let the Senator from Delaware read the next two lines:

It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest—

What for?—

as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Mr. President, the English language, the youngest language spoken by the sons of men, based upon the blunt and terse Anglo-Saxon speech, is a language that is capable of expressing the truth in such terms that he who runs may read. Vattel tells us that things which are so plain as not to need construction should not be construed. That language is so plain to my mind that it does not need construction. I am astonished that any man should intimate a doubt as to what it means, for no doubt inheres in it and no doubt lurks over it. It tells what it means. The President of the United States has, as I repeat, asked the Congress of the United States to turn over to him the Army of the United States, for what purpose? Let him answer—to exercise "hostile constraint;" hostile.

What does hostile mean? When arms are employed by a hostile force it means that the party against whom they are employed is a public enemy. It is only a public enemy of the United States against whom any American soldier can direct his weapon. When the President said "hostile" I take it that he had a common knowledge of the English language. If he had been a Spaniard I would have supposed that in using the word "hostile" he meant "friendly." If he had been a Spaniard and had used the word "friendly" I would have supposed that he meant "hostile," and I would have armed myself accordingly.

I take it, sir, that the President of the United States meant hostile in that message; and if the honorable Senator from Delaware is advised of any dictionary that gives any other interpretation, or if he can give me any suggestion by which I can attribute to it any other meaning, I will accept the suggestion with joy. If he does not give me that suggestion I shall take it that the President understands, as I understand, that hostility means enmity, and that he, when he proposed to exercise hostile constraint, proposed to put the hand of inimical power upon the man against whom he directed the blow.

Upon whom did he propose to put that hostile hand? Sir, did he propose to go as the chieftain of a free people whose Declaration of Independence and whose assertion of human right has been the model for the world and lay the hand of power upon Blanco? No; upon both parties, the oppressed and the oppressor, the victim and his wrongdoer. For what purpose? To enforce by arms, what? A truce.

Now, then, let there be no misunderstanding between myself and the honorable Senator from Delaware. He knows that I entertain for him unaffected respect. I cherish the hope that he entertains the same for me. I appreciate and I value his friendship. His patriotism needs no proclamation by himself. I would only dishonor myself if I questioned it.

But I ask him in the candor of this solemn hour to tell me if he does not understand that if that recommendation can be carried out under these resolutions the Army of the United States is to be taken by that plain chart to the Island of Cuba to impose its hostile hand upon Spain and upon Cuba alike, and by that hostile hand to require and to enforce that the bronzed warriors of Gomez shall ground their arms; and if they do not ground them, and the command shall be given that they must, will any vain sophist stand here to tell me—will any word quibbler attempt to deceive the people of the United States by the suggestion that, with the order of the Commander in Chief to them under that chart, it is their duty to deliver the fire from the muskets of the United States into the bosoms of the Cuban patriots and compel them in the name of this great free Government to lay down their arms?

Gentlemen, we are not speaking Spanish in this body. I thank God we have gotten out in the fresh air and in the glad sunshine of a free country where men do not look each other in the face and stab their brothers under the fifth rib.

I have used no invective. I shall use none. I shall pronounce no criticism. But I do say it is a fact in the light of day that the President of the United States has invoked the Congress of the United States to give to him the war power to send the ships of the United States and the armies of the United States over to the Island of Cuba and compel Gomez and his gallant band to lay down their arms. Does the Senator from Delaware wonder that I am suspicious? Let him tell me if he does not think that I am right in my construction of those words.

Mr. GRAY. I do not.

Mr. DANIEL. Great is the mystery of judicial interpretation; greater is the mystery of political interpretation; but the greatness of the mystery of diplomatic interpretation is so enormous that to me it is entirely incomprehensible. I say that that is the true interpretation. I say that no man has denied that that is the true interpretation. I say that no other possible interpretation can be put upon it, and I say that because of that interpretation I will not vote, and I hope no Senator will vote, for any resolution to carry out any such policy or for any policy that does not clearly and expressly close out the possibility of this suggestion.

Mr. President, I am neither by nature nor by any cultivated art a fault-finder. I am no severe judge of my fellow-men. If I have misread plain English it is because I do not understand the simplest words of the English tongue. May I be permitted, sir, to read an editorial from one of the great journals of this country, to show at least that there are some other minds that regard this matter as I do? It is headed "Neutral intervention impossible." It is from the New York Sun of April 13, 1898:

The prominence which the President's message gives to the discussion of intervention "as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants" indicates a preference on the part of Mr. McKinley for that method of dealing with the situation in Cuba.

A very little consideration will suffice to show that neutral intervention of the kind thus proposed is simply impossible.

It would involve, as the President himself concedes, "hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest, as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement."

Now, then, the Senator suggested—I did not catch, in the haste of his expression, the perfectly full import of his words—that I was the only man in the United States who could entertain such opinion in regard to the import of this measure. Here is one of them.

Mr. GRAY. There are two there.

Mr. DANIEL. He proceeds:

Are we prepared to send an armed force into Cuba which shall assume an attitude of hostility toward the insurgents as well as toward their Spanish oppressors? Do we desire to assume the functions of a military police, standing indifferent between the conflicting parties on the island? If we undertook to play such a part, is it not plain that we should incur the deadly hatred of both combatants and be unable to impose our will upon either without an enormous sacrifice of blood and treasure? An American army in Cuba, standing between Spanish foes on the one hand and Cuban foes on the other, would not be in a pleasant position.

No; we are without reason for interfering in Cuba at all unless we go there as friendly to Cuba and correspondingly unfriendly to her Spanish oppressors. It is as the active ally of the insurgents that we should intervene and with their cooperation sweep the Spaniards out of the island, which they possess only to wrong. Once do away with Spanish misrule and the future of Cuba will take care of itself.

Mr. President, I can not recognize that I stand in the solitude of my own originality in the suggestion which I have made. On the contrary, I believe the Senator from Delaware to be the only man in the United States who would undertake to say that hostile constraint at the point of a musket against a person recognized thus as a public enemy did not mean turning our arms against him.

I have been reading the papers of this country during the last week with intense and eager interest. I could pile Pelion upon Ossa, I could bring a cloud of witnesses from the skilled minds that guide the pens of the press of the United States to testify not only that they think so, but that this is the only true interpretation of this document. I have but one in my hand. It is from the Norfolk Pilot and Virginian, of Virginia.

It is, in effect—

Says he, in speaking of this portion of the President's message—

a proclamation of unruptured amity with Spain and a declaration of war against the Cuban Republic and the Cuban patriots. It takes strong ground against recognizing either the independence or the belligerency of the Cubans, and it favors an armistice equivalent to the submission of the revolutionists to Spain. Under it the revolution is to cease, at least temporarily, upon conditions and for a time to be dictated by Spain, and the message asks for power and forces to compel the cessation of hostilities at his discretion, which, taken in connection with his previous attitude against the Cubans with respect to belligerency, may mean war on Gomez unless he submits to Spain under the plausible demand of an armistice.

Mr. President, I must be pardoned for reading newspapers in the Senate. I must say, however, that the press of this country is the only source of full and authentic information or of any full information that either the Senate or the people can look to. A few days ago a message of the President was laid upon our tables, confiding to us the solution of this issue. That message bore testimony of wrong and of complicated diplomatic negotiations. Was the correspondence between this country and Spain laid upon our tables with the message? Were we made competent by being taken into the confidence of the President to judge of all the circumstances of the case with the same enlightenment that he possessed?

I ask a further question, Mr. President. The intelligent public of the United States are called upon to expend their treasure and to send their sons and brothers down to meet grim war. Are they not entitled to know in full the causes of that war and to judge for themselves, upon a full, candid, open, and unconcealed statement of the facts, as to whether or not their representatives shall say peace or war?

Mr. President, I shall read further from a recent issue of the New York Sun, which is an admitted Administration journal and one disposed to look upon this whole question with candid thought. If honorable Senators will follow me in my relation of the attitude which this country occupies according to that message, there is no Senator here who will not hesitate to vote for the resolutions which it is claimed by the Senator from Delaware are responsive to it.

Not more than the Senator from Delaware was I born without any suspicion in my blood. But a man who has read the history of our diplomacy with Spain and who yet remains without suspicion in his mind deserves to be commemorated forever as the greatest of all "innocents abroad." He should have his picture put as the frontispiece for a new edition of the work of Mark Twain, and, sir, he is the last man on earth whom the United States of America should intrust to conduct the great issues of peace or war at the present juncture.

We are told in the message of the President, in a postscript, that General Blanco had issued a decree for an armistice, as it is called. It could only have meant for the cessation of hostilities upon the part of Spain, and the President recommended to us to reflect over that fact. I have reflected over that fact a great deal, and my reflections over that fact have led me to the calm and deliberate conclusion that it is only a part of the stage furniture in a spectacular diplomatic play intended to mislead the public and to leave the Cuban army as the only armed enemy upon whom the United States could exercise its hostile constraint, to enforce its truce, and to guide the settlement.

We had from the Washington Post day before yesterday an explanation of the inscrutable policy which has dominated recent political negotiations in this country. As I have no official copies of that correspondence here, as it has not pleased the President of the United States to let his countrymen see the hand that he has played, I must take this as the best source of my information.

It became known yesterday—

Says the Washington Post—

It became known yesterday why independence was omitted from the message. When President McKinley first made his propositions to the Spanish Government, he announced that the war must cease in Cuba and an independent government be established.

That information in the Post is consistent with the general public acceptation of the history of the fact and with such information as oozed into Congress about it. But the sequel was not so well known.

This dispatch—

was changed by Attorney-General Griggs to read "stable government," which, it was claimed, was the diplomatic phrase for the independence desired. When Minister Woodford submitted that dispatch to the Spanish prime minister, he was asked if "stable government" meant independent government, and at once replied in the negative, assuring Señor Sagasta that the United States looked only to a system of self-government like the Canadians enjoy.

Afterwards, believing that he might have made a mistake, Mr. Woodford cabled the President as to the intention of this Government, and was promptly informed that the word "stable" must be interpreted "independent." As all suggestions for independence had caused much indignation and resistance on the part of the Spanish Government, Minister Woodford feared to make his demand, and, as a matter of fact, the ultimatum for independence was never officially laid before Spain, Mr. Woodford believing that it would be a constant irritation and menace in what might follow. He repeatedly suggested it to Señor Sagasta in private—as being the view of the President, but as it had never been submitted in writing the President had to omit it from the message. This is the explanation semiofficially made of the President's position.

I did not know until I came to consider the Spanish case that we had two English languages. I am getting myself into difficulties every day from my old-fashioned conviction that we had but one. I have to learn now from the accomplished diplomat who represents the United States of America at the Spanish court that "independent" means "stable." I have already received a suggestion this morning that the word "hostile" means "friendly;" and we shall no doubt hear before we get through that "constraint" means "persuasion," that "truce" means "war," and that "armistice" means "rebellion." I confess, with these diplomatic papers around me, I am often led to wonder if indeed "white" does not mean black and if "light" does not mean darkness.

Mr. President, I am reading these documents in order to try to get the Senate of the United States to realize the exact position that the United States of America occupies to-day in the fair and just contemplation of Spain, and the position that she will further occupy when in the course of events all of these facts shall be known to the enlightenment and to the sense of public justice of the world.

It would appear from the President's message, interpreted in the light of these facts that we have gotten from the newspapers, that the United States is called upon to make war upon a country which has yielded to every demand which he has yet made, though it may be disclaimed to have been done at our behest.

It would appear, if this contemporaneous newspaper history be correct, that Spain has done everything that our Commander in Chief has asked of her, and that it is at the end of full compliance with everything that the diplomatic department of this Government has requested that in the name of the President, and by the followers of the President, and by those who seek to carry out his policy, the Army of the United States is to be sent to Cuba upon some rather vague and undefined mission—"Now you see it and now you don't see it." With Spain compliant, who would be in Cuba to exercise "hostile constraint" upon but the Cuban Republic and its adherents?

I demand, Mr. President, as an American Senator, to know the purpose of the action contemplated. I want that purpose clearly defined; and I will vote for no resolution until I know what that resolution means.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator considers it an improper question—I do not know but I may be trespassing upon him——

Mr. MASON. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I say if it is an improper question, the Senator will not give offense to me by declining to answer. I ask whether in committee he did not vote for the resolutions that were reported by the committee?

Mr. DANIEL. I did not, except with this reservation——

Mr. GRAY. Oh!

Mr. DANIEL. Except with a clear and candid reservation; and, further, it is not usual to ask gentlemen as to their course in committee; but I give the Senator carte blanche as to myself.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will do me the justice to say that I distinctly said when I asked the question that if he had the slightest objection to answering it, or if there was any impropriety in putting it, I should take no offense at his declining to answer.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator has carte blanche to ask me any question.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator did vote for the resolution, but did it with a reservation?

Mr. DANIEL. I stated exactly what was the fact——

Mr. GRAY. I only want to get the Senator's language correctly.

Mr. DANIEL. That these resolutions were reported with a reservation on my part to support the minority report, which was laid upon the table side by side with them.

Mr. GRAY. But you did vote for the resolutions?

Mr. DANIEL. And, if the Senator will allow me, I said in committee that under no circumstances would I vote for the resolutions as they were unless as a last desperate resort to get this country to do anything. That is my exact language.

Mr. GRAY. But you said you would vote for them as a last resort.

Mr. DANIEL. I said exactly what I have said.

Mr. GRAY. I want it understood.

Mr. DANIEL. It will be thoroughly understood, sir. I do not speak Spanish.

Mr. President, I shall read this further from the New York Sun:

HAVANA, April 11, 1898.

The proclamation issued yesterday by General Blanco ordering hostilities to be suspended, but without giving any further instructions to the Spanish army, and announcing in vague terms that such instructions would be forthcoming later, has caused a great deal of comment and many protests among Spaniards and Cubans alike. Nobody wants an armistice here—from the most rabid Spaniard to the most platonic sympathizer with the revolution.

General Blanco himself was forced by Señor Sagasta to issue the proclamation. When the Captain-General received the first order from Madrid he felt indignant, and openly declared that it was a disgraceful measure for the Government to take and a disgrace inflicted upon the Spanish army. He cabled his protest to Spain, and tendered his resignation if the Government insisted that he should sign the decree. But the wily Sagasta soon replied to him that the proclamation was really a great triumph for Spanish diplomacy, because the Government had already been informed that President McKinley's message was in favor of armed and neutral intervention in Cuba, and, taking that step, Spain would put him in a hole, for if the Spanish army ceased fighting the insurgents would be considered the only party responsible for the situation.

Señor Sagasta hoped that the European powers would then force the United States to keep hands off and give Spain another chance to win. General Blanco was convinced by this remarkable logic. He explained to the officials whom he summoned to the palace that the whole thing was a clever trick. Señor Galvez, president of the autonomist cabinet, and all the members of the cabinet indorsed these views, and President McKinley, General Woodford, and the whole American people were derided and fun was poked at them as the dupes of Spanish acuteness.

Are we sure, Mr. President, that we are not such dupes?

The decree was issued, and it was purposely framed in obscure terms so as to make it impossible of execution as a military measure.

Then it adds:

The Spaniards here believe that the only intention of the Americans is the conquest of Cuba. From their point of view this is a conquered land, its inhabitants are slaves, Cuba is the property of Spain, no matter what degree of autonomy is granted to her, and foreign intervention, therefore, can only be inspired by similar selfish motives.

Now, Mr. President, I wish this question of the cessation of hostilities in Cuba to be distinctly understood. The President tells us in the body of his message:

To this end I submitted, on the 27th ultimo, as a result of much representation and correspondence, through the United States minister at Madrid, propositions to the Spanish Government looking to an armistice until October 1 for the negotiation of peace with the good offices of the President.

That is to Spain. On March 27, Mr. President, all was known about the U. S. S. Maine that we know now. On the 27th of March the proposition of this Government was, "stop fighting," with our good offices tendered to Spain. In addition, he asked "the immediate revocation of the order of reconcentration." What is the reply?

The reply of the Spanish cabinet was received on the night of the 31st ultimo. It offered, as the means to bring about peace in Cuba, to confide the preparation thereof to the insular parliament, inasmuch as the concurrence of that body would be necessary to reach a final result, it being, however, understood that the powers reserved by the constitution to the Central Government are not lessened or diminished. As the Cuban parliament does not meet until the 4th of May next, the Spanish Government would not object, for its part, to accept at once a suspension of hostilities if asked for by the insurgents from the general in chief, to whom it would pertain, in such case, to determine the duration and conditions of the armistice.

It was there, Mr. President, that our negotiations with Spain, according to the President of the United States, were concluded. "With this last overture in the direction of immediate peace and its disappointing reception by Spain" the President tells us he was "brought to the end of his effort."

On last Wednesday, the 6th of April, the message of the President would have been delivered to Congress but for causes that postponed it until April 11. While it thus hung in suspense many and powerful influences were at work to change the situation and to prevent the impending rupture. The President added a postscript to his message, saying:

Yesterday, and since the preparation of the foregoing message, official information was received by me that the latest decree of the Queen Regent of Spain directs General Blanco, in order to prepare and facilitate peace, to proclaim a suspension of hostilities, the duration and details of which have not yet been communicated to me.

He says:

This fact, with every other pertinent consideration, will, I am sure, have your just and careful attention in the solemn deliberations upon which you are about to enter. If this measure attains a successful result, then our aspirations as a Christian, peace-loving people will be realized. If it fails it will be only another justification for our contemplated action.

I will now read the proclamation of General Blanco as given to us through the public channels of communication. It is as follows:

His Majesty's Government, yielding to the reiterated wish expressed by His Holiness the Pope, has been pleased to decree a suspension of hostilities, with the object of preparing and facilitating the restoration of peace on this island, in virtue whereof I believe it convenient to order:

Article 1. From the day following the receipt in each locality of the present proclamation hostilities are ordered to be suspended in all the territory of the Island of Cuba.

The details for the execution of the above article will be the object of special instructions that will be communicated to the several commanders in chief of the army corps for the easy and prompt execution, according to the situation and circumstances of the case.

BLANCO.

It will thus appear, Mr. President, that the cessation of hostilities in Cuba was refused by Spain when requested with the tender of the good offices of the United States and was granted by her when requested by His Holiness the Pope. It will also appear that these terms and conditions are obscured by the reference of its details of execution to the unpublished and to us unknown special instructions to the corps commanders of the Spanish army in Cuba; and our knowledge of Spanish diplomacy is sufficient to fix a suspicion in our minds that there are many strings tied to the so-called armistice, as we have always found them tied to the ancient and weather-worn pretext of autonomy for Cuba.

Suffice it to say that this alleged armistice imposes no obligation or duty upon us. It is no more than a scenic play before an impatient world, a dilatory plea put in at the eleventh hour—aye, upon the stroke of 12. We know that there can be no armistice in Cuba and that Spain has no power to grant or to enforce it. An armistice implies the consent of the republican forces under Gomez, their commander in chief, and that such consent will never be given has been proclaimed and is a foregone conclusion.

We should bear in mind also, Mr. President, these facts in summing up our conclusion: That Cuba is upon the eve of the rainy season. Spain would delight in any excuse for not fighting at a time when the republicans would find the opportunity to do their most effective work. We should not overlook another possible object on the part of Spain, suggested by a paragraph in the New York World of the 12th instant, which holds up its warning finger as follows:

> The object of the alleged "cessation of hostilities" in Cuba is quite innocently revealed by the Imparcial, of Madrid. It says it is to afford time "for the submission of the rebels and the concentration of our naval forces in Cuban waters." How do these reasons—particularly the last one—strike the Congress of the United States?

How do these reasons, and particularly the last one, strike the Congress of the United States? Then, Mr. President, in this situation, with Spain upon the eve of the rainy season, having exhausted the power of 237,000 men to conquer the Cuban revolution; when the hour has arrived most favorable to revolutionary success and most disparaging to Spain; at a time when she wants delay as to them on account of the climate; at a time when she wants delay as to us in order to tow her dilatory fleet across the waters and plant them at Havana Harbor, the Congress of the United States is summoned to turn over the Army of the United States to the President to go and enforce an armistice between two parties, one of which has already stacked its arms, and the situation in such a condition that when the Army arrives in Cuba, if Maximo Gomez still carries the Cuban flag, he will be the only person under the dictates of that message against whom the powerful Army and Navy of the United States would be directed to secure "enforced pacification."

I knew that the honorable Senator from Delaware would repudiate such an intention; I know that the whole Senate of the United States will utterly repudiate such an intention. In the name of Virginia and of all her people I do repudiate such an intention, and for one I say I will stay here as long as physical power permits until some resolution has solved the suggestion in that Presidential message, and until I do know, not think, there is no purpose anywhere to turn the armies of the United States against the gallant revolutionists in the Island of Cuba, who deserve our sympathy and who should now have our full support against our common enemy, Spain.

Mr. President, the recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic will solve these difficulties. It would drop the chemical clarifier into these muddy diplomatic waters; it would define a status which nowhere in this correspondence and nowhere in these resolutions has any definition; it will take us out of the wilderness and plant us upon firm and stable international ground.

It is not only now the right, it is the solemn duty of the United States to recognize the Republic of Cuba. If we were to do nothing else, that is the one primary, germinal, and principal thing for us to do.

The people of Cuba have got to-day a firm, fixed, and stable government, according to the meaning of those terms as used in international law. To be the possessor of a firm, fixed, and stable government does not imply that all difficulties as to the future of that country are removed, that all the cobwebs have been brushed from its horizon, that commotion and revolution may not attend its future fate, as they have attended, and as they ever must attend, the history of all nations.

What is meant by a firm, fixed, and stable government in the sense of international law is a government worked out by the spontaneous genius of a people to such degree as it has manifested to the world that it has come to stay and that it can stay. I need no better evidence than that which is given us by the President of the United States himself of this fact. He tells us in that message, Mr. President, that Spain is a failure in Cuba. After telling us of the unparalleled character of this revolution in Cuba, he tells us that—

> The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba.

I will take the facts as he gives them to me, and I will deduce my own conclusion, that is, that Spain has utterly failed. That is communicated to us as an international fact by the chief officer of this Government, whose peculiar duty it is to ascertain such facts and to promulgate them to the world.

Mr. President, the natural, the inevitable, the just sequence of such a fact is the recognition of the nation of whom it is the predicate, and, if understood correctly, the customary conduct of this country in similar cases, the enunciations of the authorities of international law, the practices of the Presidents of the United States, the right and duty of Congress—I say that the enunciation of that fact is the enunciation of a fundamental principle upon which nations acquire their right to be welcomed into the society of states.

I can find nothing, Mr. President, in the sentences quoted by the President from General Grant, or from General Jackson, or from anyone else to militate effectively against my assertion. I can not find a corroboration of the President's view in any of his citations. President Jackson placed the policy of his nonaction with reference to recognizing the independence of Texas as against Mexico on "the prudent reserve" which had hitherto characterized our foreign policy, a reserve and a prudence which we no longer cherish, if the President is correct, with respect to Spain, and which become inapplicable at a point where he has determined upon aggressive action or armed intervention.

With respect to the principle actuating him, President Jackson, as quoted by President McKinley, said:

> In the contest between Spain and the revolted colonies we stood aloof, and waited not only until the ability of the new States to protect themselves was fully established, but until the danger of their being again subjugated had entirely passed away. Then, and not until then, were they recognized.

The conditions which to-day exist, the conditions which are set forth and stated in the resolutions which have been brought here by the majority of the committee, are conditions which fit themselves as hand and glove to the principles which Jackson enunciated. The Republic of Cuba has protected itself for three years by a steady heroism, a tried patriotism, which have won the independence of the people which we recognize in the resolution without recognizing its creator.

I might well say to the gentlemen who are supporting the resolutions offered by the committee, You assert as a fact and proclaim and enunciate it to the world that the people of Cuba are free and independent. I ask you, Senators, if you tell the truth in that assertion, and are going to send your Army and Navy to support that truth, who made them free and independent? You justly disclaim any participation in bringing it about yourselves.

Your committee tells you that your prior policy toward the Cubans has been such as to assist Spain. You have thus announced to the world that notwithstanding the cold shoulder you have given to the Cubans up to this hour, notwithstanding your navies have done police duty upon the waters for Spain, notwithstanding you have refused to recognize in them anything you could hear or see or feel in an international sense, despite Spain and despite you, they "are" now and "of right ought to be free and independent;" and yet while proclaiming this momentous fact to the world, while telling us that independence is there and that freedom is there, the creature of the Cuban people, you are so possessed with the facing-two-ways policy which has possessed everything upon the Spanish question that you tell us in the next breath you will not recognize the heroic army and the brave government which have brought that condition to pass in your face and in the face of Spain. Oh, most lame and impotent conclusion! To follow it into action is to hold this Government up to the ridicule of the world.

The danger of Cuba being again subjugated by Spain—the one that held General Jackson back according to the President's quotation—is already refuted by the President's message, if we may rely upon his statement that the long trial has proved that Spain can not conquer it or subjugate it again; and if it had not been refuted and borne down by the fact to which the President is himself the witness, the danger of Cuban subjugation by Spain will be removed for time and for eternity by the very act we are called upon to perform and which we are told should stop—lame, halt, blind, and trembling—upon its own deliverance, on the idea that Spain may resubjugate Cuba after the United States has intervened for its protection.

To such a pass of sophistical illusions and complicated contradictions have we been brought by a double-faced, forked-tongued policy, which is forever trying to ride on both sides of the sapling and which will ultimately have to be tied upon a horse to enable it to ride at all.

The President and the country must be relieved of this inane condition. He should have the millstone which was apparently hung upon his neck by the last Administration taken off of it. Between certain Presidents and the Queen Regent, Sagasta and certain diplomatists, with reminiscences of old-time statecraft in the days of the Virginius in the background, who can wonder that this Administration should "toil in immeasurable sand" and at last construe "stable" and "independent" as synonymous terms and see no difference between the Spanish army and the republican patriots in Cuba?

Andrew Jackson was not so scholastic as that, and of him and Grant alike, I am proud to say, that neither of them ever proposed to take the Army of the United States into a neighboring state to crush down the spirit of a heroic people struggling to imitate the example of our fathers when they proclaimed that we are and of right ought to be free and independent. God forbid that the august name of Andrew Jackson should ever be taken to suppress the aspirations and to trample upon the rights of a free people.

Mr. President, there is no doubt of the right of the President now to recognize the Republic of Cuba, and there is no doubt of our own right in conjunction with the coordinate executive branch of the Government. I am not one of those Senators who is constantly trying to destroy the prerogatives of the honorable body of which I am a member. I would not extend them an inch or an ell beyond their constitutional limitations, but the powers given to the Senate by the Constitution are powers which it is our duty to defend. It is a part of the prerogative of a free state that its legislative body should make the fundamental laws for the regulation of both its foreign and its domestic affairs.

The whole question of the power of recognition is summed up in a few sentences of the report of Henry Clay, formerly a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, which is in the language I will read. It is dated June 18, 1836:

> The recognition of Texas as an independent power may be made by the United States in various ways. First, by treaty.
> Will any man question that?
> Second, by the passage of a law regulating commercial intercourse between the two powers.
> Will anyone question that?
> Third, by sending a diplomatic agent to Texas with the usual credentials.
> Will anyone question that?
> Lastly, by the Executive receiving and accrediting a diplomatic representative from Texas, which would be a recognition as far as the Executive only is competent to make it. In the first and third modes the concurrence of the Senate in its executive character would be necessary, and in the second in its legislative character. The Senate alone, without the cooperation of some other branch of the Government, is not competent to recognize the existence of any power.

Mr. President, there are three sources under our Government thus depicted with a pencil of light from which recognition may be derived. The one is through the action of the Executive in an appropriate case presented to him. The second is in the action of the Executive and the Senate by treaty in an appropriate case presented to them. The third is by vote of the Senate and House of Representatives under the veto power of the Executive and under the constitutional prerogative to pass laws. We invoke the most august of all these powers to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba. It is the Senate and the House and the Executive acting as one.

Not only will the recognition of the Cuban Republic clarify a muddy situation. It ought to be predicated, however, upon the germinal, bed-rock ground of right. If they are a free and independent state, that state must have the inalienable right to determine its own form of government; and the determination by a free and independent people of who their executive is and of who their authority is is a conclusive determination binding by international law upon all other governments in the world. Would we permit in this country any nation on the earth to determine who were our Congress and who our President? When the nations of the earth recognized either the people in their scattered and individual capacity or the nation in its unity or the country in its integrity as free and independent, the rest went as matter of logical and necessary consequence. I would say that it went to-day as a matter of logical and necessary consequence if I did not see the strange spectacle on this floor of men proclaiming the one and stating doctrines in the same resolution or in speeches in support of it which imply the other.

Mr. President, I believe that the recognition of the Cuban Republic is at this juncture necessary and expedient to the United States as a peace measure and as a war measure. If the army of Gomez and the people whose homes and firesides have furnished it are made at once the comrades in arms, the friends, the allies, the recognized freemen like those of the United States, they will owe to us an everlasting obligation. But if we should turn to them the cold shoulder now, will we not inspire them with suspicion? They are a suspicious people. They could not have lived under Spanish dominion and been intelligent and not suspicious. They have been fooled and betrayed for many years by Spain. They have not been accustomed to deal with manly, upright, straightforward, and candid folk who said "enemy" when they meant enemy and said "friend" when they meant friend; and if, after all of our professions which have gone to them upon the voice of the winds from the firesides of the United States, they should see that when the supreme moment came we voted down the recognition of the republic which had been copied in part from us, that we rebuked the ideas of independence through Presidential message and through Congressional speech, will they not feel and justly feel that they have grounds to suspect their alleged new-found friends?

As a matter of war, recognition is essential. If an American army should go to Cuba, Gomez will be ready to welcome them, and there will be no American soldier who would not be pleased to coordinate with him in campaigns and to receive his suggestions with respect to them. The distinguished consul-general of the United States, who has so ably performed his part in Cuba as to win golden opinions from all sorts of people, has testified before our committee, and he testified as a soldier educated at West Point, a man of large experience, who has taken part in Indian wars upon the Western plains and who was major-general of cavalry in the Army of Northern Virginia. He said that Gomez has taken the only method to beat Spain which an accomplished and able general could have taken; and are we to say at the very moment when we need his services, at the very moment when he has reached the point of recognition, at the very moment when you are asking the United States to go with him and fight the same enemy, that you will turn the cold shoulder to the general in chief, whose cause is at last the groundwork of your whole action?

Mr. President, we should recognize the Republic of Cuba to avoid international complications, fiscal, diplomatic, and diverging in all directions. I will not say that I am of opinion that the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] or the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] or the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] is correct in stating as a fact that if the United States should go to Cuba without recognizing the republic it would thereby and thereupon make itself liable for any part of the Spanish obligations which have entailed upon Cuba a mortgage of some kind or other as collateral security.

Mr. TURPIE. I think all that has been stated is that it would make the question open as to whether we were liable.

Mr. DANIEL. I accept with pleasure the suggestion of my able friend the Senator from Indiana, who measures his words, and whom I would not quote in any respect incorrectly. I agree with him fully. It would leave a question in our path which might be the source of much international trouble. I believe that the correct doctrine is that a war for independence waged by Cuba, or a war made necessary on the part of the United States for its own peace and safety, would not in any event which is likely to happen entail upon the United States any responsibility for any part of either the Cuban or Spanish debt.

At the same time I can not blind my eyes either to the thoughts or to the plans and schemes of other people. I do know as well as I know anything of which I have no physical demonstration that there are those who fancy that the United States will make itself liable, by pursuing the course recommended in these resolutions, for a whole or a part of the Cuban debt imposed on her by Spain. I say, sir, it is the part of prudence, of forehandedness, of foresight to avoid every question that can be anticipated and to solve every difficulty that may be presented at the first moment when it is realized to exist; and that in order to avoid this complication, in order to silence the suggestion of such a question, in order to destroy the germs of what may become a very fatal financial disease, I would here and now recognize the Cuban Republic as a free and independent nation, and let her profile stand out against the sky separate from the domination or the establishment of the United States.

I will state here that when the United States absolved its allegiance from Great Britain there was no public creditor in the world who came to the United States and insisted that he had any equitable claim against us to pay a part of the British debt. When Alsace and Lorraine were taken from France by the sword of Germany, Germany never recognized that by tearing away those provinces from the Crown of France it had devolved upon itself any obligation or duty to pay any part of the debt of France. While these facts are true, there are peculiar circumstances and conditions in this case which have led many of the wisest and ablest lawyers and most patriotic members of this body to foresee a difficulty there. It is a part of wisdom to be forearmed, and I agree with my honorable friend the Senator from Indiana, who spoke so powerfully upon this question yesterday, that the true way to avoid that difficulty is to recognize the Cuban Republic here and now.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me one word at this point?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The position taken by the authorities, which seem to me to be the strongest, is that if the country is divided both sections are responsible for the debt. Some authorities say for the entire debt, others pro rata; that is, when the country is divided. It is not contended that the United States will in any way become responsible for the debt unless we take the country. The question might then arise, and has frequently in such cases. But we do not propose to take the country, and consequently that question would not arise, so far as the liability of the United States is concerned.

But the liability of Cuba is a very different question. If Cuba was divided off from Spain under most ordinary conditions, she would still be liable for the debt. The way a debt can be got rid of, the authorities say, and the only way to destroy the claim, is by insurrection, and successful insurrection, the establishment of a new government. The revolution starts things anew. That is what the authorities say.

Now, the case the Senator from Virginia speaks of, the taking of Alsace-Lorraine by Germany from France, was settled by treaty.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through to make his speech. I do not wish now to discuss in full these questions, but I wish to say that, whether these resolutions or any other resolutions are passed, I believe it to be the patriotic duty of Senators of the United States and Representatives in Congress to refuse to recognize that there is any condition which could impose upon this country a moral, legal, or equitable obligation to pay any part of the Spanish or Cuban debt.

I am somewhat familiar with the doctrines which have been advanced by the honorable Senator from Nevada and others, for I come from a State, the only State of the American Republic, which was divided by the hand of war, and have often gone over the international and judicial views; but I do not think that that question has any place in this debate except for the purpose of forewarning members of the danger that lurks in a recommended policy and of giving them the opportunity pointed out by the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senator from Indiana to preclude that danger at the beginning by so clear and so straightforward a course as would utterly destroy it.

Mr. President, with a few more words I shall leave this matter in the hands of the Senate, so far as I am concerned. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] seized hold of a paragraph of the very able and powerful speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to minify the character of the Cuban revolution. I have been associated with the honorable Senator from Ohio in listening to the witnesses who have testified upon this subject, and his remarks as to there being 400,000 of the population of Cuba supporting the revolution can be only fairly understood when it is applied to the particular matter to which his mind adverted—the population of certain states is undivided, not intending to comprehend the whole force which rests back of Masó and Gomez. It is a fact that the Cuban revolution comprehends the whole Cuban people, and there has been sitting near the Senator from Massachusetts an eyewitness, a judicious observer, a reliable and honored Senator, who has been upon the ground and who gives us this conclusive evidence.

I read from the well-known speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] made in this body. Here is what he says on the Cuban situation:

> The dividing lines between parties are the most straight and clear-cut that have ever come to my knowledge. The division in our war was by no means so clearly defined. It is Cuban against Spaniard. It is practically the entire Cuban population on one side and the Spanish army and Spanish citizens on the other.

I will associate with that testimony the published evidence of the consul-general of the United States who is fresh from Cuba. Within the present week he has testified before the Committee on Foreign Relations that practically the whole population of Cuba are supporters of the government there, and if there was a Cuban who was not, that he did not know it.

Now, Mr. President, who are the people of the Island of Cuba? Cuba contains about 1,500,000 or 1,600,000 of population. Three hundred thousand, according to the best estimates we have, are Spanish and foreign born. From 1,100,000 to 1,200,000 are Cubans to the manner born. So, according to the best evidence that this case admits of, according to the official testimony that has been laid before you, you are here to-day considering the status of a young nation. Four-fifths of that nation stand solid to the Cuban cause, the natives sprung from that soil, and there are none against them upon that island save one-fifth of the population, superimposed upon them by the arms of Spain.

What cause is it, Mr. President, that this solid, unanimous, native-born population of Cuba stands for? It is for a cause well known in English history. It is a cause which has made the most glorious character and evolved the most glorious principles of Anglo-Saxon freedom and independence. It is the cause for which the brave English people, tied to the traditions of monarchy and loving their sovereign, followed the Ironsides of Cromwell, drove out the Parliament, and laid the head of Charles, the King, upon the block.

It is the cause of just taxation. It is the cause, Mr. President, which made America a free and independent Republic. It is the cause which threw the tea into Boston Harbor. It is the cause that makes the name of Concord and Lexington ring throughout the world. It is a cause which for the time being died on the brow of Bunker Hill when Warren fell, but which will live forever on Bunker Hill and through all America as long as American hearts are true to the proud and germinal traditions of the English-speaking race.

It is the cause for which the august Chief Justice, John Marshall, of the United States fleshed his maiden sword at the Great Bridge near Norfolk. It is the cause for which James Monroe bled in the streets of Trenton. It is the cause for which Otis and Adams and Hancock and Henry spoke. It is the cause which of all causes America has ever held, and which she to-day holds, most dear—the cause ever hallowed by the name and leadership of Washington. And that cause upon the Island of Cuba has a flag to represent it. It has soldiers to fight for it. It has patriots to bleed, to die for it, and it has a unanimous population ready to starve and to perish rather than that cause shall fail.

And who, Mr. President, are they who are trying to put it down? Is it a nation renowned in the world's history for its love of liberty? Is it a nation which has ever given to the world a declaration of independence? Is it a nation whose moral conduct is so clean, whose charity and benevolence are so pure, whose humanity is so notorious, that we must pause and hesitate ere we do anything to offend its refined and delicate feeling?

No, Mr. President, it is not. It is Spain, the Turk of the West, who has his hand on the Cuban throat, and who is starving there the women and children of our neighboring state. And we are told that with a population, white and black, unanimous for a cause, with a population that has cherished that cause for thirty years, with a population which has done acts of heroism for that cause which have commanded the admiration of the world, we can look out toward the Island of Cuba, we can see in its harbor the wreck of the American battle ship Maine, we can see the yellow flag of Spain floating over Morro Castle, we can see the hospital and the dungeon, we can bend in the misery and pity of tears over 200,000 women and children dying, and yet the great United States of America can see nowhere the heroic Cuban army and soldiery who stand for the great cause of liberty and independence!

Mr. President, I will not be driven by committees, I will not be driven by Presidents; I had rather be a political Cuban reconcentrado upon the Island of Cuba than be an American Senator and not proclaim the independence and freedom of the brave young Cuban Republic. I would proclaim it with a thought and a prayer in my heart, the one the sententious utterance of Thomas Jefferson, who in a few words has summed up all free constitutions, who in a sentence has written all declarations of independence, who has proclaimed to the world that "liberty is the gift of God." And as the United States makes that declaration for poor Cuba as she recognizes the youngest heir in the files of time that comes to its God-given inheritance, my heart would lift to heaven with the aspiration of Abraham Lincoln, "I would that all men everywhere might be free." [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. TILLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield me five or ten minutes? I think, in justice to myself, I should refer to some remarks made by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, yesterday I ventured to make some remarks in the Senate in regard to the grave and solemn crisis through which we are now passing, and expressed as well as I could the deep feeling that I possess in regard to the attitude our country should occupy toward the world and toward Spain and the struggling Cubans. My only object in speaking at all was to appeal in my own poor way to my colleagues on this floor to so vote and so act that we would present a united front to the world, and stand as America always ought to stand—resolute, together, united, with one heart and one mind, to face the foes of our country.

In doing so I ventured to suggest that the best and surest way was to cooperate with the other great department of this Government—the Executive—upon whose message, referred to a committee of this body by the Senate, we were called upon to act. I stated that I believed an American President, elected by the American people, was patriotic and sincere in what he advised us to do. I do not believe that an American ever held that high office who would have betrayed his trust or been untrue to the responsibility that God and the people had placed upon him.

Therefore I believed it was altogether proper and right in the sight of the world that we should follow the lead of the chosen leader of this people to bring about the remedy and the correction of the great wrong that is being done to an innocent people right at our doors. I ventured to say that for the sake of humanity, for the sake of an outraged and oppressed people, we are justified in appealing to arms and cooperating with the President of the United States, and that no inferior cause would receive the sanction and the united support of the whole American people.

Yet the Senator from Virginia has seen fit to-day, because he thinks, as he has a right to think, that the only and foremost and chief cause of our intervention in Cuba is the recognition of the Cuban Republic, to attribute first to the President of the United States, which is more serious to the people at large, and then to me, which is less serious to the people at large but more important to myself, a motive so gross and so offensive that I could not, while the Senator was in the full tide of his eloquence, interrupt him to properly express what I felt in regard to it. If I did not misunderstand him the Senator from Virginia said, first, that the President of the United States and those who supported him deliberately, with malice prepense and aforethought——

Mr. DANIEL. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. GRAY. Had conspired to send the armies of the United States into the Island of Cuba not to oppose the Spanish, but to put down Gomez and his armies. I repelled that as I might, in a word, while the Senator was speaking; but I want to say now that there was no justification, no excuse, no provocation even, which I can imagine, to support the Senator from Virginia in making that imputation.

Mr. DANIEL. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. GRAY. I understood the Senator so, and those around me so understood him.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator can take my speech now. I have not read over it, of course. He can take it and look at it.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad to hear the Senator say he did not say it, but I so understood him.

Mr. President, I want to say that if the Senate holds that the only cause for intervention in Cuba is the recognition of the Cuban Republic, then we go into this contest without the united support of the American people. The cause that stirs the American heart and conscience is the cause of humanity. It is that which has brought the fever to the blood of age and will make an infant's sinews as strong as steel. If out of intervention on that account shall come, as it must come, the independence of the Cuban Republic, then every American heart will rejoice and every American will applaud.

Mr. President, if it be so gross an error to stand with the House of Representatives in cooperating with the President, then I stand convicted of that error. I stand here to uphold and support by my vote and my voice the policy that is outlined by the resolutions that were well-nigh unanimously adopted by the other branch of Congress, and I am willing to stand with what I believe to be the great majority of the American people in supporting what the Senator is pleased to call the President's policy, but which I call the American policy of intervening in the cause of humanity,

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. GRAY. I am going to stop in one moment.

Mr. DANIEL. I want no difference with the Senator as to facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GRAY. I do.

Mr. DANIEL. The President in his message recommends, as I understand it, this:

> The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war.
>
> * * * * * * *
> It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest, as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

I have not undertaken to use any sort of invective nor to ascribe motives. I do undertake to say that I could not for myself advise the adoption of any resolution which had any trace of such a doctrine. I only wish to impute to those who say that they are following the President that responsibility which they themselves assume. It was for that purpose that I asked the honorable Senator the question whether the resolution meant that. If it does not mean that, if it does not imply that, if it does not leave that open, it is not open to my criticism. If it does have that in it, I want it to be known.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I am always glad to appeal from the Senator excited by his own eloquence to the Senator calm and sober and in possession of the great and clear intellect which God has given him. That sort of argument I can have no objection to. The Senator has the right to support with his abilities the proposition that he has chosen to espouse. I rose for a different purpose and to address myself to a different attitude.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator put words in my mouth which I have not uttered.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad, then, to hear the Senator disclaim them.

Mr. DANIEL. He said I said "with malice aforethought."

Mr. GRAY. I so understood the Senator, but not to use the words "malice aforethought."

Mr. DANIEL. But you put those words in my mouth.

Mr. GRAY. I did not attempt to put those words in your mouth.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not want the Senator to seem to have put them in my mouth.

Mr. GRAY. I say now I did not put them in, and I did not intend to put them in.

Mr. DANIEL. All right, sir.

Mr. GRAY. Now, Mr. President, the Senator has called my attention again to the part of the President's message which he has criticised. I am not here to defend the President, but I am here to defend what I believe to be the proper and patriotic course for this country to pursue. I will not exercise such poor ingenuity as I have to make an issue with one branch of this Government that shall bring about division where there ought to be union. The Senator has sought or seemed to seek during his long and able speech to employ the dialectics with which he is endowed to convict the President of recommending an intervention in Cuba against Gomez and his followers. I read the clause and listened to the Senator when he read it, but I read, unless I misunderstood and misread the message, that he was proposing to the Congress of the United States alternative measures which it would be open to Congress to pursue.

But I also read the conclusion of that message, and the Senator was frank enough, as he always is when his attention is called to the necessity of being so, to admit that his statement was a little too broad, and was not quite justified by the language that I read to him from the closing paragraphs of the President's message. They are short, and I will read them again. I apologize to the Senator from South Carolina for consuming more of his time than I had intended.

> In view of these facts and of these considerations—
> Says the President—
> I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations.

That can mean nothing else than a government free and independent from the control of Spain or from the control of any other country whatever, and on that account I was willing to take the President's recommendation and willing to vote for resolutions such as the House has almost unanimously adopted in support of the lead taken by the Chief Executive of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. Does not the Senator understand——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GRAY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Does not the Senator understand the President to mean in the winding-up sentences in which he recommends the use of the Army for the enforced pacification of Cuba—which he did not read, just above what he did read——

Mr. GRAY. I read it before.

Mr. DANIEL. I know you did, but you did not read it in that connection. Does he not understand the enforced pacification in Cuba pointed out by the President to be secured by the Army of the United States to involve in the President's meaning what he says:

> It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Mr. GRAY. Now, if the Senator will allow me, calmly and dispassionately, to say what I think, the phrase last referred to by the Senator from Virginia occurs a page and a half or more previous to the last and concluding passage which he has just read. I do not so construe it. I construe the language of the President as I have already said I construe it.

Mr. President, I do not feel myself at liberty to trespass further upon the courtesy of the Senator from South Carolina. I want to end as I began. I want to repeat in a word all that I intended to say on yesterday. There is one armistice and one truce for which I heartily ask and of which I am heartily in favor, and that is a truce between the political parties of this country until we can settle our account with Spain.

Mr. TILLMAN Mr. President, this is a grave, a solemn crisis in the nation's affairs. It is not a time for words to be lightly spoken. Whatever we may do, whichever of the resolutions we have under consideration shall be adopted, the only possible ending to them or to such action will mean war. There is to be war in any event unless Spain ignominiously backs down.

We were told last night, and no doubt the American people feel it is true, that this is a time for action and not for words. But, Mr. President, the exigency is not so pressing but that we can make the issues clear and say to the world what we mean to do, and say it in words that can not be misconstrued.

I shall address myself to this question in no partisan spirit. We gave an exhibition here some weeks ago of a unanimous House and a unanimous Senate voting $50,000,000 for the public defense.

> Populists, Democrats, Republicans are we,
> But we are all Americans to make Cuba free.

I feel that I can claim this for the American people with the exception of a few thousand who live within the purview or within the influence of boards of trade and chambers of commerce and banking houses, and that that sentiment now pulsates in the breast of every true American.

If I shall in my speech present facts and utter words that may have the appearance of partisan bias I disclaim any such purpose, but I hope I shall be able to so measure my words that I will be given the credit for trying simply to present my views in a clear and unmistakable manner and have those views based on facts and their necessary deductions.

I regret that I can not rise to the high and pure plane which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] claimed yesterday to occupy. I have "suspicion" in my nature, Mr. President, and it has been driven into me by the fact that my association with men has led me to know that the angels in this world are very few and far between, and I have heard none of their pinions fluttering in this Chamber since I have been here. [Laughter.] I am frank, and have always been so. I speak that which I feel, and I have always judged other men so until I have been forced by sad experience to know that there are many who, like Talleyrand, use language to conceal their thoughts.

The Senator from Delaware, after announcing in the most positive language his absolute confidence in the President of the United States, and after proclaiming his purpose to cooperate with and assist with all his official power and influence the Executive, seems to forget or to have forgotten that a Washington evening paper of yesterday had in it an account of a conference which he attended yesterday morning, which is part and parcel of the facts from which I shall draw deductions. The Evening Star says:

An important conference was held at the White House this morning, and the subject is believed to have been the question of the Senate and House resolutions. Those engaged were Senators GORMAN, FAULKNER, and GRAY (Democrats), and ALDRICH and ALLISON (Republicans). They had been sent for by the President. They were with the President nearly an hour, and when they left hurried away in carriages to the Capitol.

The Senators admitted that an effort would be made to have the House resolution substituted for that of the Senate when it is passed. They did not, however, say that the President desired this to be done.

It is perfectly legitimate and proper for Senators to confer with the President. The predecessor of the present Executive very rarely conferred with Senators [laughter], and it is an improvement in our public affairs that we have now an Executive who will deign to confer with Senators. However, the milk in the cocoanut is the fact that this conference had as its purpose the substitution of the House resolution for the Senate resolution. Upon that I will comment later on.

Mr. President, the bone of contention here is as to the form of the resolution which we shall adopt which will lead to war. We are told that the House has acted with practical unanimity; that the Executive is ready; and that it is time for the Senate to stop talking and to act, and let slip the dogs of war. It is with no view of defending the Senate—for it needs no defense—that I desire to direct the attention of the country to the fact that two years ago this body, by a vote of 64 to 6, passed the following resolution:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

There we proclaimed by a nearly unanimous vote that there was a government in Cuba, and that was not the Spanish Government.

Mr. STEWART. And a similar resolution passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wait, my friend. I will come to the history of the facts if the Senator from Nevada will just allow me.

This resolution was sent to the House of Representatives, and that body, by a vote of 262 to 17, passed a substitute, and I will read it. It is as follows:

That in the opinion of Congress a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interests of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations, would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba, in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens by intervention, if necessary.

You see that the House then, with its majority of 150 of the present President's party in power, went further than the Senate. The man who then stood in the way was a so-called Democratic President. Both Houses of Congress by practically unanimous votes declared that there was a "government" in Cuba, because the House later on having failed to have the Senate accept its substitute, concurred in the Senate resolution and passed it. Therefore we have both Houses of that Congress committed to the proposition that even two years ago there existed a "government" in Cuba. What has become of that government? I pause for a reply.

But, Mr. President, the Senate did not stop there. When the President failed to act, there was some mention made in this body of passing a joint resolution and sending it to the President, but it did not obtain much support and dropped out of sight. But last year, after the party which at St. Louis declared in its platform for the independence of Cuba had assumed control of the Government, the Senate, the citadel of liberty in America to-day, passed another resolution, and this time it was a joint resolution. May 20, 1897, by a vote of 41 yeas to 14 nays, but 2 Democrats voting in the negative, this resolution passed the Senate:

Joint resolution declaring that a condition of public war exists in Cuba, and that strict neutrality shall be maintained.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America shall maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

There the Senate again acted. Where has that resolution slept for a year? You all know. It is not my purpose to criticise the men who have their duties to perform at the other end of this Capitol; but, gentlemen, let us keep the record straight. The Senate has acted once, and acted twice, and we are told by the committee of the Senate in its report, which is here accompanying the pending resolution, that if belligerent rights had been granted to Cuba two years ago all of this difficulty would have been obviated and the Cubans would have achieved their own independence. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], one of the members of that committee, has announced the same proposition in his speech of yesterday in the strongest possible language.

Who is responsible for the condition of war into which we are fast hastening? The Executive, after exhausting diplomacy and being exhausted by diplomacy—because he has got to the end of his rope [laughter]—under the whip and lash of outraged public opinion, after withholding his message time and again, and being told by the members of the two Houses that he must act, sends a message looking to intervention, and the House of Representatives, which has had this resolution of belligerency in its keeping since last May, at last decides to act, and then, with indecent haste and only forty minutes' debate, as though it were the ukase of a czar at the White House, passes a resolution declaring for intervention and probable war, and sends it to this body. Are we to sit here silent and not discuss the conditions under which this war should be conducted and carried on? No, Mr. President, we have waited long enough; too long. If any harm shall come by reason of waiting, it does not lie with the Senate or at our door. If the Spanish flotilla and the accompanying fleet shall get into American waters and some of our battle ships shall be sent to join the Maine, it will not be our fault.

We have acted once. We have been ready to act for a month or more, but other branches of the Government have delayed. Let the responsibility rest there. Now let us decently and in order, and with proper elucidation of the facts and the conditions, discuss this question calmly and in a spirit of patriotism, and arrive at a just and proper conclusion; in other words, let us "be sure we are right and then go ahead."

Mr. President, what is the contention here? What are we discussing? Why the delay? Simply about the form of the resolution which we shall adopt, the results of which are so momentous both to ourselves and to the people to whom we pretend, or to whom we intend, to give relief. It is whether we shall recognize a government which two years ago we declared existed, and which one year ago we reiterated existed, or whether we shall, in obedience to the influences at the White House, leave the matter in a nebulous condition, so that there may be any interpretation put upon it that the Executive hereafter chooses.

The message of the President has been read so often and commented on at such length that I hope the Senate will bear with me if I feel constrained to read a few of these same hackneyed phrases once more and give my comment on them, understanding, gentlemen, that, being a man who means what he says, or tries to—I do not always do it, because I am not immaculate; I am nothing but a sinner, a common ordinary human being—but, as I said, trying to mean what I say and say what I mean, and knowing the importance in a great public paper like this, at a crisis like this, of having the Executive mean what he says and of saying what he means, and having this Senate in its resolutions say what it means and mean what it says, I must, in the performance of a duty, as I said, read some of these extracts and give my deductions from them.

Briefly stated, and culling out the sentences and stringing them together which embrace the recommendations and the opinions of the Executive, we may put it in this way: That the President asked Congress to "authorize and empower him to take measures to secure a full and final termination of the hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, imposing a rational compromise between the contestants by hostile constraint upon both parties, as well as to impose a truce to insure peace and tranquillity, and for the purpose of securing in the island the establishment of a stable government, and to use the Army and Navy to enforce those recommendations."

I have culled sentences from the message and strung them together in one consecutive sentence. I know the unfairness of using garbled extracts; but, Mr President, study the message as you may, and, interpreted according to the ordinary meaning of English words, you can not make the message mean anything else than what those words convey. Coupled with the facts that have been brought out here and through the newspapers and in the official reports, I think I can say that the President of the United States has, by his own words and acts, proclaimed that he is not a friend to the idea of free Cuba. He does not believe in the republic, and he has not wanted a republic. It is that belief, implanted in my mind by his own language, which leads me to want this Senate to make the meaning of the cause of this war and its purpose as clear as sunlight.

What are the causes which have led the House of Representatives to linger so long, to wait before recognizing belligerent rights? What are the causes which have prevented one Executive elected by one party and his successor of another party, notwithstanding the obligations of its platform, which he accepted when he was nominated—what, I say, are the influences which have made these men linger and put off the day of redemption for Cuba? I wish to God that I had no "suspicion." I would that the circumstances were not such as to compel suspicion; but I see in every line of this message a purpose to impose upon the Cubans a recognition of the Spanish debt owned by the American bondholders.

Why does the President want the House resolution passed instead of the Senate resolution? Why, gentlemen, we are even threatened with a veto in the event that we see proper to act according to the responsibilities which have been placed upon us. I say we are threatened with a veto if we dare go forward and proclaim the independence of the Republic of Cuba and fix beyond cavil the status of that people. It is an obligation before the world which we can not shirk.

The Evening Star of yesterday said, and the newspapers of this morning repeated the statement, that—

> Should Congress pass a resolution directly recognizing the independence of the Island of Cuba, as proposed in the Senate and House minority resolutions, it is strongly hinted that the President might veto it as interfering with his prerogative to do this. He would, it is intimated, consider it an encroachment upon his functions and rights.

We have recognized the belligerency of the "government of Cuba" twice in this body. Now, when we come to the crucial test as to whether we shall recognize the independence of the republic, we are told that we will be met with a veto. Are we to be intimidated by that threat? Are we to hesitate and halt and refuse to ratify our previous acts, and to put our resolution in language that means only one thing, and that is that there shall be no reconstruction in Cuba under the auspices of the United States Government?

The newspapers told us—and the Washington newspapers, I find, are nearly always correct in their news—that the House and Senate Committees on Foreign Affairs, pending the sending of the President's message, had practically agreed upon a resolution which recognized the independence of the Republic of Cuba. If that was not true, some member of the committee, if he feels disposed to give out committee secrets—we have had some of them given out, and I do not know why this one should not be—if it is not true, I should be glad to have it denied. [A pause.] I can not, of course, say that "silence gives consent," but we certainly have silence. Why did the Senate committee change the phraseology of the resolution? Why did the House committee come as near as possible to granting to the President all he asked except that they provide for an independent government of the Cuban people by themselves? They gave everything else he asked except that, and then, if that could be reached by intervention, without the use of the Army and the Navy, it would be permissive only; it would not be mandatory to so use them.

The Senate resolution, which we seek to amend so as to purge it of the slightest ambiguity, says that the "people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free." Who are the people of Cuba? The President, under his reconstruction policy, which we grant him if this resolution be adopted, will have the right to determine who are the people of Cuba. The Army of the United States once in possession of the island and Spain expelled, we will have the necessity imposed upon the Executive by our consent and through his own wish of having elections held under the auspices of the officers of the Army. Who is going to appoint the returning boards? Who is to count the votes?

Mr. President, perhaps the fact that the State which I have the honor in part to represent has been through that mill once causes me to be more suspicious in regard to the possible outcome of this action and to look forward to a repetition of the scenes which we had in our State when we were reconstructed. God forbid that I should lend by any vote of mine any countenance to any such scheme.

The people who have on the eastern end of the Island of Cuba maintained their independence and kept the Spanish soldiers out for three years during this last war and for ten years during the previous war, whether they have a government which is stationary or not, have a government such as we have declared existed once, which we have recognized as having the rights of belligerents once, and which we can now well afford to recognize again.

Is it possible that in all the western half of that island, which has been so cruelly devastated, a great many thousands, and possibly hundreds of thousands, of refugees have not escaped death by starvation within the trochas? Did they not escape and flee to the east and scatter throughout that country which has been always held by the patriots? I am almost sure that many of the younger and abler men—in fact, almost all of them—are to-day in the eastern end with rifles in their hands, and they have sworn by the Almighty God to avenge the wrongs of their starving wives and children and of their outraged daughters; and yet you propose to have those gallant soldiers told "You are not the free people of Cuba, but the Spaniards who are in Havana and in the other cities, who have ruined your homes, who have burned your houses and destroyed your industries—in truth, they are to be brought in and recognized as the people of Cuba."

The question appears to be whether we shall recognize the existing government, whatever may be its obligations, or whether we shall recognize no government, but declare in general terms that the people of Cuba are free, and then go there and have an election under our control and direction so as to set up a government of our making. Will that government have any carpetbaggers among its officers?

For the President of the United States I have a profound respect as a man. His personal record is as clean as that of any man in this country and his honor is above suspicion. But, Mr. President the President of the United States is surrounded by men whom I do suspect, whom I do mistrust. He has, so to speak, some very "wicked partners" [laughter], and I have seen proof, to my mind absolutely conclusive, that the Spanish bondholders have kept down, through their influence in New York and elsewhere, any action by the Executive or by the two bodies of Congress—by the House when it had an opportunity to act in an effective way, and it only acts now because obliged to. I say, having seen evidence of these things, I am compelled to have "suspicions."

The issue appears to be whether the Cuban bonds, issued by that government through its instrumentality in New York to secure the independence of the island, or the Spanish bonds issued by Spain to conquer the island shall be paid. I do not want, and, so help me God, I will never vote for any proposition which even winks at proposing to impose upon that bleeding island a debt issued by Spain to secure its conquest. We have been told by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that bonds are things which now come around babies' necks when born, and it seems that the people of the whole world are becoming slaves to bondholders of one kind or another; that international syndicates possess more influence than governments; that governments declare peace or levy war at their dictation, or that the governments can not help themselves, and we are to present the spectacle here of leaving the suspicion in the minds of even our own people that such a syndicate exists and our own action is predicated upon their demand. Armenia has been left to the tender mercies of the brutal and fanatical Turk. Greece was struck down and lies bleeding at every pore while the CHRISTIAN POWERS stand idly by held back by the bondholders who hold the Turkish debt. Is this great Republic to be thus disgraced? God forbid that it should sink so low!

Mr. President, this is the first time in our history that we have ever interfered with any of the colonies of a foreign power in the Western Hemisphere except to recognize their independence. We fought the Mexican war more as a war of conquest than a necessity, because Texas had successfully defended her liberty, and it was not doubtful as to whether or not she could continue to maintain it. While men proclaim that there is no suspicion or purpose or intent to annex Cuba the world outside, which does not judge men by any other code than that which obtains in this day and which is the essence of greed, will say that "you do not mean that when you pass this resolution without recognizing the government now in existence." If we go down there and set up a carpetbag government of our own, or if there are no carpetbaggers among them and we set up a Cuban government, what do we entail upon ourselves?

I desire first to lay down the proposition—the clear, unmistakable doctrine—and let it be recalled to the minds of Senators as to what Monroe meant and said and what we are contending for as the true American policy. I read from President Monroe's famous message:

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

There we proclaimed that we would not interfere with the colonies of other powers, and yet we are now going to interfere and we are going to interfere without first having recognized the independence of the men who brought on the war and maintained it for thirteen years.

I am not going to get into a discussion with well-trained lawyers as to what would be our international obligations under the conditions which they suggest, but I contend that if we do not recognize the independence of the Cuban Government in some form, though that government may be peripatetic, may be moving about, so to speak, we lay ourselves open to the accusation of the European powers of intending something else besides the mere setting up of an independent, stable government of the Cuban people for themselves. The President says:

Such recognition is not necessary in order to enable the United States to intervene and pacify the island. To commit this country now to the recognition of any particular government in Cuba might subject us to embarrassing conditions of international obligation toward the organization so recognized. In case of intervention our conduct would be subject to the approval or disapproval of such government. We would be required to submit to its direction and to assume to it the mere relation of a friendly ally.

He speaks further down in his message of the "attributes of nationality" and of the "interests and relations of the United States with such a government."

We were told by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that large numbers of these Spanish bonds, for which the Cuban revenues are hypothecated as security, are held in America. Are the holders of those Spanish bonds, who bought them in the open market knowing the danger of their being repudiated or lost by war, here with their agents on this floor and in the other end of the Capitol trying to saddle this debt upon those people? I can not believe it; but what am I to believe?

The papers have told us—I do not know how true the story is—that there have been midnight conferences between Senators and the Spanish minister. There is nothing in the President's message which seeks to make clear his purpose to recognize the independence of these people at all except the brief sentence at the end, which I will now read:

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own.

There is the only possible sentence in the message that looks to Cuban independence at all, and here we have to strain the meaning of his language and take as a fact what can only be implied as to his meaning. All of his other language leads us inevitably to a contrary opinion, and the message must be construed as a whole. He speaks about "hostile constraint," and "rational compromise," and so on, all looking to some species of pseudo-independence or autonomy or some other humbug by which the Spanish bonds may be saddled upon this sorely distressed island and its people. For the benefit of whom? The bond is stronger than the man; money talks; men are cheap. The sinister influence of the dollar appears to be paramount in this Capitol, and we are to put ourselves on record as to whether we indorse the proposition that the Spanish bonds can by any possibility be saddled on these people under the reconstruction government which is proposed.

But, Mr. President, aside from the moral and legal obligations to other nations which would be imposed on us in the event that we go there and set up a government, taking the island, the corpus, so to speak, and setting up a "stable" government of our own—to which the President himself alludes—even if we recognize such government, with that recognition will go the demand that they must pay our American bondholders, and if we demand that they shall pay bonds held by our citizens, in God's name will not Germany and France and England demand that they shall pay theirs? Suppose that condition of affairs arises, what will be the result?

We expel the Spaniards. We will pacify the island. We will go there ignoring the present Cuban government. We will order an election; we will say it will be an honest election; that there shall be no cheating; no counting in or counting out; no military interference, except to see a free vote and a fair count. And when the representatives of that government meet, who can recognize it as a stable government? Can this Congress do it? Will this Congress act? Under the hypnotic influences which seem abroad in this land, is it at all probable that anything will be done hereafter, after that settlement has been made, except that there will be dicker and barter and trade and coercion on the part of this Government to force a recognition of a part at least of this debt?

Then suppose that we force it, and it becomes one of the infamies for which we will be responsible to God, who is going to collect the interest? The Cubans who are to-day in arms, and most of whom have been for thirteen years, have been driven to the mountains and fastnesses of the forests of Cuba by oppression which meant for them either to become robbers and guerrillas, so to speak, or slaves. They had no alternative. They have resisted oppressive taxation and tyranny in the same manner that the American people resisted it in 1775 and 1776. We will say that you set up a reconstruction government under this scheme which we have coming here from the House, and which is permissible even under the Senate joint resolution as reported by the committee, then what follows?

For a time the debt will be recognized and the interest collected, but so sure as men are men like we are and the Cubans believe that debt is dishonest and oppressive and ought never to have been saddled on them, there will be a revolution and that government will be overthrown, and the refusal to pay the interest and the obligation which will have been imposed on them under this proposition of reconstruction and infamy will entail on us the necessity of entering upon the island and enforcing the obligation just as Egypt has been seized by England to collect the interest on the bonds which her citizens hold as the result of loaning money to the Khedive. Then we will have a nice situation.

The island for a quarter of a century, almost, has been in a state of chronic insurrection, with the Spanish Government trying to maintain supremacy. We propose to take Spain's place and become the policeman of the Western Continent and keep in order on that island the Latin races that have settled there. We can not afford it. Duty demands that we expel the Spanish robbers and tyrants. There our duty ends. We can not afford, Mr. President, to set up any government there. We can not afford to do anything except to recognize the existing government and let them work out their own redemption, as the other Spanish-American Republics have had to do.

They have had their revolutions and counter revolutions. I do not believe the people of that race are capable of self-government. While Mexico has under the great and magnificent statesman who now dominates her affairs had tranquillity and peace and a stable government for a long time, and is moving forward rapidly in progress, we can not undertake to say that the Cuban people must have a stable government, and that we will make for them a stable government, if we are going there and say in order to have this stable government "you must pay the Spanish debt or some part of it."

If we go there recognizing the existing condition and the government which we have already recognized once, we will approach those people in a spirit of amity and friendliness and fairness and justice which will appeal to them, and we can have influence with them—even with bandits and mulattoes, and the worstelement of those struggling for liberty—and we can appeal to them by moral obligation, if nothing else, to be law abiding and civilized. But if we undertake to say that we will set up a "stable government" loaded down with the Spanish debt, and enforce stability by maintaining peace, then we will have to increase our standing Army, and we will have to maintain an army there time out of mind to enforce the collection of an unjust obligation put upon those people. In a word, we will take Spain's place as the oppressor and tyrant.

Mr. President, recognition is an Executive act. It is true we are undertaking now, and I understand that is what the President objects to, to recognize independence which he has refused to recognize. He even refuses to recognize belligerent rights, which would carry with it the legal right to refuse to pay this debt. Through every line of the message and the policy outlined in it there appears nothing to me but bonds, bonds, bonds. And it is because we of South Carolina have had so many bonds of that kind foisted on us in the dreary years of the past, during the era of reconstruction, that I, for one, stand here and protest in the name of American freemen, in the name of decency, of Christianity, of fairness and justice and peace, which can not be maintained on any other basis, against any policy, against the adoption of any resolution, against the leaving out of any word which ought to go in to make it absolutely plain and clear and unmistakable that we do not intend to annex the island; and that we do not intend to interfere with their internal affairs, other than to expel Spain and enable the Cuban patriots to inaugurate, under their own auspices and under their own machinery, a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

I say I will not vote for any proposition which does not contain these declarations. I will even reject and vote against, in my bounden duty to my people, the Senate joint resolution, unless there is incorporated in it the amendment proposed by the minority, or unless the Senate shall supplement those resolutions for free Cuba by a declaration on our part—and I do not see why we can not do that—that the Spanish debt shall be settled by the Cuban people of their own volition and in their own way, without any coercion on our part. We can not afford to do less. If we recognize the independence, the question of bonds need not arise. We have recognized it once, not independence, but the fact that a government exists there. If we meant what we said then, why not go forward and repeat those words?

Mr. President, I said that whatever happens here, it did not matter what resolution was passed, we are going to have war. I do not want any war. I have not wanted it at all. My people do not want it. The North has had war and had thousands and hundreds of thousands of the flower of its manhood sent home to be buried as the result of that war. We of the South had our own jewels sent back to us in the same way. Both in the Revolutionary war, when my State was overrun from sea to mountain and when her people suffered untold wrong and villainy and oppression, such as no other colony endured, and fought more battles for liberty than were fought in almost all the other States put together; and in the last war, when we passed beneath the harrow, we have had our fill of bloodletting and of war in its most dreadful form.

We do not want any war. But while the feeling among our people was that of sympathy for the suffering Cubans, such as existed almost everywhere, it could not take shape and did not assume form until that flaming fuse was sent abroad throughout this land which followed the explosion of the torpedo or mine under the Maine. That fuse flamed and flared and sizzed while the people held their breath. There was no bomb attached at the time. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], by his calm, dispassionate, and almost judicial statement of facts, which appealed to the sentimentality and Christian charity and philanthropy and sympathy and mercy of every man worthy the name, furnished the bomb.

The bomb is here, the fuse is attached to it and lighted, and it is approaching an explosion. The explosion will come whether I vote for the pending joint resolution or not. I hope to God I will be able to get the Senate to incorporate something in it or to amend it so as to allow me to vote for it. But, as I said, whether I vote for it or not, the people I represent are to-day a unit, the American hearts within us throb and pulsate with the sense of wrong and indignation, and the blood which we inherited from Revolutionary sires tingles with the demand for justice upon the assassins who sent those American sailors to their death.

In the war that is now inevitable South Carolinians will not be laggards in upholding the flag of our country or in carrying it to victory in so righteous a cause.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to participate in the slightest degree in this debate until some of the reflections upon the Chief Executive of this nation were uttered yesterday; and they have led me, in view of the fact that I intend now to vote for the joint resolution of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to desire to publicly disassociate myself utterly and wholly from any of those discreditable insinuations.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the great mass of the people of this nation do not desire war, if they can avoid it; but they see no way how, under the providence of God, it may be averted. The people of these United States have stood and stand to-day loyally by the President. His position, frictional and difficult at best, has been administered by him as became an incumbent of that high office. Brave himself, he abhors war; but he abhors unrighteousness more. He has dealt in most courageous fashion with that popular clamor which would have been so easy for him to follow—a popular clamor natural and patriotic and loyal, but necessarily uninformed and unreasoning. He has been compelled to contend with the disgraceful conduct and utterances of a degraded journalism which has, I regret to say, found influence among those in high station—a journalism which would cheerfully and gladly plunge this country into war to-morrow if it could increase its circulation a few copies.

He has had to contend with the impassioned utterances which have taken place in both Houses of Congress; utterances, Mr. President, which we have no right to criticise. The Senate is an open forum where every man is responsible only to his conscience for what he says, and if his utterances make the task of diplomacy more difficult, we must accept it as one of the features of our institutions, and we must seek to be so strong in other directions that we can overcome the evils which may grow from them.

All these influences in these long and arduous and trying and difficult days the President of the United States has met with that splendid conservatism which comes to all good men when responsibility and power are imposed upon them. He has met them not alone with the courage of a man who has known the smoke of battle, but he has met them with the fortitude and courage of the Christian who desires to save, if possible, the lives of every American committed to his charge; and, Mr. President, that confidence and that affection and that respect have been reflected for weeks in the forbearance and tolerance and courtesy of this body throughout all these trying weeks.

If there have been one or two discordant notes; if, as we stand on the threshold of war, which we have practically already crossed, there has been heard among the Senators in this Chamber a reflection upon the character and motives of him who is the beloved President of our whole people and whom the Constitution creates the Commander in Chief of our armies and our navies, it will only serve to emphasize and deepen the practical unanimity with which all good men look up to the President and the desire we all cherish in this awful crisis to strengthen his hand.

After weeks of diplomacy, unfortunately unsuccessful, the President turned over to Congress the two subjects which he had been considering—the subject of the barbarities in Cuba and of the disaster to our battle ship. It is a great pity that he could not longer have kept them; but the avenues of diplomacy were closed to him. It is a pity, because under our institutions and under our procedure Congress deals with these questions as men in mass meeting. The finesse of diplomacy is unknown to us. We can speak only from our hearts and for the people we represent; and our debates, which may prejudice us in the minds of the people of Europe, are the essential and the necessary channel through which, as representatives of the people, we make known our views when public duty is devolved upon us.

If the two subjects could have been presented separately, if they had occurred separately, we might perhaps have saved the necessity of war. If the awful barbarities in Cuba, extending over three years, which have aroused the sensibilities and the pity of all mankind, could have stood alone, it is possible, though not probable, that by peaceful methods we could have met a solution of this difficulty.

For myself, Mr. President, however much of expenditure or debt or outlay it might have entailed, I would far rather have voted right and left and mortgaged the property, and thus necessarily mortgaged the labor, of every citizen of the United States to a reasonable extent if that would have secured peace in Cuba. It might have been successfully accomplished, although it seems as if Spain would not, and could not, yield that which is the essential condition of our ceasing our insistence.

But, Mr. President, when added to that there came the awful explosion in the harbor of Havana, a friendly port, in time of peace, the die was cast. After that, what could be said? If that had stood alone, it is possible it might have been adjusted without war, but not by any method which the Spaniard has yet attempted. When such an outrage was committed there was but one duty left, and that was the duty of exculpation, if they could exculpate themselves. If not, the only course of a self-respecting people must be to invoke the god of battle.

Mr. President, from the day of that awful disaster until now, except the most perfunctory regrets, the most formal messages to our Government and our people, there have been no steps taken either to exculpate Spain or to fix the guilt of the offenders. Mr. President, taking the two happenings together, what can result but war?

For the disaster to our battle ship we want no money. There is nothing that can repair our wrong. Yes; one thing. If Spain would free Cuba to-day, we would offer up our 260 sailors as an offering upon the altar of Cuban freedom.

But, Mr. President, because of that disaster unatoned for and unexplained, the determination is burned into the hearts of the American people that war must come or Cuba be made free and independent. No other answer will be accepted.

Mr. President, this national honor which we evoke is intangible, it is inchoate, it is unwritten and unexpressed, but it has within it the force and the violence of the whirlwind and the storm. It is "that chastity of honor which feels a stain like a wound." The existence of it makes nations survive and fit to live. The loss of it, or the trading upon it, or the abandonment of it, makes nations fit to die and perish from the face of the earth.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that good men, hating war and loving peace, can see no way under heaven whereby war may now be avoided. At the outset it is fitting for us in advance to pledge ourselves that the statements we make to Europe and to mankind are true—that this is a war for liberty, for humanity, and for the succor of the suffering and the oppressed.

Personally, Mr. President, I regret that I can not find in the Cuban situation an independent government such as I can vote to recognize. I wish I could. For when the time of final adjustment shall come there is danger in these days of syndicates and commercialism and reorganizations that there will be found the men who play and trade on human liberties as they do on loans and chattels, who will seek either to aggrandize this property for the national uses at a price, or seek to syndicate it in some form whereby commissions may be realized. To-day we stand approved in the minds of every humane man in Europe because we stand for humanity and liberty. And there we must stand till the end and after the end, if we would win their respect and preserve our own.

Mr. President, when the day of final settlement comes and the issue has been finally closed, we must still stand as a nation, strong, self-centered, and humane, which heard the appeal of the suffering across the shallow waters of the Gulf and could not turn a deaf ear to the cry of the oppressed and the downtrodden. There is nothing nobler at the close of the nineteenth century than a great country, with everything to sacrifice and nothing to gain, standing up for human liberty and the relief of suffering. No concert of Europe chokes our utterance or strangles our voice. As a free people we can listen to their cries and heed them. And, Mr. President, serious as is this crisis, and great as are the dangers that grow out of the steps which we have taken, I am unwilling to believe that the claim will ever hereafter be made in the Senate or elsewhere that, having expended our blood and treasure for the sake of a suffering people, we should seize their fertile lands and annex them to our own as a recompense.

It has been said upon the floor of the Senate, and it has been heard much elsewhere of late, that unless a nation fights it decays and deteriorates; that—that it is essential to the race that it raise its young on wars, or else it goes to decay. If that is true—and I do not believe it—it is a pitiful statement to follow two thousand years of the teachings of Christ; and if it is true, it applies to a contest with equals.

Spain has a population of 16,000,000 of people and we have nearly 75,000,000. For three years Spain has drained her resources in men and money to the same extent as if we in three years had sent a million men, who had never come back, and a billion dollars in money to a colony 3,000 miles from the United States. This is the country upon which we are asked to whet our courage. It is as if we kicked a cripple whose crutch might hurt us until we took it away and invoked upon ourselves the plaudits of the world as a people of bravery and of daring.

Mr. President, we have heard on the floor of this House again and again denunciation of the Spaniards as cowards. From Alva and "stout Cortez" until to-day the Spaniard has been brutal in conduct, but courageous and brave. When we enter upon this war we do not want to befool ourselves either with the idea that we are fighting cowards or a foe our equal in numbers and resources.

No, Mr. President, this war is one which can bring us no material gain. It will bring us the loss of millions of dollars in our commerce. It will sweep our ships from the seas. It will create unrest in business. It will destroy industries. It will be followed by that lessening in morality which always accompanies the conclusion of a war. We will leave thousands of our young men dead of fever or by the bullet in the tropics in the Island of Cuba, and we shall be fortunate if we are not compelled to face serious complications with other European countries.

All these things we must count in advance, and we have counted them. And when the day of the result shall come and Cuba is free, as we must make her free, we will have fought a country which can never indemnify us by land, for we want no land beyond our border; a country which can never indemnify us in money, for she has got no money. We must find our only satisfaction, and it must be the supreme satisfaction of a free people, in this, that we have poured out our blood and our treasures to relieve the cry of suffering humanity.

The war which is already upon us, whatever the phraseology of our resolutions, must be fought because it is the manifest destiny of this Republic to stand forever upon the Western Hemisphere a sentinel of liberty. It must come, because if we fail to listen to the voice of the suffering or the cry of the downtrodden upon this continent, we shall be untrue to those principles of liberty, humanity, and Christianity upon which this country is founded as upon a rock. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, under Rule XXXIII, I believe it is, I move that the galleries be cleared. ["No!" "No!"] I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution in secret session under that rule. ["No!" "No!"] We have tried to stop this matter; we have appealed to the galleries not to give any signs of approval or disapproval, and they seem determined to pay no respect whatever to the Senate. I do hope the Senate will not permit itself to be turned into a mere bear garden, where everything that is pleasing to the audience shall be clapped and applauded and whatever is disagreeable shall be censured and reprobated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? Is it not a fact that probably more than one-half of the people in the galleries to-day have not been in the galleries before and that they were entirely ignorant of the existence of such a rule? It seems to me that an admonition to the galleries will be sufficient.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall certainly move to close the doors if it is done again. I gave notice early this morning to that effect, but I know that there have been a great many changes since in the galleries.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not press his motion at this time. I am entirely in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator, but I can not fail to observe that the most flagrant violations of our rules have been encouraged by the example of Senators upon the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I admit that, and it is not a very worthy example to set before an audience.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that if the Chair would give direction to the Sergeant-at-Arms that whenever applause occurs in the galleries the doorkeeper or other persons in charge should require the withdrawal of the persons who applaud if they can identify them, or clear the particular seat or portion of the gallery from which the applause comes, if they can not identify them——

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that can be done.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that would be enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. If they can not be identified in that particular gallery, the doorkeepers can clear the particular gallery and then get the guilty ones.

Mr. HOAR. That is precisely what I mean. I wish to say that if under the rules, whenever applause shall occur again or expressions of censure from the galleries, the Senator will make a motion that the debate shall proceed as in executive session, I shall be most happy under the rules to second his motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope I shall not have to do it. I hope that the Sergeant-at-Arms will be instructed to cause each gallery where any applause occurs to be cleared if the persons who make the applause can not be identified. With that instruction I will let the matter rest for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will so instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms. He has already done so this morning.

Mr. LODGE. Before the debate continues, I ask that I may be permitted to report a concurrent resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the report will be received.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT, ETC.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of Senate Report 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba; 6,500 for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. FRYE. Does the report include the testimony and the consular correspondence?

Mr. LODGE. It is the report on our tables, No. 885.

Mr. FRYE. And the resolution authorizes the printing of that report—the whole of it?

Mr. LODGE. It includes everything, I understand, that has been submitted by the committee in connection with the Cuban question. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] suggests that it be amended so as to include the President's message with the report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Does it include also the diplomatic and consular report?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the President's message take the first place in the document, to precede the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to insert the words "the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with," before the words "Senate Report 885."

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with Senate Report No. 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba; 6,500 for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 3472) to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 157) to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan;

A bill (S. 487) granting a pension to Delia Gilman;

A bill (S. 499) granting a pension to Sarah R. Frary;

A bill (S. 668) granting a pension to Frances E. Pease;

A bill (S. 1450) granting a pension to Catharine Leary;
A bill (S. 3517) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman; and
A bill (S. 3627) to create a board of local inspectors of steam vessels for the customs district of Alaska.

The message also announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 3) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 164) granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARNER, Mr. BREWSTER, and Mr. CASTLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 427) for the preservation and protection of public records and documents, and providing for the use of copies thereof as evidence;
A bill (H. R. 3963) to permit certain parties to intervene in the equity cause of the United States against Morris and others, pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia;
A bill (H. R. 4099) to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit courts in certain cases;
A bill (H. R. 4104) relating to the jurisdiction of United States courts, and regulating procedure concerning the same;
A bill (H. R. 5521) declaring the Federal jail at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., a national prison for certain purposes;
A bill (H. R. 6160) to amend section 4746 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;
A bill (H. R. 6901) to prevent the abatement of certain actions;
A bill (H. R. 7089) to amend section 3542 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the amount that may be allowed the coiner and melter and refiner of the coinage mints and assay office at New York for the wastage of gold and silver;
A bill (H. R. 8162) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent or lease certain portions of the forest reserve;
A bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and
A bill (H. R. 9210) granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin.

POSTAL TELEGRAPHS, TELEPHONES, AND SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

To the Senate:

In connection with Senate Document No. 39, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, and in further response to the resolution of the Senate of July 12, 1897, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relating to postal telegraphs, telephones, and postal savings banks in the colony of Victoria.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 15, 1898.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 149) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know of the Chair what is the question before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, being Senate joint resolution 149.

Mr. MORGAN. Has any amendment been yet offered to it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No amendments have been offered, but several notices have been received from Senators that they would offer amendments. Those amendments have been printed and they are on the tables of Senators.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to give notice that whenever amendments to the joint resolution come in I intend to move to lay them on the table as fast as they come.

[Mr. SPOONER addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. CHILTON obtained the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is now twenty minutes after 6 o'clock. We have been continuously in session since 10 o'clock this morning. I understand the anxiety of the Senator to dispose of this measure, and I suggest to him whether we can not now agree to terminate this session for to-day and agree that we shall meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and let the general debate continue without limit until 3 o'clock, and then from 3 to 7 no Senator shall occupy more than fifteen minutes. That will give four hours for the debate upon the various amendments which will be offered—a short debate—so that we can vote not later than 9 o'clock to-morrow evening.

Mr. DAVIS. What was the last suggestion?

Mr. GORMAN. That we shall continue the general debate from 10 until 3 o'clock to-morrow, and after 3 that we will continue the debate, no Senator to be permitted to occupy more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. CULLOM. That will be four hours.

Mr. DAVIS. Until what hour?

Mr. CULLOM. Seven o'clock.

Mr. GORMAN. That will make it 7 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the final vote to be taken at 7 o'clock?

Mr. GORMAN. That we shall vote without further debate on all the amendments pending or that may be offered, including the resolution that came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I welcome that suggestion and shall be very glad to enter into an arrangement to that effect.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the limit made a little larger. Make the limitation when the debate begins to, say, thirty minutes. That will give more of us a chance. I understand there are about twenty Senators who are on the list to speak.

Mr. GORMAN. My suggestion was that the general debate should run until 3 o'clock; that is five hours' debate, and I think that will give everybody an opportunity to be heard who so desires.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if that includes the vote on the resolution and the amendments.

Mr. DAVIS. On all questions connected with this measure.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Chair how many Senators are now booked to speak.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will answer the Senator from Nevada that twenty-two Senators have indicated their desire to speak.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if Senators would sit down we might hear what is going on. In the rear of the Chamber we are not certain of what is going on, and until there can be order I propose to object to anything being done. I do not know what the arrangement is which is proposed.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the proposition of the Senator from Maryland may be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I will restate the proposition. It is that the Senate shall now adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning that the general debate shall continue from 10 until 3, and that from 3 o'clock until 7 no Senator shall address the Senate longer than fifteen minutes.

Mr. BERRY. After 3 o'clock?

Mr. GORMAN. After 3 o'clock—from 3 to 7—and that at 7 o'clock we shall vote on the pending resolution and all amendments that may be offered, including the resolution that came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland exactly what will be the parliamentary condition of this question. Does the Senator propose to have the vote taken on the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and then leave the resolutions so that they have got to go back to the House of Representatives, even if they were amended by putting the House resolutions on them, or does he propose to have the resolutions the substantive subject before the Senate, or does he propose to have two?

It seems to me that the true and simple way would be to take up the House resolution, and then let any resolution the Senate proposes to pass, if they have a different one from that, be moved by way of amendment. That gives us one subject. The Senator's proposition seems to me, with all respect, to be a little vague in that particular.

Mr. GORMAN. No, Mr. President, I did not intend to exclude anything.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. I know that. I wish merely to understand the proposition.

Mr. GORMAN. The matter is under the control of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. And also of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. My suggestion was made so as to enable the Senator from Minnesota to consider the resolution reported from his committee, and also to take up the House resolution, if he shall so elect. That arrangement is broad enough to admit any amendment to either of the resolutions which any Senator may desire to offer.

Mr. HOAR. Then will the Senator from Minnesota inform the Senate now on what subject we are expected to proceed and in regard to what subject this agreement is to take effect?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it can hardly be expected that I should be able definitely to inform the Senate as to the particular mode of procedure. My understanding is, and my present impression is, that the course will be to take the House resolution from the table and move to substitute therefor the Senate resolution, and then thereafter all the amendments which come in.

Mr. MASON. I did not understand the last statement of the Senator. If I understand, the probable parliamentary proceeding will be to take up the House resolutions, and then, before submitting the question on the amendment as proposed by the minority of the committee, you propose to submit the question——

Mr. DAVIS. I will state it again, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. MASON. I wish the Senator would do so.

Mr. TELLER. And I hope the Senator will speak loudly enough, so that we can all hear in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. DAVIS. Without laying down any rule that I can not retract in this matter, but stating merely my present intention, so far as I am able to control the question, it is this: To move to take the House resolution from the table, then to move to substitute for the House resolution the resolution reported by the Senate committee, and move to substitute the preamble of the resolution of the Senate committee for the preamble of the House resolution. Then the entire matter will be before the Senate upon the resolution thus amended for all amendments now pending or thereafter to be offered.

Mr. MASON. Then there can be no misunderstanding as to the right to vote after we vote upon the question upon the amendments to the House resolutions, and our right to vote upon the amendment of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. GORMAN. None whatever.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let me suggest, as a matter of parliamentary law, that the substitute reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations will have to be perfected first, and any amendment will first be in order to that proposition. If the minority of the committee offer that amendment, that will be the first thing in order. The original resolution must be first perfected, and then the question will come upon the substitution of that amended resolution in place of the House resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course any statement I make will be subject to parliamentary law. Everybody, I trust, understands what I mean. What I mean is that in any situation hereafter there is going to be a square vote and an opportunity to vote on every resolution and every amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me suggest to the Senator that we perfect the Senate resolution, whatever it may be, and then substitute it for the House resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. That may prove to be the better way; but at present I prefer to let the matter stand as I have stated it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make a suggestion. The Senator gives five hours to-morrow, from 10 until 3 o'clock, without limitation as to the length of speeches. There are some of us who are not self-limited, as the doctors say about certain diseases—we are not self-limited as to speeches, and we are liable, some of us, to talk an hour or an hour and a half out of that five hours, and then it is proposed to give but four hours to the fifteen-minute speeches. That will not satisfy the demand. I suggest that a half hour would be about enough for each Senator between 10 and 3 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator can not get that proposition assented to, and I hope he will not insist on it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maryland proposes to make the speeches unlimited from 10 to 3 o'clock, as I understand, and after that time he proposes to have the speeches limited.

Mr. GORMAN. Unlimited from 10 to 3 o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. There would be a very great advantage indeed in that to the Senators who come first on the list of speakers. I am willing to confine myself to a ten-minute speech.

Mr. ALDRICH. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said from 10 o'clock to 3 was giving a very great advantage to those who come first and who can talk as long as they please, even five hours, and those coming in from 3 to 7 will be under the fifteen-minute limitation. That would not satisfy the demand. If we could have a half hour each between 10 and 3, there would be some chance, for a half hour apiece would permit ten speeches in that time, or you could lengthen the time during which the fifteen-minute speeches might be made. I want but a few minutes to speak. I am willing to make it ten minutes so far as I am concerned.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that we had better have a night session. There are a large number of speeches to be made. ["Oh, no!" "Oh, no!"]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask that the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland may be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall feel bound to object, unless there be a little more time given for speeches or a shorter limitation.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Maryland that, considering the importance of this matter and the number of Senators who have already indicated that they desire to speak on it, the point made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has great force. We meet in the morning at 10 o'clock. We had some experience upon this in the vote on another matter earlier in this session, when, under the time given for unlimited debate, one or two Senators occupied it all, and the result was that when we came to the fifteen-minute debate, Senators who then desired, as Senators desire now, to give their reasons—not to enter at length into the discussion of the matter, for it has been very thoroughly covered by the Senators who have spoken on each side, but enough to make each Senator's position clear—a dozen of those at least will be shut out.

Why not make this proposition: If anybody wants to take more than fifteen minutes—and it is as fair for one as it is for another—that to-morrow debate proceed under the fifteen-minute rule from the time we begin?

Mr. STEWART. I will agree to that.

Mr. HALE. I doubt very much whether I shall say anything upon this subject. Looking at the list of speakers, I can see plainly, if the suggestion the Senator from Maryland has made goes through, a dozen of us who would like to say something will be simply unable to say one word.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator if he is on the list?

Mr. HALE. There is no use to get on it. That is precisely the difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is great force in what the Senator says as to the limitation of the time. My name does not appear to be on that list, unless the Vice-President kindly puts it there now, so that I may be in order next after the twenty-four or twenty-five Senators who are to speak. It seems to me, however, that if we are to have this debate in order that Senators may express their views upon the respective amendments and vote upon the final question without elaborating arguments, we ought to begin at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. HALE. Under the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the fifteen-minute rule, and continue not later than 7 in the evening.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not say anything in my own interest, because I can accommodate myself to any time the Senate may think proper; but I hardly think it is fair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], who already has the floor to begin his speech, that he should be included in this limitation.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I do not wish to include him in it if he has the floor and wishes to go on in the morning.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, there are twenty-two names down on the list, as the Chair informs me, and while I do not object to the rule being extended in the interest or on behalf of the Senator from Texas, I think that those who will be entitled to the floor after he gets through ought to be entitled to the same privilege.

Mr. President, I do not believe we shall get to a vote any sooner by undertaking to limit debate upon the main question. I hardly think so. I do not think there is any disposition upon the part of anyone to delay the final vote upon this question. All there is—and it is a great deal—is an honest desire to express each Senator's views as he addresses the Senate. It looks to me as if it were curtailing the privileges of those who have not spoken. You have accorded to those who have spoken unlimited time, and then you cut off others who stand equally as meritorious before the Senate in the way of time as they did. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if we can not extend the time beyond 5 o'clock?

Mr. CULLOM. The limit is placed at 7 o'clock.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does the Senator extend it from 10 to 7?

Mr. GORMAN. From 10 to 3 without limit.

Mr. CAFFERY. For debate on the general question?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; and fifteen minutes to each Senator who desires to speak from 3 until 7 o'clock; but I have no objection to extending the time until 8 or 9 o'clock.

Mr. CAFFERY. With the evidence that we have before us to-day, it is quite probable that one or two Senators will take up all that time. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] made a most exhaustive and entertaining speech, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] likewise. They were the principal speakers to-day so far as the length of time is concerned. Without any disparagement to others, I may say that their debate was very instructive, and upon this question I believe we want all the instruction we can get. I know I do. I am trying to arrive at an honest conclusion on this question. I want light; I want to hear everything that is said.

I believe the Senator from Virginia to-day expressed the true situation when he said that war would keep, that it is not going to spoil. The blood letting, if we have war, will commence soon enough, and while war is imminent, it does look to me, Mr. President, as if it were somewhat trifling with a great question to hurry the debate, when upon other questions of insignificant moment as compared with this the debate has been absolutely unlimited. On the question of a private claim I have seen the Senate debate a week. On the question of finance, which sinks into insignificance, in my opinion, in comparison with this great question now confronting the country, we debated three or four months.

Now, Mr. President, what is there in the exigency of this situation that prompts the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee to demand that the course of debate be stifled, as it were, by limiting it to a narrow compass and preventing Senators from putting their views upon the record? This debate will go down to history, Mr. President. It marks an epoch in the affairs of the United States. The question of war is fraught with, perhaps, consequences which we do not now anticipate. It may be of evil; it may be of good; and I for one have not the slightest desire to do other than to get the voice of the Senate of the United States, which is a part of the war-making power, spread upon the records of the country elaborately, if Senators desire so to speak, so that we may have a monument hereafter which will guide us in future troubles.

Mr. BACON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to ask the Senator whether he himself desires to go on to-night or, as he has expressed it, simply desires to hear at greater length from other Senators. The reason I ask the question is this: It is possible that an arrangement might be made by which the Senator might himself be accommodated. I had expected to speak, but I am willing to be limited to fifteen minutes. I have suggested that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], as he already had the floor, should not be limited to fifteen minutes. I am also willing to make an exception of the Senator from Louisiana and give him additional time. If the remainder of us are willing to be limited to fifteen minutes each, that might possibly solve the trouble.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I very much more desire to hear others than to listen to the echoes of my own voice. My mind is fully made up as to the course I shall pursue, as to the line of debate that I will take: but, sir, I crave light. I do not want to plunge into a war of this description, or any other description, unless every phase of the subject is not only spread before the Senate, but before the country. We may be called on hereafter to justify our course. I want that course to be justified under every principle that can affect the national conscience, every principle under which it can be justified under international law.

I believe that this debate will terminate to-morrow evening. I do not believe there is the slightest desire—none lingers with me—to say one single word of surplusage or to occupy one minute more of time than this great subject ought to have. I ask for it, sir, in the name of the Senate, and I believe the country itself stands ready to accord us the poor privilege.

I do not desire any privilege for myself, I wish to say to my friend the Senator from Georgia; I am willing to take whatever comes to the common lot. I want no special privilege for myself. My remarks will not be extensive. After the elaborate discussion of this case in nearly every phase of it, those who follow will merely summarize the arguments without going so much into particulars.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the regular order, Mr. President. We do not seem to be likely to come to any arrangement, and we had better proceed with the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the request made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]?

Mr. CAFFERY. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask that order may be preserved in the Chamber and that Senators may take their seats.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Order will be preserved in the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Texas to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. I yield.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment, and ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States of America, without fault on their part, being involved in hostilities with Spain, on account of the war that is being waged by that power against the people of Cuba; the conduct of which is inhuman in its character; has long disturbed the peace of the United States; has greatly injured our commerce; has violated the rights of our people, guaranteed by treaties; has destroyed their lives by assassination and their property with the torch, and has culminated in the loss of the lives of our officers and sailors through the criminal destruction of the battle ship Maine while it was at anchor in the bay of Havana, on a visit of courtesy; and also for other well-known causes.

First. The Congress of the United States declares that a state of war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government and people of the United States.

Second. The foregoing declaration does not apply to the government of the Republic of Cuba, or to the people who are included in its citizenship.

Third. The President of the United States is empowered and required to use the land and naval forces of the United States in executing and maintaining this declaration of war until an honorable peace is concluded and the future safety and welfare of the people of the United States and the independence of Cuba are secured by the expulsion of the armed forces and the dominion of the Spanish Government from the Island of Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer it now.

Mr. CHILTON addressed the Senate. After having spoken a few minutes,

Mr. WELLINGTON. There is an evident disinclination on the part of the Senate to proceed, and I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "nay." I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 60, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Bate,	Clay,	Elkins,	Wellington.
Caffery,	Daniel,	McBride,
Chilton,	Deboe,	Turley,

NAYS—60.

Aldrich,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Pritchard,
Allen,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Quay,
Bacon,	Gear,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Roach,
Berry,	Gray,	Martin,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Shoup,
Cannon,	Harris,	Mills,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hawley,	Money,	Teller,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hoar,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Turner,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	Warren,
Faulkner,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—19.

Butler,	Kyle,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Mitchell,	Platt, N. Y.	Wetmore,
Hale,	Morrill,	Smith,	White,
Hanna,	Murphy,	Spooner,	Wolcott.
Kenney,	Nelson,	Turpie,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CHILTON resumed the speech heretofore begun by him. After having spoken some time,

Mr. LINDSAY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Deboe,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Allen,	Fairbanks,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Spooner,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mason,	Teller,
Berry,	Gray,	Money,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Hale,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Harris,	Penrose,	Turley,
Carter,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Turner,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Chilton,	Kyle,	Pettus,	Wellington,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	McEnery,	Quay,
Davis,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] informed me that he was unable to stay here. I am his general pair, and promised on all these minor matters to abstain from voting, in order that his vote might be counted in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CHILTON resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not think on so important a discussion as this that the Senator from Texas ought to be asked to proceed with very few Senators in their seats; and unless the debate is to go on in the presence of the Senate, so that we may really listen, as we have done during the day, to the arguments presented by Senators, I shall certainly be in favor of an adjournment. It is a farce, after so earnest a day as this has been and such constant attendance by Senators, the seats being all filled, and listening, as we have, to strong and remarkably strong arguments upon both sides, that now one or two Senators should insist upon our remaining here and oblige Senators to speak to empty seats, upon the theory that this matter must be put through on a few hours' notice. Unless the Senate can be here, as it has been to-day, and listen, as it ought to listen, to the Senator from Texas, I shall certainly, if I do not do so at the present time, move to adjourn, in order to test the sense of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to make a remark?

Mr. CHILTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. There are some Senators here—perhaps not many—who hold views not entirely in harmony with any that have been expressed thus far upon this floor. The Vice-President very properly has taken the names of Senators who have made suggestions that they desire to speak, and we have all acquiesced in that practice, which is entirely appropriate and has been uniformly enforced without dissent.

Those of us who have listened to the Senators who have spoken and uttered their views upon lines somewhat divergent from ours think we ought to be accorded a reasonable time to respond. We have said nothing. We have preserved our peace. We have listened. For myself, the views that I shall express here will be the views in which I believe and upon which I have predicated convictions that I have not been thus far able to change; but I do not propose to express those views at 2 or at 3 or at 4 o'clock in the morning. I propose that the same courtesy shall be extended to one Senator that has been extended to another.

I am willing to spend any reasonable time here, but I do not see the force of the criticism upon the desire expressed by us to have a reasonable opportunity in the ordinary daytime to express our views by those who have consumed two or three or four hours during the day. I assume none such criticise us, and that no Senator will object to a fair and candid expression of views upon this sort of a question. But it must be remembered that the report of the committee which has been under discussion, and which was only presented yesterday, is 600 pages in extent. If we were trying a case which involved the loss of an old horse or an old cow killed by an errant express train, we would be accorded far more hearing than thus far has been vouchsafed to us upon this question involving war between the United States and another nation.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I do not desire in an objectionable way to interrupt the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CHILTON. No; I do not so regard it.

Mr. HALE. My suggestion was made out of respect to him. When I came into the Chamber there were not over ten Senators listening to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FORAKER. I counted them at the time the Senator made his suggestion, and there were twenty-eight.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is quite ready to correct everybody in the Chamber. I counted as well as I could, and I did not count so many as the Senator, though I counted him but one.

Mr. FORAKER. What was that remark?

Mr. HALE. I did not count the Senator but one.

Mr. FORAKER. Do you mean to imply by that remark that I thought you ought to count me more than one?

Mr. HALE. I do not imply that.

Mr. FORAKER. Will you please be kind enough to state whether you did——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The Senator from Texas has the floor, and without his consent this controversy can not go on.

Mr. HALE. After such a day as to-day has been, and such a day as yesterday, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and other Senators yesterday and to-day had the attention of the entire Senate, as they ought to have had, because they presented their respective causes in the most forcible and eloquent fashion to an entire and listening Senate, I repeat my proposition that to be kept here upon the theory that this vote must be taken at once or speedily, and to subject Senators to speaking to an audience of only ten or a dozen or two dozen Senators, if the Senator from Ohio chooses, is not a fair thing, and that unless we can have a full Senate at night as well as during the day—and I am willing to stay here, and prove it by staying here—I shall certainly insist that we try to adjourn, or that a call of the Senate shall be had, and that Senators shall be found in their places. I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that I make this suggestion not in any way to interrupt him.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that.

Mr. HALE. But I make it out of respect to him. He ought to have the same attention that other Senators have had.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think whether we stay here or not of course ought to be determined by the Senate; and if any Senator thinks that the Senate desires to adjourn, that can be determined if the motion be put and the roll called.

I do not want the Senator from Maine to think that I intended any offense toward him when I corrected his statement. When he made the statement it did occur to me that he was probably the only Senator who was objecting to our going on at this time. I have not heard of anybody else objecting. I looked about to see how many Senators there were present, and as I ran my eye over the Chamber I saw there were twenty-eight in it, counting myself but once [laughter] and counting the Senator from Maine only once. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to engage in any personalities, and I was quite astonished that the Senator from Maine, usually so urbane and so considerate of the feelings of others, should have, at least apparently, engaged in personalities.

Mr. HALE. I think myself, Mr. President, that I was somewhat at fault in making the allusion I did, because the Senator is always here and was here at that time. My count, as I made it, was about ten or a dozen.

Mr. FORAKER. That was made a little while ago, possibly, while more Senators were in the restaurant than just now.

Mr. HALE. I think so.

Mr. FORAKER. I think we have an unusually full Senate, and I insist that we shall go on; but if there is to be objection, let it be made in the regular way.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted to make one observation, if I may.

It does seem to me that our friends who seem to be, and I dare say are, in a majority in the Senate in regard to their opinions on the question under debate, are a little regardless of the comfort, wishes, and rights of their associates in undertaking to force this great question through, and insisting on night votes and night sessions unless they can have an agreement which is to cut off Senators, representatives of sovereign States in this body, who have already given notice of a desire to speak; and there are certainly twenty-three or twenty-four who still have not been heard.

I do not wish to make any undue trouble about it, but for one I wish to enter my protest. The course being pursued does not do any good. The House of Representatives has adjourned until Monday, and we could not send anything over to the House of Representatives before 12 o'clock on Monday if we tried. There is time enough by daylight, without night sessions. We can meet here to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, if it is desired, and sit until 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening, and then meet at 10 o'clock on Monday, and do this thing without inconvenience.

I suppose when a man is not able to do the work that devolves upon him, he had better leave the Senate, perhaps, but for one it is an extremely painful thing to me, seriously affecting my health and my capacity for my official work, to sit here several hours in the night and in the glare of these lights. I am willing to do it if there is any necessity for it, but I feel very much aggrieved and wounded, for one, when I am constrained to do it simply because anybody wants to put my nose to the grindstone and make me vote promptly, without the ordinary debate, on the greatest question which has come before the country for generations.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I understood him to make the statement that the other House had adjourned over until Monday.

Mr. HOAR. So I am told.

Mr. FORAKER. I am just told by a member of the House of Representatives that the House is still in session, and has not adjourned until Monday.

Mr. CULLOM. My information is the same as that of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HOAR. Then I am misinformed.

Mr. FORAKER. Surely no one would wish to inconvenience the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. I think, Mr. President, that we might at a convenient time, perhaps after the Senator from Texas has finished his remarks, get an agreement which would give all the time for debate desired by Senators, and an agreement to vote at 10, 11, or 12 o'clock on Monday morning, which would accomplish practically everything that Senators desire in the way of promptness, and would not undertake to force us into a premature conclusion.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is entitled to the floor.

[Mr. CHILTON resumed and concluded his speech. See Appendix.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate at any length on this subject, and if we could have secured a vote promptly, or can now do so, I would be willing to defer what I have to say to some other occasion. I do not care to go into a general discussion of our relations to this subject. There has been a good deal said which, it seems to me, might as well have been left unsaid. I do not intend that this question, so far as I am concerned, shall assume a partisan shape or direction. I expect to vote for some sort of resolution in harmony with that presented by the committee, although perhaps not exactly like it, with an addition, as proposed by the minority, recognizing the independence of the Government of Cuba.

I do not think any question can arise in the mind of anyone that whatever steps we take in reference to the pending resolutions or those of a kindred character mean war between the United States and Spain, and I think every step we take should be taken with full knowledge that that will be the consequence of our act. There has been something said here to-day about the fact that we were not prepared. I think we are fairly well prepared for war; but if we are not, it is some consolation to me, as I stand here to-night and contemplate what may happen, to know that since I have been a member of this body I have never failed in my vote—and frequently I have given my voice to that end—to support a full and complete preparation for war, a preparation that was in accordance with the wealth, with the dignity, with the great coast to be defended, and the great interests which would be imperiled by war.

If there is not a suitable array of cannon on the coast, or if there is not a suitable number of ships, torpedo boats, and torpedo-boat destroyers, it is not because of any negative vote of mine. In contemplating this very much to be dreaded and very much to be regretted consequence of our act—war—I feel an intense satisfaction that no word of mine or act of mine has tended in the slightest degree to hasten this dire calamity, and that no act of mine or word of mine can, in the slightest possible degree, have embarrassed the Chief Executive of the nation in his consideration of this question.

Two months ago to-day the Maine was blown up. I believed then and I believe now that it was wisdom to leave the determination of that question with the executive branch of the Government until such time as the executive branch should determine whether there was or was not cause of complaint against Spain. I have on various occasions for years past, ever since this war began, expressed to the Senate in a brief way my views upon the subject.

I have said again and again that I did not believe it was necessary for us to be brought into a state of active hostilities against the Government of Spain, and to-night I feel morally certain, and I am supported in that belief by some of my associates who have spoken in this Chamber and by the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that if the Chief Executive two years ago last month had heeded the almost unanimous declaration of this body and the other there would to-day be no friction between us and Spain, there would be no starving people in the Island of Cuba, there would be no necessity for the array of battle ships and hostile fleets and hostile forces.

Mr. President, the great mistake which the American people have made was that three years ago we did not declare, what everybody on the face of God's green earth knew was the fact, that there was a state of war in the Island of Cuba. That is all that we demanded. That is all that the condition there required of us.

Mr. President, we have stood here as a nation denying a fact which everybody knew to exist—a fact that the Chief Magistrate of the nation now in his message declares has existed for three years. Had we said to the world, "We recognize these contestants upon the Island of Cuba as entitled to be treated not as pirates, not as rioters, not as those engaged in a mere émeute, but as soldiers contending for that greatest right, the right to govern themselves"—if we had said that, as we ought to have said it, we would have escaped a great war; for, let no man deceive himself, when we declare for war we must put on our full strength and our full force, for it will be no child's play.

We are going to war with new engines and new agencies and under new conditions. No man living, no matter how clear-headed he may be or what his experience has been, can say what will be the condition of our battle ships in battle array. No man can say what will happen to the American youth who go down into that fever-infested island to contend for the liberty of a neighboring people, and for the maintenance, as I believe, of a great duty incumbent upon us to maintain peace in the island.

Mr. President, I do not care what may be the law. I do not care whether the Executive is the man who shall declare the independence of the Island of Cuba or whether it is our act. I know that the time has come when the American people demand and when the interests of the race demand that we shall say the people of that island are entitled to be free, and as a great step, as I believe, toward making them free recognize the fact that they have a government there, a government which for three years has maintained war such as has not been maintained on the Western Continent for years, save that of our great war.

They have assembled more men in the Island of Cuba in the defense of Cuban freedom than we assembled to contest our freedom with Great Britain. Spain has sent four or five times as many soldiers to Cuba as Great Britain sent to us to compel us to yield obedience to her mandate. Yet that government is said not to be a government capable of being recognized by the people of the United States, either through its executive branch of Government or through the legislative, whichever's duty it may be.

I shall vote for the independence of Cuba. I shall vote to declare that there is a government in Cuba; and if we had voted that way and the executive department had accepted our opinion eight months ago, six months ago, we would not be threatened now with war. I am not warlike. I have said on the floor of the Senate again and again that I do not like war. I have said, though, that there are infinitely worse things than war. I believe we have reached a point in this transaction when war is a duty as well as a necessity. I wish it were otherwise.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who pictured to us the horrors of war. I know what will happen to the flower of the American youth when they shall go down to that fever-stricken island, as they will go, as they will go because there is a sentiment bred in the bone of the American youth which makes them sympathize with the struggling Cubans and with the people of every nation who aspire to better things and to lift themselves up.

They will go, and there will come bleeding hearts; there will be sorrow in many homes; there will be distress everywhere. Oh, Mr. President, that we could have done the right thing at the right time! It is idle to regret past opportunities. It is idle for us to say what we might have done, and yet a few of us, who feel if war comes it is not to be laid at our door, can not refrain. We did our duty here, and I have no charge against my associates who do not see their duty as I saw mine.

Mr. President, a word or two only as to the condition of Cuba. The President of the United States and the committee of this body charged with this question tell us what the condition is there. From that condition, if any Senator can come to the conclusion that there is not a government there and that his duty forbids him to vote to recognize that government and give to it such support as it is entitled to, I shall not quarrel with him.

I turn first to the President's message. I turn to it first because it is first in point of time. I do not wish to detract anything that has been said in favor of the Chief Executive. I have no accusations or criticisms here to make now save what I have already made. I do not agree with some utterances here to the effect that the President is to pass upon this question for me. I have an oath that I have taken at that desk. I have a duty that devolves upon me because of my position here.

I can not get rid of it by standing here and declaring that I have faith in the Executive or that I am willing to trust these great interests to his judgment. I was not sent here for that purpose. It has not been my habit nor my custom in my public life to surrender to any man my judgment upon questions on which I ought to have a judgment of my own. I do not read from the President's message only, the report of the committee, simply upon which to base my action. I read it as corroborative of my own judgment. The President says:

> The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained.

Mr. President, if that is so, the time has arrived when we can properly intervene, and the time has arrived when we can recognize the independence of that land.

> The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods.

That is, it can not be extinguished by Spain. The committee of the Senate with unanimity tell us that Spain has practically ceased her efforts to control the island, that she occupies only the fortified places, and her dominion is only where she can hold her army in safety from the insurgent troops. The committee say on page 8 of their report:

> The insurgents hold the eastern portion of the island, to the practical exclusion of Spain. This possession extends over one body of territory comprising fully one-half of the area of Cuba.
> The extermination by Spain of the peaceful inhabitants of the western portion of the island has so affected the balance of population between these moieties of Cuba that the insurgents comprise in the eastern half nearly one-third of the population of the island. That third of the population pays taxes to them, serves in their armies, and in every way supports and is loyal to them. This situation has existed ever since the first few months of the war. The armies of Spain under Campos, Weyler, and Blanco, successively, have been repelled in every invasion that they have attempted on the eastern half of the island.
> The cause of Spain has continually grown weaker and that of the insurgents has grown stronger. The former—> is making no substantial effort for the recovery of these lost provinces. Their people are secure from invasion and cruel administration.

That is, Spain—

And yet, Mr. President, this committee of ours come here and recommend to us that we shall not recognize that government there.

Spain has never been able to subject them to her unprecedented and murderous policy of concentration and extermination. Her armies have been more than decimated in the attempt to subdue them. Two hundred thousand of her soldiers have failed to reduce the insurgents. The few reenforcements that she is now sending to Cuba do not supply a tithe of her losses caused by battle and disease.

Her control over the western portion of the island is dominance over a desolation which she herself has created.

And yet because she may reach a section of country with her troops where no human being can live except as a warrior we are told that she has dominance over that country, and therefore we can not afford to recognize the insurgent government, established and maintained as it has been for nearly, if not quite, three years.

Even there she controls only the territory occupied by her cantonments and camps. Outside these the insurgents are everywhere in presence.

The committee say again:

The preceding observations have assumed a certain control and sovereignty by Spain over the western portion of Cuba. We have indicated its character. It is limited to scattered and fortified areas, and it is not a civil sovereignty. It is merely a military occupation of fortified places.

Mr. President, if anything more is needed to show that Spain is not dominant over the island, it can be found in some other portions of this report. It is a fact that we know here that Spain is only nominally in control of the island of Cuba even where she claims that she is in control.

Mr. President, I am loath to criticise a committee. I believe that this report, written with great vigor and with great intelligence and indicative of great learning, would have justified the committee in saying, in view of what we have declared, "Congress should recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba." I believe that that was the first intention of the committee, and that is all I think perhaps I ought to say with reference to it, except that I regret the committee did not come here with a resolution in accordance with the declaration they made of the state of facts which we all know exists.

Now, I wish to take a moment, and only a moment, for I do not intend to detain the Senate at any length with my remarks, to call attention first to the joint resolution reported by the committee:

That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

That is a proposition to which I agree. They can not be free and independent without an organization. With all deference to the committee, when they come here and talk to me about the independence of the people of Cuba they stultify themselves and in fact declare if independence exists there at all there must be a government, for it can only exist under an organized government of some character or kind.

As I said before, if the facts are as stated in the joint resolution, the joint resolution as reported should be amended as proposed by the minority and we should insert, after the word "independent," "and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island." I shall vote for the minority amendment. I shall vote for it with the feeling that it will afford relief to the Cubans and that it will save us from much embarrassment in our dealing with this question.

I do not deny the right of the Government of the United States to intervene there with or without reference to the Republic of Cuba, if it exists. As long as Spain denies that it exists and continues her controversy and contest, the Government of the United States may, in the interest of humanity or in the interest of her own people, intervene; but we must intervene, if intervene we do, with a declaration to the world that we are not making, under the pretense of intervention, a war of conquest, that we are not after the island. For the outrage committed upon us, if Spain blew up our ship, we may go to war; we may declare that a state of war exists. That is the first movement. But intervention is not to save our rights or redress our wrongs. Intervention is only justified when such a condition of affairs exists there that we are in duty bound to remove the cause of complaint.

Mr. President, I want the Senate, before we conclude this debate, to say to the world in the most emphatic manner possible that we do not intend in any way or manner to derive benefit from this intervention. Spain is too weak and too poor to pay indemnity. I want the Senate to say that we do not intend to take that island; that whatever we may do as to some other islands, as to this island, the great bone of contention, we do not intend to take it from the legally constituted authorities of the island as now established.

At the proper time, if no one else does so, I propose to offer some amendment to the joint resolution that shall make it clear to the world that it shall not be said by any European government, when we go out to make battle for the liberty and freedom of Cuban patriots, that we are doing it for the purpose of aggrandizement for ourselves or the increasing of our territorial holdings.

Mr. President, I have hoped, and I still hope, although there is but little to base it upon, that even yet we may avoid war. There will be no glory out of this war with Spain. There will be no laurels on the crowns of the conquerors that will compensate for what the war will cost.

I can not depict the horrors of war as they have been depicted by many a historian, but we can sum it up in the very brief language of one of our own great soldiers when he said "War is hell." It is everything that is wicked; it is everything that is bad. But, Mr. President, if war we must have, if we are going to war, I trust we shall go with a united front. I trust that we shall go with that vigor that is characteristic of our people, and that we shall make war in such way as shall satisfy the world that we are not making it for conquest, but that we are making it for liberty and freedom, in the interest of the human race and in the interest of our own people; that we shall make it in such way, Mr. President, that you will hear no mutterings from abroad of intervention in the affairs of this Western Continent by the allied powers of Europe.

If war comes I would make it so severe that the flag of Spain would be driven from every holding of hers on the face of the earth except the little country she occupies in Europe, and I would say to the allied powers, if they raised a question of intervention on our part, "We will fight the world in arms in defense of the right of the American people to control the affairs in the Western Hemisphere as they think they ought to be controlled." All you need to do is to say it, say it with our Anglo-Saxon vigor, say it with American pluck back of it, say it with 75,000,000 of united people, with the greatest wealth in the world back of them, and the world will stand and consider and they will not put their hand upon us. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, we are all aware that the different views of the matter under discussion have been presented at considerable length by the friends of each view except the view of the question entertained by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. These gentlemen have a right, as I believe, to present their view of this question. They have not had the opportunity up to this time.

I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and that four hours of the time after 10 o'clock, at such time as they come in, shall be allotted to the friends of this view of the case, and that the remainder of the session be confined to fifteen minutes' debate to each Senator, and that we vote before we adjourn to-morrow.

Mr. PETTUS (to Mr. JONES of Arkansas). Fix an hour.

Mr. GORMAN and others. Oh, no.

Mr. WHITE. So far as I am personally concerned, I have certain views upon this matter which I will express far more briefly than many Senators to-day, who wasted no words either. But I intend to have sufficient time to do that, and I am satisfied that I can say whatever I desire in an hour and a half at the furthest. But I do not care to enter into any agreement that will result in any invidious distinction of any sort. I do not think that there is any Senator or that there are any three Senators upon this floor who are entitled to any preference over other Senators.

So far as I am concerned, I will say that I shall take no more time than I have indicated, whenever my name is reached; and I do not propose to be bunched up with any other person by any agreement that we shall change our ordinary routine or displace other Senators whose names are upon the list before us. There are some twenty-odd names now upon the list before the Vice-President, and I believe I am twelfth or fifteenth in the line. When my time comes I shall not speak in excess of the time I have now mentioned.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think that the Senator from California might review his ideas on this matter, because this proposition does not make any invidious distinction or give any special privilege to those who are termed the representatives of the peculiar phase of this question, nor does it bunch us up, as I understand it. The proposition submitted by the Senator from Arkansas is that a certain time be allotted to certain Senators, the Senator from California and myself and the Senator from Maryland, four hours, which we can utilize according to the rotation in which we come upon the list, and I see nothing invidious in that. I think that is only a kindness that is offered to us on behalf of the Senate, and I for one am entirely willing to accept it. I shall not be long. I will say to the Senator from California that my remarks will be made inside of an hour, I think, unless some gentlemen get to asking me questions that I can answer.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose we give one hour for each?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Texas suggests that we give one hour each. We have stayed here to-day and listened to speeches three and four hours long. I do not complain of that. They have been instructive and able speeches, necessitated by the exigencies of the case. I hold certain views which I desire to present to the Senate as tersely as I am capable of expressing them, and I propose to do that. I say I can do it within the limits I have heretofore expressed, and if the ordinary routine is pursued which the Vice-President has before him, I will follow out that course, which, as I understand, comes in the end to the result which the Senator from Arkansas wishes to attain. But I do not like to have my time dictated by gentlemen who may or may not have consumed three or four hours.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from California will allow me a moment, I think, perhaps, he misunderstands the proposition I make. I do not propose to disturb the order in which the speeches are to come, as it is now on the Vice-President's desk. I did not ask the Senate to make any personal concession to any Senator; but I ask that the concession of four hours of time be accorded to the view of this question which we all know to be entertained by these gentlemen.

Upon the other views of the question we have had speeches two or three hours each, and they have been explained to the Senate in full. It is fair to that view of the case that it should be distinctly and fully discussed and set forth. These gentlemen can arrange among themselves about how much of the four hours shall be taken by each one and what shall be done. It is simply a concession to a view of the case which it strikes me every Senator will think is perfectly fair and just, and I hope for the purpose of settling this matter definitely there will be no objection to my proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is now entitled to the floor, I think, has given considerable time to this question. I should be very glad if it could be understood that he should have a half hour assigned to him. I make this suggestion in the hope that the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Arkansas may be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. WHITE. Upon the statement of the Senator from Arkansas that there is to be no deviation from the order as indicated upon the list before the Vice-President, I agree to the proposition.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am perfectly willing to enter into this arrangement. I believe, as does the Senator from Arkansas, that as some of us have certain views upon this question, and those views which we entertain have not yet been presented, there ought to be a certain time allowed us. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take what remains over from the time of the Senator from California and the Senator from Louisiana. I think I shall be able to say what I desire to say in less than an hour.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask that the request be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. I shall object to this arrangement unless it is understood that we shall fix a time for the vote. I am willing to stay here all night to hear these gentlemen give their views, and to give them all the time they want. I had desired to present some views, but I shall not do so because I do not want to consume the time. I appreciate what these gentlemen desire, and I feel disposed to grant them all the time they want, and the Senate can stay here to-night just as well as not.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will understand that there is nothing in the nature of a petition in this matter.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that.

Mr. WHITE. Furthermore, I trust the Senator from Mississippi will remember also that according to the list before the Vice-President, so far as I am concerned, I would not be called upon until, I think, the tenth or twelfth, which would probably mean after breakfast in the morning. So I am not anxious about the arrangement proposed.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me a moment?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is on the point of having an hour fixed for a vote. I would be very glad to have that done if I thought it would expedite matters at all, but I am fully satisfied that we will have a vote at an earlier time than would be agreed by the Senate to be fixed. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist on any delay resulting from the limitation.

Mr. MONEY. I should be glad to know why we can not proceed right now with this business to a finish?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course if Senators are willing to go on to-night I have nothing to say.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that he will not expedite matters at all by insisting on a night session.

Mr. MONEY. I do not understand.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that matters will not be expedited by insisting upon a night session. I intend to be heard about this matter, and you may sit here all night and you will not reach a vote any sooner.

Mr. MONEY. I understand the threat of the Senator.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I make no threat, but I have sat here very patiently and listened to the Senator from Mississippi, and I intend to be heard myself on this matter.

Mr. MONEY. I do not wish to thwart gentlemen in their wishes. I have simply a desire to bring this matter to a conclusion, which is very much more important than anything else. We stand in the attitude to-day of a people who have raised the hand to strike and hesitate to give the blow. I am willing that these gentlemen shall have all the time they want, but I do desire before we make an arrangement of any sort that there shall be some arrangement to have a conclusion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Mississippi will remember that those who are anxious to strike the blow have thus far consumed all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I am not subject to that charge, for I have said nothing, and do not propose to say anything, however much I may desire and do desire to do so; but nevertheless I do not desire to be here simply as the only man to object; and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we ought to fix the time to vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That will be impossible. I ask that the request for unanimous consent be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas restate his suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that when the Senate adjourn to-night it adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow, that four hours of the time to-morrow shall be allotted to the gentlemen who take the view of the case, as we all understand, which has not yet been presented here at all, the speakers to be recognized in the order in which they are on the list of the Vice-President, and that the debate be limited to fifteen minutes for other Senators, except in the case of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who desires thirty minutes.

Mr. WHITE. I presume also except in the case of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and myself.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I reserve four hours for the discussion of that view of the case.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the arrangement will be agreed to. I know the Senator from Mississippi does not wish to vote upon this question until he has heard the Senator from Maryland in full. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire is going out of his way to indulge in pleasantry here. I do not intend to intimate that it is necessary for the Senator from Mississippi to hear what I have to say about this matter, but I represent in part one of the sovereign States of this Union. I have sat here and listened to the Senator from Mississippi, when he returned as one of the agents of a newspaper in New York, and I believe that the people of Maryland——

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I want to correct the Senator from Maryland. The remark which he has just made is absolutely untrue.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that the Journal said that its commissioners had returned.

Mr. MONEY. I do not care what the Journal said.

Mr. WELLINGTON. If there is any untruth in the statement, it was made by that newspaper.

Mr. MONEY. I am correcting you, not the Journal. I say the remark you make is not true.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I make the remark as the Journal gave it.

Mr. MONEY. Then make it on your own responsibility.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I do make it on my responsibility.

Mr. MONEY. Then you lie.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I call the gentleman to order. If the gentleman can indulge in that kind of conversation upon the floor of the Senate, I can stand it as well as he can.

Mr. MONEY. Come outside and make it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Very well, then.

Mr. MONEY. Come now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, would a declaration of war be in order now? [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is out of order.

Mr. MONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to say that, under strong provocation, I used language which was not parliamentary. Nothing could be further from my intention than to violate the decorum of the Senate or to break any of its rules. I therefore desire to apologize to the Senate for language which I should not have used in its presence. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that my request be put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators have heard the request for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is one point I did not suggest in my last statement, that a part of the understanding was that there should be a vote before we adjourn to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. ALLEN. If we can have order, I want the rules of the Senate enforced, so that when Senators are called to order for misconduct in the Senate they shall take their seats until they are permitted to proceed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senate is in order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate is now in order. Is the request of the Senator from Arkansas acceded to without objection? The Chair hears——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] first addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. I was simply going to suggest—I am not very much excited myself—that the Senator from Arkansas had not completed his statement. I listened very closely, hoping that he would complete it, and that was that we should continue in session after the four hours.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Arkansas expressly stated that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The suggestion was not that we should adjourn——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me make my statement. That after the four hours allotted to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and half an hour to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]—that with those exceptions we shall proceed under the fifteen-minute rule and continue in session until we come to a vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the request of the Senator from Arkansas. Is objection made?

Mr. WHITE. There may be a mistake with reference to the proposition announced by the Senator from Nebraska. There was no agreement as to the mere four hours and a half. There will be more time than that consumed before the three Senators referred to will be able to conclude their remarks, for the reason that there will be intervening the remarks of many other Senators, and it may be five or six or more hours before the Senators referred to will finish, because other Senators will speak ad interim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be part of the agreement that Senators must not be interrupted while speaking. There should be unanimous consent to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will see that the time is properly allotted.

Mr. MILLS. I hope that Senators on the floor will not be interrupted at all, but let them make their speeches without interruption.

Mr. HALE. I only rise to say that the noise was so great that it was almost impossible for us to understand the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas. As I understand it now, it is that after the time taken by the longer speeches each Senator who desires to speak shall have only fifteen minutes and that the vote shall be taken before we adjourn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, my proposition was not that four hours should be allotted first to those gentlemen, but that the speakers should be called in the order in which they are on the list of the Vice-President, and after the views of the question which those Senators entertain who have been mentioned have been presented for four hours, other Senators, except the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], shall be limited to fifteen minutes, and that the Senate vote before an adjournment is had.

Mr. HALE. That I do not think to be important. The only thing I wish to get at is that the Senator does not fix an hour.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. Then that is entirely satisfactory to me. I think it is a very fair proposition, and I hope it will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the request made by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MILLS. I submit that I want it to be a part of the unanimous-consent agreement that the three Senators referred to are not to be interrupted while they are speaking.

Mr. WHITE. I do not care anything about that so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MILLS. I do care, because it would prolong their speeches and minimize the chances of others to speak.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? [A pause.] It appears to be given. It is given.

Mr. HALE. I hope it will be understood, Mr. President, that the time of no Senator will be extended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir; I intended to do that, but the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] wishes to proceed this evening, and I will not make a motion to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I will proceed now.

Mr. WHITE. Will there be any further proceeding to-night after the Senator from Nevada concludes?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time now occupied by me shall not interfere with the time of the Senators who are to come after me.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, as part of the unanimous consent under which the Senator from Nevada is going to speak is it understood that we are to adjourn at the conclusion of his remarks?

Mr. GORMAN. No; that does not follow.

Mr. STEWART. I propose to take up the time not now occupied; and I ask unanimous consent that it shall not interfere with the regular order of those on the list of the Vice-President. By proceeding now, my name may be taken out of the list for to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will proceed, no objection being made.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that the Senator can not be heard, and I trust that order will be restored before he proceeds.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the rules of the Senate be enforced and Senators required to remain in their seats and cease conversation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will Senators take their seats and cease conversation, so that the Senator from Nevada can be heard?

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that there shall be no speaking until Senators are seated and there is quiet in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators will be in order. [A pause.] The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I regard the recognition of the independence of Cuba as a condition precedent to any interference whatever. If the people of Cuba, after their struggles during the last seventy-five years, and after having carried on a war the most remarkable in history, as shown by the President's message, and after having exhibited patriotism, courage, and self-sacrifice which no other people ever did—if those people, having done that, having established a government satisfactory to themselves, can not now be recognized, it is proof conclusive that they never will be capable of self-government.

If, after seventy-five years of wars waged for liberty, and after the experience they have had, they have not been qualified to organize and maintain a government, they never can be. The bare suggestion that the people of Cuba have no government is refuted by every document before us, and more strongly by the President's message than by any other document I have seen.

What is the policy of the American Republic? What is the Monroe doctrine? Is it to interfere whenever there is an insurrection in the colonies of any of the powers of Europe? Is that the policy? Do we interfere with governments of Europe on this continent to quell insurrection, or will we maintain republican institutions? Will we defend the republics of this hemisphere from foreign interference? Does the Monroe doctrine convert this country into a police to quell insurrections, or does it compel us to recognize republics?

There is a wide difference between going where there is no government when we so desire on our responsibility, and going where there is an existing government—there is a wide difference; and it seems as if there was a struggle on the part of somebody to put this country in a position where the Island of Cuba will remain liable for the payment of the $400,000,000 of Spanish debt secured on that island.

I want to call attention to a statement of the case by one of the ablest, clearest, and most conscientious writers on international law that America has produced. No one surpasses the late President Woolsey, of Yale, in the accuracy of his statements, in his research before he makes a statement, and no one, I say, more conscientiously, more learnedly, or more ably sums up the general principles of international law than he. I pronounce him a high authority, and international lawyers will agree with me. He is first among American authors as stating the general doctrine, and particularly the American doctrine, with regard to the liabilities which occur on the division of a country. He says:

A state is a moral person capable of obligations as well as rights. These relations continue after it has passed through a change of constitution, for, notwithstanding the change, the state may still preserve its attributes and functions. No act of its own can annihilate an obligation to another state; and its rights still continue, unless its former constitution of government was the condition on which the obligations of other states toward it were founded. The general rule, then, as all admit, is that rights and obligations survive a change of government or a revolution. So, when a nation separates into parts or unites with another state to form a new whole, it can not even by such a process, which destroys or modifies its existence, divest itself of its obligations.

Thus debts due to foreigners outlast all such mutations, and not to provide for their payment would be a violation of right. When at the formation of the Federal Constitution the States' debts were assumed, and when at the separation of Norway from Denmark the old debt of the united countries was equitably divided, these were acts of simple justice and good faith. It may happen, however, that a union or division of states renders a past obligation of treaty impossible, or inconsistent with present relations. Thus suppose that Scotland, before its union with England, had engaged to furnish France with a contingent of troops. This engagement would hardly be thought binding after the union; much less would one be binding which contemplated an alliance against the very country with which a union now subsisted.

It may be said, indeed, that the prior engagement forbade the forming of a new engagement inconsistent with it. This is indeed a rule of right, but not a rule which is valid against important state necessity. There is another extreme case, again, where a change of government may dissolve prior obligations. It is where a despotical or usurping government has contracted debts or made treaties against a nation attempting to recover its liberties. The government is de facto in possession of authority, and thus its acts are lawful; nevertheless, obligations entered into to subjugate the people must be regarded in this extreme case as pertaining to the government alone, and not as resting on the people.

That is, where the people of a country gain their own liberties by revolution they may start anew. Now it is proposed to deny that that state of affairs has arisen in Cuba. We deny that the Cubans have gained their liberties, that they have a government, although the President tells us that Cuba is forever lost to Spain and that it is impossible for Spain to retain it. Although these things are recited to us by the committee as well as by the President, still we are unwilling to follow the logic of that declaration and to recognize the independence of Cuba, recognize a fact which both the message of the President and the report of the committee clearly make known.

When we deny such fact and take military possession of that country, we will be estopped from saying that we did not acquire possession of the country by force of arms, and whatever way we dispose of it, Cuba in our possession will be liable for all the obligations placed upon the island by the Spanish Government while it was a part of the Kingdom of Spain. We can make no disposition of it which will free it from those obligations. Nothing short of successful revolution by the people of the island and the establishment of a government of their own can free Cuba from the obligations contracted by Spain.

It is our duty, while we drive Spain from Cuba, to free Cuba from an insufferable bonded debt. The Administration Senators say we build up a government there and pass it over to the inhabitants. Whenever we do that, those same six powers that made representations to this Government with regard to this matter the other day will make representations to the Cuban government, and they will demand that the citizens of their country shall be paid their claims. Can the Government of the United States interfere to protect Cuba from that?

If it does, they will say to us, "Your President and your Congress did declare in effect that there was no government in Cuba when you went there and set up a government. You acquired it by conquest from Spain. You took it subject to the obligations resting upon it. You set up a government and transferred to it your title by conquest. The government you have set up is no more freed from the obligations created by Spain by the transfer you made than a sale of mortgaged property would free it from the lien of the mortgage. That will be the result if we set up a government in Cuba; and as surely as the sun rises the mortgage of $400,000,000 will be enforced upon the Cubans. Instead of liberating Cuba, we will put her in the condition of suffering Egypt.

If the Committee on Foreign Relations hold that there is a government in Cuba entitled to recognition, why not follow the logic of what they have said and declare that there is a subsisting government and avoid the danger of substituting bonded slavery for Spanish cruelty? The President's message and the House resolution, unintentionally of course, make it possible for Spanish bondholders to enforce their claims against the Cuban people.

I saw an interview with the President published in the Evening Star, which is generally accurate, though, of course, I do not rely on newspapers, but it speaks the language of monarchy so plainly and the sentiments that it attributes to Sir Julian Pauncefote are so in harmony with the theory of foreign governments that it may be well to pay some attention to it. I find this statement in the Evening Star of the 14th instant. Sir Julian Pauncefote is speaking:

It is claimed that there is the authority of the President for the assertion that if either the House resolutions or the majority resolutions of the Senate are sent to him he will sign them promptly and execute them immediately with the use of the Army and Navy; but that if the recognition of the present Republic of Cuba is inserted he will veto the resolutions.

It is said that the Foreign Relations Committee are aware of this purpose of the President.

I think that must be a mistake, but what follows is very natural:

The President is quoted as explaining his position on this proposition to gentlemen who called on him last evening. He is represented as saying that sympathy, even of England, would be forfeited by this Government if the republic was recognized. The expression "stable and independent government," he is represented as saying, has been carefully considered and found acceptable, but that Sir Julian, the British ambassador, has represented to this Government that the recognition of the present republic would be regarded by Great Britain, as well as by the other powers, as giving encouragement to malcontents among the colonies and possessions of foreign Governments in this hemisphere to revolt, relying on the United States to recognize their independence, however weak they might be, if they set up the claim of having a republic.

I know that is the sentiment of the foreign powers, for it comes from the entire European press that they do not want Cuba recognized as independent, because it would be inconsistent with their theory of government. We know they do not want a Cuban republic; we know that they are opposed to a republican government. That is well understood. Shall we be governed by European influence? Shall this proceeding be in harmony with bonds and monarchy or shall it be in harmony with free institutions? Shall we assert our determination to maintain republics on this continent or to establish governments in harmony with the suggestions of monarchy? This is a very serious question, and it is a very large one. What right have we to establish a stable government in Cuba unless we annex the territory? Are we to make governments for the Cubans?

I do not want to criticise the President, but I think it is my duty here to so regulate my action as to protect the interests of the United States in its legislative capacity, and I differ entirely with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] as to what is legislative and what is Executive duty with regard to the recognition of other governments. The Senator even alluded to Hamilton and to Madison on this point. Mr. Hamilton, in arguing in favor of the adoption of the Constitution, gave one construction to the power conferred by receiving foreign ministers by the President, and afterwards another construction, which was reviewed by Mr. Madison. In 1788 Mr. Hamilton, in one of his letters published in the Federalist, said:

The President is also to be authorized to receive ambassadors and other public ministers. This, though it has been a rich theme of declamation, is more a matter of dignity than of authority. It is a circumstance which will be without consequence in the administration of the Government; and it was far more convenient that it should be arranged in this manner than that there should be a necessity of convening the legislature or one of its branches upon every arrival of a foreign minister, though it were merely to take the place of a departed predecessor.

This was the construction he put upon the provision in the Constitution to receive ambassadors and other public ministers when the fate of the Constitution was pending before the States and he was anxious for its adoption. He afterwards regarded it as a most important power and as intrenching upon the power of Congress to declare war. The change of opinion on this important question on the part of Mr. Hamilton subjected him to the charge of construing the Constitution according to political expediency, without regard to consistency.

Mr. Madison reviewed this change of position by Alexander Hamilton at the time the change was made, in the third letter, under the nom de plume of "Helvidius." (See Federalist, edition of 1842, page 444.)

The words of the Constitution are: "He [the President] shall receive ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls." I shall not undertake to examine what would be the precise extent and effect of this function in various cases which fancy may suggest or which time may produce. It will be more proper to observe in general, and every candid reader will second the observation, that little, if anything, more was intended by the clause than to provide for a particular mode of communication, almost grown into a right among modern nations, by pointing out the department of the Government most proper for the ceremony of admitting public ministers, of examining their credentials, and of authenticating their title to the privileges annexed to their character by the law of nations. This being the apparent design of the Constitution, it would be highly improper to magnify the function into an important prerogative, even where no rights of other departments could be affected by it.

To show that the view here given of the clause is not a new construction, invented or strained for a particular occasion, I will take the liberty of recurring to the cotemporary work already quoted, which contains the obvious and original gloss put on this part of the Constitution by its friends and advocates.

Then he quotes from Hamilton what I have just read, and criticised it as follows:

Had it been foretold in the year 1788, when this work was published, that before the end of the year 1799, a writer, assuming the merit of being a friend to the Constitution, would appear and gravely maintain that this function, which was to be without consequence in the administration of the Government, might have the consequence of deciding on the validity of revolutions in favor of liberty, "of putting the United States in a condition to become an associate in war," nay, "of laying the legislature under an obligation of declaring war," what would have been thought and said of so visionary a prophet?

The moderate opponents of the Constitution would probably have disowned his extravagance. By the advocates of the Constitution, his prediction must have been treated as "an experiment on public credulity, dictated either by a deliberate intention to deceive or by the overflowings of a zeal too intemperate to be ingenuous."

But how does it follow from the function to receive ambassadors and other public ministers that so consequential a prerogative may be exercised by the Executive? When a foreign minister presents himself, two questions immediately arise: Are his credentials from the existing and acting government of his country? Are they properly authenticated? These questions belong of necessity to the Executive. But they involve no cognizance of the question whether those exercising the government have the right along with the possession. This belongs to the nation, and to the nation alone, on whom the government operates.

The questions before the Executive are merely questions of fact; and the Executive would have precisely the same right, or rather be under the same necessity, of deciding them, if its function was simply to receive without any discretion to reject public ministers. It is evident, therefore, that if the Executive has the right to reject a public minister, it must be founded on some other consideration than a change in the Government or the newness of the Government; and consequently a right to refuse to acknowledge a new government can not be implied by the right to refuse a public minister.

It is not denied that there may be cases in which a respect to the general principles of liberty, the essential rights of the people, or the overruling sentiments of humanity might require a government, whether new or old, to be treated as an illegitimate despotism. Such are in fact discussed and admitted by the most approved authorities. But they are great and extraordinary cases, by no means submitted to so limited an organ of the national will as the Executive of the United States; and certainly not to be brought by any torture of words within the right to receive ambassadors.

I do not care who denies it, Madison's criticism and Hamilton's statement, when the case was submitted, closed the case in favor of Mr. Hamilton's original view and refuted the new power invented by the genius of Hamilton after the Constitution was adopted. I am aware that Executives have claimed the right to control all our relations with foreign powers and to practically usurp the power to declare war. Attorneys-General can generally be found to furnish arguments to sustain the President's views and to augment the power of the Executive, while they minimize the power of the legislative department. It is the duty of Congress to guard well the power conferred upon it by the Constitution. I agree with Madison and I agree with Hamilton before the Constitution was adopted. While Hamilton addressed the States in favor of the adoption of the Constitution he suppressed his leanings toward monarchy, but after the Constitution was adopted he naturally followed his inclination for concentration of power in the Executive, and sought to derive it from the Executive duty to receive ambassadors and other public ministers, which he had formerly held was a mere matter of form without substantial substance.

The President, however, does not propose to deal with our relations with Spain solely by his Executive authority. He calls on Congress for legislation and proposes legislation for the consideration of Congress. I most emphatically dissent from the views of the President and from his standpoint of expediency.

After having stated facts which establish for the Cubans a stronger case for recognition than any other Spanish-American country ever had, he ignores the right of the Cuban patriots to have the government they have established recognized and treats the whole subject from his standpoint of expediency.

He says:

Nor from the standpoint of expediency do I think it would be wise or prudent for this Government to recognize at the present time the independence of the so-called Cuban Republic. Such recognition is not necessary in order to enable the United States to intervene and pacify the island. To commit this country now to the recognition of any particular government in Cuba might subject us to embarrassing conditions of international obligation toward the organization so recognized. In case of intervention our conduct would be subject to the approval or disapproval of such government. We would be required to submit to its direction and to assume to it the mere relation of a friendly ally.

What else do we want? That particular government can change its form; the people have the power to change their government and their constitution. They have a government that has served a great purpose, and yet it is said it is not expedient to be their ally. We must do what? We must put ourselves in the position of absorbing the country and maintaining the lien of the bondholders. How are we going to accomplish that?

The President says:

When it shall appear hereafter that there is within the island a government capable of performing the duties and discharging the functions of a separate nation, and having, as a matter of fact, the proper forms and attributes of nationality, such government can be promptly and readily recognized and the relations and interests of the United States with such nation adjusted.

When there shall hereafter be a government. After we have interfered and set it up, after we have deprived the Cubans of the right of liberty free of debt, which they won, we will not acknowledge it. How can we ask the European powers to acknowledge it when such action destroys hundreds of millions of bonds held by their citizens? When Cuba calls on us to enforce the Monroe doctrine and protect her against the powers of Europe threatening to collect from her the debts due their citizens, how would we answer the argument of the powers that there was no government in Cuba when we took possession and set up a government; that the government that we set up was a government following conquest and not revolution, and therefore liable for the obligations incurred by Spain while it was a Spanish province?

How would my friends, Senators ELKINS, SPOONER, and others, answer the argument? Would they not say that we could not afford to go to war to protect Cuba and relieve her of the situation in which we shall place her, if we follow their advice or that of the President?

The President says:

There remain the alternative forms of intervention to end the war, either as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants, or as the active ally of the one party or the other.

He says that if we went there and recognized the Cuban government, we would be the allies of Cuba. We have been the allies of Spain, as shown by the report of the committee. Without our aid Spain could not have maintained the contest with Cuba six months. Cuba would have been independent. The President says that we have the alternative to go there as the allies of one or the other or to go there as a neutral, imposing rational compromises between the contestants. Are we going there to compromise between Spain and these patriots? Is that the demand of the patriotic citizens of the United States—compromise with Spain after she has lost Cuba, as the President informs us?

Compromise what? What right has Spain to Cuba after she has lost it? After she has committed the outrages of which she is guilty, after she has blown up the Maine, after she has starved to death hundreds of thousands of her citizens by a war of extermination and famine, what right has she in Cuba to compromise? What right have we to destroy the government established by the blood and sacrifice of the patriots and set up another and different government for the purpose of compromising away the rights which the Cubans have acquired by war with Spain who, according to the President, has already lost Cuba?

The President reminds us of the cordial relations existing between Spain and the United States in the following significant language:

As to the first, it is not to be forgotten that during the last few months the relation of the United States has virtually been one of friendly intervention in many ways, each not of itself conclusive, but all tending to the exertion of a potential influence toward an ultimate pacific result, just and honorable to all interests concerned.

There has been no information given to us by the President that he has even suggested to Spain the independence of Cuba. That such a suggestion has been made is denied by the Spanish newspapers. It is said that the President of the United States not only has not demanded the independence of Cuba, but avoided that topic in his diplomatic intercourse with Spain. On the contrary, he suggested an armistice which would keep the Spanish flag there during the rainy season, when Spain can not prosecute war, while the Cubans can. The kindly nature of our President is especially emphasized by the following sentence in his message:

The spirit of all our acts hitherto has been an earnest, unselfish desire for peace and prosperity in Cuba, untarnished by differences between us and Spain, and unstained by the blood of American citizens.

We have gone along as smooth as oil with Spain. Even the blowing up of the Maine could not make a ripple on the smooth and even tenor of our negotiations.

I desire to emphasize the President's affectionate language by repeating it again:

The spirit of all our acts hitherto has been an earnest, unselfish desire for peace and prosperity in Cuba, untarnished by differences between us and Spain and unstained by the blood of American citizens.

True, we have murdered nobody, but Spain has. The stain of American blood is already on the treacherous hand of Spain, and if in defending the honor of our Government and avenging the murder of our citizens the stain of Spanish blood is seen on our banners, it would not shame or humiliate us as American citizens.

The President says:

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war, according to the large dictates of humanity and following many historical precedents where neighboring states have interfered to check the hopeless sacrifices of life by internecine conflicts beyond their borders, is justifiable on rational grounds.

The President frankly tells us against whom he desires Congress to declare war.

He says:

It [his recommendation] involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Hostile constraint on patriots who have struggled as the Cuban patriots have? Why should we overthrow the Cubans by force of arms for the miserable privilege of compromising away their rights with Spain? Who will be present when the compromise with Spain is made? Will not foreign governments, representing the creditors of Spain, claim the right to be heard when we are arranging a settlement between the government we have set up and Spain? Does Congress place Spanish bonds, secured on Cuba, above the right of freedom and independence already won by the people of Cuba? If not, why authorize the President to restrain by arms the operations of the government which the Cubans have established to give place to a government by conquest which will be liable for the obligations contracted by Spain?

I am sorry that the President wants power to commit so great a wrong. He asked Congress to authorize him to use the Army and Navy for that purpose. I deny that it is the duty of Congress to authorize such an outrage because the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. I know my friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] would not himself do such a wrong. I know no Senator here would do it. The influence which has suggested such a course to the President of the United States may never be known even to the President himself. We do know from the President himself that the government to be set up by the United States will be "capable of performing the duties and discharging the functions of a separate nation," and that such a government set up by the United States exactly fits the case of Spanish bondholders.

We do know that Europe objects to new republics. We do know that Europe would object to her citizens losing their claims upon Cuba through investments in Cuban bonds, knowing that there has been an unsettled state of things on the island for seventy years. They have let them have money to carry on this war, knowing that it might be impossible for Spain to retain control of Cuba and make the mortgage good. They invested their money knowing that if justice were done, Spain would lose control of Cuba. They would undoubtedly be pleased if they could use the United States to recover the claims now lost to them.

We saw this same power that was represented here the other day operate in Europe last year. About 100,000 Christians, Armenians, had been murdered by Turks. When the Christians resented it and resorted to war, when they set up an independent government in Creto, the same powers, to save the mortgage they held upon the resources of Turkey, intervened against the Christians, intervened against their efforts to save their lives, intervened after they had pretended to be shocked at the wholesale murder of Christians in Turkey, to maintain the vested right of the Turk to kill Christians. Then when the Turk was about to devour Greece altogether, they intervened there again to save the remnant of Greece in order to save the bonds which that country had issued.

This Christian intervention of the great powers of Europe has come across the water and is suggesting what we shall do. For what? To preserve despotic rule in Cuba, to prevent the Cubans from having a republican government, and to give them a stable government which shall be charged with $400,000,000 of Spanish bonds, held by the citizens and subjects of the powers here represented.

How unjust the suggestion of hostile restraint against the Cuban patriots when the President tells us of their success in the following significant language:

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained.

They have lost their mortgage now, and they want a new one. The President says:

The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

Why not stop it by driving the Spaniards away? Again the President says:

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba—

Not the Government of Cuba, but the people of Cuba—

and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

"To secure * * * the establishment of a stable government." What kind of a stable government? Is there anything more stable than a monarchy? Is there anything more stable than a dictatorship? The European powers look upon republican governments as the most unstable of all forms of government. Most any kind of government set up by the United States would be good enough to assume the payment of Spanish bonds, and if it were a despotism, it would be entirely satisfactory to the great powers of Europe.

I wish to read a few extracts from the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations as to what we have already done, and to see if it is not time that our alliance with Spain were dissolved and the republican government of Cuba recognized.

The recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba entitles the United States to insist that the war shall be conducted in accordance with those humane laws which have been ordained by the common consent of the civilized world, and which have done so much to mitigate the horrors of warfare. So long as this Government abstains from such recognition Spain is entitled to insist that we agree with her that the insurrection is merely a treasonable riot and not a formal and organized rebellion, and that she is therefore entitled to execute upon the insurgents and upon American citizens, and all persons upon the island, the penalties of a domestic code which is an affront to civilization.

Recognition would relieve us from that.

The United States has been in this attitude of concurrence ever since the beginning of the war. It has, as a consequence, in a spirit of forbearance, submitted to many atrocities perpetrated by Spain upon our own citizens which, under recognition, would have had no warrant in international law and would have afforded just grounds of procedure by this Government under its acknowledged principles. Citizens of the United States have been condemned to death by military tribunals in violation of their treaty rights. The expostulations of this Government have been in effect merely petitions for royal clemency.

That is the position we have occupied.

The Competitor prisoners, captured under our flag, were imprisoned nearly seventeen months and were never brought to trial, though they were subjected to many harsh, illegal, and degrading preliminary examinations. The entire proceeding against them was unlawful and in derogation of their rights and of our honor. But as they were technically, in the attitude which the United States had assumed and had placed them in refusing recognition of belligerency or independence, merely ordinary criminals prosecuted by Spain under her domestic penal code, this Government, it was logically insisted by Spain, had no right to make the question one of international obligation. It accepted royal clemency and, in the person of its citizens, received a pardon for a crime instead of demanding reparation for a violated right.

That is not all. Here is the authority for it:

The United States has been compelled by its attitude of nonrecognition to assist Spain by its execution of our neutrality statutes. If there is no war, and the insurgents are merely an unlawful confederacy of common insurrectionists, they can have no legitimate commercial dealings with the citizens of the United States.

We have had our detectives out hunting them down here, and we have our prisons full of them to-day, because we would not recognize.

Further on the report says:

Nor can the insurgents object to Spain having such dealings of every character, including the purchase of supplies, which, had recognition been accorded, would be contraband of war and therefore not to be furnished except through breach of neutrality. The United States has therefore been an assistant of Spain. The supplies for that power have been largely purchased in this country. The unrecognized insurgents have had no right to complain. On the other hand, they and their adherents have been prohibited from making such purchases and from exporting any supplies, however acquired.

There has, therefore, been no real neutrality by this Government throughout the entire business. To the contrary, Spain has been the customer of the people of the United States, who have sold her, with technical lawfulness, everything that she has required to repress by such processes as we have indicated a people struggling against tyranny for their liberties. To prevent the insurgents from buying or exporting at all, while Spain has bought and exported to the extent of her requirements, the Navy and revenue vessels of the United States have been diligently and successfully employed. It has been stated, and we believe with entire correctness, that this vigilance and policing of the seas by the United States in favor of Spain and against the insurgents has cost this Government more than $2,000,000.

Now, when this is a fact and when the committee report in favor of recognition, why is it so important to leave those words out? Why should they be left out? For what purpose are they left out? Why is this struggle over recognition? The recognition that you suggest of the people is what? If it means recognition of the Government of Cuba, then it means everything; and if it means that, there is no objection to saying it. If it does not mean that, it means that they are a mere rabble and that the United States is going there to capture the country and annex it.

The European press, in reviewing the President's message, say that it has the appearance of acquisition by conquest, but Senators say, "We know the President will do right." So far as I am concerned, I know he has promised to do what I regard as wrong. I know that he suggested that he will use the armies of this country to suppress the insurrection, which Spain could not do; that he proposes to suppress the insurrection and then compromise with Spain. I would rather there would be nothing done than to see the Army of this country use military constraint against the Cubans. War of that kind would be an outrage and a disgrace.

Our Government has stood by for years as the ally of Spain, as our committee has reported, and as every man knows. We have been the active ally of Spain. If we had not been, Cuban independence would have been secured long ago. Shall we now continue to be the ally of Spain and suppress the insurrection? An enforced armistice at the point of the bayonet is what is recommended, and during that time we propose a compromise between the two parties. It would be much more effective in favor of liberty and humanity to acknowledge even the belligerent rights of Cuba and stop there. Spain can not hold it.

Make it so that an American citizen will not be a criminal if he will go there to assist. Make it so that you will not have the United States Navy and revenue cutters blockade Cuba and cut off supplies. Let the Cubans have the same privilege that the Spaniards do to buy in the markets of this country and take the chances of landing them in Cuba. They will secure supplies. They have plenty of men and would have more if our young men could not be treated as criminals with the sanction of our Government for assisting Cuba. Give Cuba the same chance that you give Spain and we need have no war. If free Cuba is your object, you will get it that way as quickly as any other.

As much as I deprecate war, I believe war with Spain would be a just war. I believe she destroyed the Maine. I know she has murdered our citizens. She has committed more outrages against us than any other country on earth would endure. We have endured them. There is plenty of cause for war against Spain. There is no cause for war against the insurgents. We have never assisted them. The people of the United States have sympathized with them, and their brave conduct has challenged the admiration of the world and particularly of the Republican party. It was the strongest card in their platform. What did the Republican party say of the people that they propose now to exercise military constraint over? That party said at St. Louis:

We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

That sentiment is the sentiment of every honest, brave man in the United States. All that the Cubans needed to have complete success is the neutrality of the United States, for which they prayed at all times and under all occasions, and which the two Houses of Congress, by overwhelming majorities, advised should be granted to them.

I again call attention to what Congress said two years ago this month, after a year's discussion with regard to the Cuban Republic. On the 28th of February, 1896, a resolution, which I am about to read, passed the Senate by a vote of 64 to 6, and on the 6th of April following the same resolution was agreed to by the House by a vote of 246 to 27. This was after a year's discussion as to whether the Cubans had a government that could be recognized. Let us recur again to the language of that resolution so nearly unanimously passed by the two Houses of Congress:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

"The government proclaimed and long maintained." That was two years ago, and it has been proclaimed and maintained ever since, and all political parties have found it necessary in order to satisfy the people to declare in favor of the independence of the people who maintain that government.

Now, we are told that the Army of the United States is to go to Cuba to restrain them. The Army of the United States is to go there to stop war and enforce an armistice during the rainy season, during the time when Spain can not fight and Cuba can, during the time when Spain dreads the conflict with Cuban arms. Do you not suppose when we go there and enforce an armistice and settlement that the great powers will present the claims of the bondholders? Do you not suppose that they will have their hand in that settlement as they have a hand now in the negotiations that are taking place?

This is a new departure. Washington advised the people of the United States to avoid all entangling alliances with foreign powers, and under the Monroe doctrine we declared that this hemisphere was in the sphere of our influence and that we would maintain republics here with independent governments; that we would not allow any foreign government to increase its acquisition of territory on this hemisphere.

When a republic has been sustained by the most terrible war of all the ages, notwithstanding they have no ports and no navy and can have none while we refuse to recognize their government, such Republic ought to be recognized and encouraged. If they sailed ships on the high seas without recognition they would be pirates under international law. We deprive them of the right to navigate the ocean with their ships, and then we say "You have no ships; we will not recognize you, so that you can lawfully have ships." We hold them in that condition notwithstanding all these disadvantages. With an undying love of liberty, with a heroism and a patriotism that is unparalleled in modern times, those people continue to struggle for freedom and they conduct war on the principles of civilized warfare. They do not shoot prisoners. They do not torture the innocent. They observe the laws of war while the Spanish soldiery commit all manner of outrages.

Murder is about the least of the common offenses of the Spaniards. Shooting of prisoners and assassination go on year after year, and our Government assist them. We promised that we would stand by the patriots, and the pretended fulfillment of that promise is a request by the President for the use of the Army and Navy to enforce an armistice until the fall, when the wet season is over, in order that they may force a compromise. Is that all that has come of our boasted sympathy for Cuba? Is that all the great Republic can do for freedom on this hemisphere?

It is true it is not likely that the President could get the consent of the great powers to do more. Their policy is to keep people under monarchical rules. Their policy is against more republics. Their policy is against freedom. Our policy is right the other way. Shall we be dictated to by them? Oh, how it grieved me to see the President of the United States in consultation with the European powers as to the kind of government we would have in Cuba—as to the rights we would exercise in favor of struggling Cuba!

After our influence had enabled Spain to hold Cuba for the last seventy years, after all we had done for monarchy, and after all our professions in favor of freedom, we saw the great powers making their suggestions. I do not complain of the great powers for making them, because it is in harmony with their system, but I do complain of the Government consulting them. It is precisely the way they treated the Armenians; it is precisely the way that the bonded aristocracy of Europe controls the destiny of man. It is precisely the way that England deals with Egypt and collects $7 in gold for every acre of land that is cultivated in that unhappy land and extorts labor to make up that amount by the bastinado.

It is the manner in which England treats the people of India. It was the financial policy of Great Britain that deprived the poor Hindoos of money with which to buy bread, although there was an abundance of rice in the country at a cent a pound, if they had had the money. It was a money famine that caused the death of millions of Hindoos.

Is bonded slavery to be established in Cuba as it exists in Egypt and all other weak countries where Christian Europe holds sway? Do we want such a precedent on the Western Hemisphere? Europe is opposed to the precedent of more new republics, and we are opposed to the establishment of more slavery and despotism. If they are opposed to liberty for Cuba, we are opposed to Egyptian slavery for Cuba. If our Army has no better occupation for the sake of humanity than to enforce an armistice to make a trade with Spain and the bond-holding fraternity, let the boys stay at home.

But what we ought to do, and do quickly, is to declare war against Spain for the grievances recited in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and recognize the independence of Cuba and give her such aid as she may require. All she will ask of us is arms and ammunition, and she will do the rest. If she could have bought arms and supplies of us, there would have been no such thing as the reconcentrados starving to death. If she had been as free to buy and ship to Cuba as Spain was, it would have been impossible for Spain to starve to death and exterminate 200,000 innocent women and children and destroy 200,000 more by the disease which starvation has brought upon them.

These outrages would have been impossible but for our connivance, but for our want of neutrality. Let us at once, at least, occupy the position of neutrals between these two parties, if we will not be the friend of the Cubans. But, in the name of all that is just, in the name of all that is holy, and in the name of the honor of this country and the patriotism of a great people, do not strike a blow or point a gun at the patriots who have struggled so long for liberty.

That is why I am against the recommendations of the President. It is assumed that we must subscribe to the recommendations of the President. When was that doctrine proclaimed? Has not Congress before differed with the President? Does it not frequently differ with him? Is it not the duty of Congress to stand up for its convictions of right? Is it the idea that because the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, when they are put in motion by law, because he occupies that capacity, because he is the head of the Army and the Navy, he is therefore the legislative department? Is he, therefore, to make laws?

When we propose to make laws and rules for his guidance, we are told he is embarrassed. His message shows that he sorely needs them. When his duties are prescribed and he is executing them in his capacity as President or in his capacity as Commander in Chief, he is my President. I would follow him, but I will not follow him in dictating laws inconsistent with honor and justice, inconsistent with patriotism, inconsistent with right, inconsistent with anything that is sacred to liberty and to man. I will not follow him there.

He may not know what he proposes, but are we to blindly follow him because he has the command of the Army? Do you propose that he shall make the laws of the country, too? Why make him a dictator? Is there to be but one department of the Government? Is liberty ended? Is that so? No, no; the American Congress is still here. The voice of the people will be heard through their chosen representatives. It will be heard. Congress will make the laws. The President can sign or veto, and if he vetoes good laws Congress has power to pass them over his head. It is nonsense to say that the President can not be criticised. I remember when the President did anything it was a sufficient reason to go the other way. I was here in Johnson's time, and Congress carried it too far the other way. All his suggestions were tabooed on the hypothesis that he would do wrong naturally—that a thing must be wrong if he did it.

Now we have reached a point where it is supposed the President can do no wrong. The doctrine that the king can do no wrong does not prevail in this country. When did Presidents become infallible? Was Mr. Cleveland of that stripe? Do Republicans say that Cleveland could do no wrong? Yet if Cleveland could do no wrong, would that make it impossible for any President to do wrong?

I think a man can do wrong if you will let him have his way in any department of the Government. The reason why this is a Government of checks and balances is because the people will not trust one department; because the people will not trust the President with arbitrary power; because they will not trust him with the destinies and liberties of the people, and they placed two other coordinate departments here and fixed the balance of power between them so that each shall be a check upon the other and when one goes wrong the other will check it.

If we pass improvident laws, the President can veto them; and if they are unconstitutional, the Supreme Court can annul them. If the Supreme Court usurps power, its jurisdiction can be limited by Congress. If the President misuses power, he can be curbed by law. If he commits offenses against the law and against the well-being of the country, the power of impeachment is provided. All these things have been considered.

I protest against the assumption that any man in this country is above criticism. I criticise the President in all kindness. I say he has mistaken the sentiment of the American people. He has mistaken the duty of this Government when he proposes to interfere in Cuba with arms to put down the insurrection. I want to have it inserted in the resolution as a condition of giving him power, I want it proclaimed to all the world, that when he goes to Cuba he is dealing with a patriot government, an established government, that we will not tear down.

I want him to understand the rights of the people. We want it defined by law, not by compromise, not by armistice, not according to the interests of Spain, not according to foreign bondholders, but according to justice, humanity, and the right to life and liberty which the people of Cuba have, and which can not be taken from them. In granting him power to make war I want to put in the condition that war shall not be made against our friends, but against our enemies. I want to negative the suggestion that Cuban insurgents ought to be treated as enemies for one hour. I will vote for no resolution that leaves it open for the President of the United States to execute the scheme foreshadowed in his message.

That is my objection to the House resolution. It leaves it with him. I would not have thought of controlling his action as the American President if he had simply left it to Congress and asked for advice. Any resolution would have done in that case. When the President asks for the Army and states that he is going to put it to a use which I condemn, I shall deny such request. When we grant him the use of the Army to fight our enemies I want a proviso that no shot shall be fired at our friends. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether it would be more convenient for him to proceed to-night or to-morrow morning?

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to proceed to-morrow morning under the fifteen-minute rule, if the chairman of the committee desires to make any motion at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 16, 1898, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 15, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege; and I ask the Clerk to read the following from the Philadelphia Press.

The Clerk read as follows:

PANDEMONIUM IN THE HOUSE.

The so-called leader, BAILEY, of Texas, lost his head and ranted about political advantage being sought by the Republicans in the programme proposed for the consideration of the Cuban resolutions. When it was stated on the Republican side that an agreement had been made with the Democratic leaders, these same leaders seemed to go crazy.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, when a man enters public life he soon grows accustomed to being misunderstood by honest, and misrepresented by dishonest men, and he soon learns that it is easier and wiser to leave his conduct to answer these criticisms than it is to refute them as they are made. It sometimes, however, happens that a man is justified in making a response; and if he was ever justified at all it would be when it was necessary to set himself right respecting such an occasion as occurred on last Wednesday in this House.

It is evident that the newspaper from which that extract has been read is attempting to fix the responsibility for that scene primarily upon me, and generally upon the party with which I have the honor to act; but the RECORD itself furnishes such an overwhelming and conclusive refutation of that that I am unwilling to see it pass unchallenged.

I affirm, what all of those who witnessed that disorder will bear me witness, and the RECORD will demonstrate, that I was as little responsible for it as any man on the floor, and that the responsibility for it rests with the gentleman who had charge of the resolutions of the majority, if it rests upon the floor at all. My judgment, however, is that the responsibility for that disorder is upon the Speaker of this House, and he should bear it before the country.

The RECORD shows that immediately upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] having been recognized, he asked unanimous consent to consider the resolutions which he presented. The Speaker stated the request in these words:

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolutions.

Those resolutions were then read at the Clerk's desk, and at the conclusion of the reading the Speaker said:

Is there objection?

Immediately I rose and said:

Reserving the right to object, I will ask that the views of the minority go with this report.

That was not an unusual proceeding. A hundred times upon the floor of this House, when an important matter was presented, I have seen points of order, and I have seen unanimous consent reserved until gentlemen representing the respective sides could arrive at an understanding about the debate or the preliminary stages of consideration. But to my surprise the Speaker declined to allow me to reserve my right to object, and then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] rose and said:

Pending the motion——

Before he could conclude his sentence the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] said:

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] for the purpose of offering the minority resolution and report, reserving my parliamentary rights.

If the matter had rested there, we should have been content, but before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] could offer his resolutions the Speaker again declared:

The Chair understands there is no objection to consideration.

Now, the Speaker knows and the House will understand that the unanimous consent which had been requested and which was pending was for the consideration of the resolutions presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], and if the Speaker's statement had been permitted to pass without a question, then when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] offered to present the resolutions of the minority, any member upon that side could have objected. Perceiving that, and unwilling that this side of the House should be put in such an attitude, I said:

I reserve the right to object, because whether we shall object or not will depend in some measure upon whether a fair understanding about the debate can be arrived at. Before we proceed to that I desire both propositions to be before the House.

Then a member from New York said:

Mr. QUIGG. I ask for the regular order.

Responding to Mr. QUIGG's demand for the regular order, I said:

Which is equivalent to an objection.

That my statement was true every member on this floor well knows. I can find instances without number where not only the present Speaker, but his predecessors in his great office have declared that a demand for the "regular order" is equivalent to an objection. That is not an inference of mine. That is not an argument of this side, but an hundred times it has been declared by the gentlemen who have occupied that chair that a demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection. An objection to what? The only request which the Speaker treated as pending was that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] for the unanimous consent of the House for the present consideration of the resolutions which he had presented.

When the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] demanded the regular order, I then emphasized what the Speaker had held times without number, that he made an objection to the only request for unanimous consent that was pending.

But the Speaker, looking straight at me, said:

The gentleman objects.

I replied:

The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] objected.

The Speaker replied:

The gentleman from Texas objects.

To which I answered:

The gentleman from Texas did not object. The gentleman from Texas reserved his right to object.

The Speaker, still pursuing his evident purpose, said:

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Determined to force this side of the House either to acquiesce in the limited debate which we knew that side intended to allow, or else to put ourselves in the position of objecting to the immediate consideration of the resolution, the Speaker pressed the request for unanimous consent. The Speaker seldom does anything without a purpose, and the purpose which he had in his mind at that time was to force the minority of this House into the false position of either consenting to what we knew was an undue limitation on debate or else of objecting to the immediate consideration of this important matter; and with that evident purpose, he still refused to allow me to reserve my objection, in order that we might, if possible, arrive at a friendly understanding, and demanded to know:

Is there objection?

I replied again:

The gentleman from Texas reserves his right to object.

The Speaker said:

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Still treating that as the only pending request for unanimous consent, against which there had been a demand for the regular order. I again asked permission for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] to present the minority's resolutions, but before I had concluded my sentence the Speaker interrupted me by saying:

The Chair will announce whether there is objection or not.

I then attempted to say that the Chair was trying to force the minority into a false position; and again the Chair interrupted me in the middle of a sentence and demanded to know—

Is there objection?

If I had not objected, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], having reserved the floor upon the express statement that he reserved his parliamentary rights, could have spoken for two or three minutes and then demanded the previous question, and the minority would have been powerless to offer their resolutions or to utter a syllable in defense of the position which they intended to take.

It was at this point that, constrained by what I considered the unfair and unjust treatment of the Chair, I objected, and upon that objection arose the scene of disorder which is regretted by every member of this House, and regretted by none more than by those who participated in it. But, sir, for that result and for the results which may follow it the responsibility is not upon me nor upon this side. The responsibility is upon the Speaker of this House, who sought a mean partisan advantage by forcing his political opponents into a false position [applause on the Democratic side], and the country ought to know it. I understand the Speaker of the House——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. Is this an arraignment of the Speaker or a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know, but will probably soon learn.

Mr. BAILEY. The country will know.

Mr. DALZELL. It is the daily airing the gentleman gives himself.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He resumes his seat and reads his paper after having delivered that oracular comment.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, then, I will repeat it. It is only the daily airing the gentleman gives himself.

Mr. BAILEY. And that is only the daily falsehood that men on that side are guilty of.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman has demonstrated that he has lost his head.

The SPEAKER. The House will resume its calm during this. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that because I characterized his ungentlemanly interruption as it ought to be characterized I have lost my head. The truth is that he and his associates imagine that when men who are assailed and insulted resent it they have lost their heads. [Cries of "Ah!" on the Republican side.]

I have not lost my head now, and I did not last Wednesday. That a man may lose his temper under a very great provocation is a very natural thing, but men may lose their tempers and still not lose their heads. I desire to say that if in order for a man to preserve his equanimity and to appear cool he must allow insults to pass unanswered, then I prefer to be classed with those who lose their heads. I would infinitely rather lose my head in resenting an insult than to lose my self-respect by submitting to be insulted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I was about to say when the gentleman from Indiana interrupted me that I did not expect that a man belonging to either party would cease to be a partisan when he becomes the Speaker of this House, and I know that the Speaker, whenever a fair occasion offers, will always exercise his office for the advantage of his party and to the disadvantage of his political opponents. But until a short while ago I believed that the present Speaker of this House, while as partisan as an honest man could be, was still as honest as a partisan could be; after the performance of last Wednesday, however, I do not entertain that opinion any longer. I have never known on a great occasion a more unfair advantage attempted; and even if it had succeeded, what little it was worth would have passed from the public memory long before the recollection of the Speaker's partisan conduct. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that whatever he has done, the other day or any day since the commencement of this session, has been done in the presence of the House and of a thousand witnesses. He does not feel that it is necessary for him to make any discussion of his conduct. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The House will please be in order.

The gentleman from Texas, after two days of deliberation, has felt that his situation demanded discussion and explanation. [Laughter on the Republican side.] With that idea the Chair entirely agrees. [Laughter.] It is not the first time that the gentleman from Texas has assailed the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. And will probably not be the last.

The SPEAKER. It is not the first time he has undertaken a course of action like that of to-day. To it I have no reply, except simply what the House knew, that the gentleman from New York did not mean an objection, either really or technically, and everybody in this House knows it. I therefore, with reference to this whole matter, appeal to the witnesses of the transaction, and upon their judgment the Chair rests his justification. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to correct a misstatement——

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the regular order. We have had enough of this.

PLUM P. MINER.

The bill (H. R. 3132) for the relief of P. P. Miner, Company B, Twelfth Indiana Infantry, with Senate amendments, was taken from the table.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Line 4, strike out "instructed" and insert "directed;" strike out "P." and insert "Plum."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to grant a pension to Plum P. Miner."

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has that been before the committee and been acted upon by the committee?

Mr. BRUCKER. The amendment is merely formal; it does not increase the pension as passed by the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I notice one word is stricken out and another inserted.

Mr. BRUCKER. Yes, but it is merely formal.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand the former language gave the Secretary of the Interior discretionary power and this amendment takes it away.

Mr. BRUCKER. Oh, no; that is not the fact; that is purely a mistake.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the bill? I did not hear it.

Mr. BRUCKER. It is a bill to increase the pension of P. P. Miner from $12 to $24 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to the gentleman that the amendments proposed by the Senate are merely formal and perfectly proper. It does not change the amount in the bill. I think one inserts the full name of the soldier, and the others are purely formal.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It uses the word "directed."

Mr. RAY of New York. That is perfectly proper; it uses the word "directed" instead of "instructed."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no objection; I only wanted to understand it.

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments to the bill; and the question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

The title was amended.

MARTHA M. M'CALL.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 7539) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Martha M. McCall, with Senate amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

M. LOUISE ANDERSON.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 5994) to grant a pension to Mrs. M. Louise Anderson, with Senate amendment amending the title.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN THURSTON.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 2629) to grant a pension to John Thurston, of Island Pond, Vt., with Senate amendment amending the title so as to read: "An act to grant a pension to John Thurston."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

CHARLES B. EADES.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 639) increasing the pension of Charles B. Eades, Hopkinsville, Ky., with Senate amendment amending the title so as to read: "An act increasing the pension of Charles B. Eades."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. THOMAS.

The next business reported from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 164) granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas, with Senate amendment striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "thirty" in line 7, page 1.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Mr. ELLIS, the gentleman who introduced this bill, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Mr. WARNER, Mr. BREWSTER, and Mr. CASTLE as conferees.

MAINE INQUIRY.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 1st day of April, 1898, the following resolution of inquiry was introduced in this House, and was on that day referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform the House of Representatives if the Senate printed Document No. 207, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, contains all the evidence embraced in the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, now of file in the Navy Department; and if any portion of said evidence has been omitted in said printed document the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of such omitted evidence;"

And whereas by clause 5 of Rule XXII, "all resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Executive Departments shall be reported to the House within one week after presentation;"

And whereas more than one week has elapsed since said resolution was presented and no report thereon has been made:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and they hereby are, discharged from the further consideration of said resolution, and that the same be now brought before the House for immediate consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. Reserving all points of order, I desire to inquire of the gentleman what the resolution of inquiry was?

The SPEAKER. It is recited in the resolution.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Did I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to reserve the point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire if that can be done. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by consent of the gentleman from Texas and other members.

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects as promptly as that, it is sufficient. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that opportunity is given to make objections. I wish to make the point of order that it is not privileged.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, the resolution of inquiry is recited in the resolution reported by the Clerk. The resolution as originally presented was that the Secretary of the Navy, who is the official custodian of the report of the naval board of inquiry, is directed to inform the House——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order that this motion is not privileged.

Mr. DINGLEY. Noticing that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs was absent, I merely sought to raise the question——

Mr. McMILLIN. The point of order comes too late. The gentleman from Georgia has entered upon the discussion of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky was trying to make the point of order and could not make himself heard, owing to the confusion.

Mr. FLEMING. What is the point of order?

Mr. EVANS. I made the point of order that this is not a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. FLEMING. Rule XXII, paragraph 5, provides that whenever a resolution of inquiry is sent to a committee, that resolution being addressed to the head of any of the Executive Departments, and the committee does not report it back within one week from the time when the resolution is presented, the calling up of the matter in the House shall be a question of privilege. I take it, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt on that point. If there is, I would refer the Chair to a precedent completely covering the case in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress; and another exact precedent will be found in the Forty-ninth Congress. I think the same point has been so held time and again.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will allow me a suggestion. Of course there is no doubt that if this were simply a resolution of inquiry, the gentleman's motion would be privileged; but does not the resolution go beyond an inquiry and make a direction, and does not this proposition thereby lose its privileged character?

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is one of inquiry——

Mr. LOUD. And direction; that is the difficulty.

Mr. FLEMING. Why, then, not answer the inquiry and let the direction alone? In this resolution I make an inquiry to ascertain merely whether an official document purporting to contain all the evidence submitted to a board of inquiry is an exact copy of the report of that board of inquiry on file in its proper official place in the Navy Department.

Mr. LOUD. But you have gone further and brought in a direction.

Mr. FLEMING. The resolution further provides that if upon examination it should appear that the document does not contain all the evidence, then the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit such portions as may have been omitted. Now, Mr. Speaker, that part of the resolution might possibly be a matter upon which the committee could refuse to report.

Mr. LOUD. But it is in the resolution.

Mr. FLEMING. But the committee has no right to refuse to report upon the inquiry embraced in that resolution. The fact that the latter part of the resolution calls for the omitted portions, if any, of the testimony, can not absolve the committee from reporting to the House upon that portion which embraces merely an inquiry. The committee has taken no action, so far as this House knows.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The matter referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] does not absolve the committee from making some kind of a report.

Mr. FLEMING. Of course they are required to report.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman from Georgia and myself desire to be fair. I ask him whether, when he goes beyond the privileged matter and brings into the resolution matter that is not privileged, does he not by that act deprive the whole resolution of its privileged character?

Mr. FLEMING. Not at all, I think, Mr. Speaker. If the resolution involves two elements—one of inquiry and the other calling for a report of the information about which the inquiry is made——

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman from Georgia—the Chair is only trying to get at the situation—would the gentleman contend that when a resolution embracing privileged matter contains also unprivileged matter, the unprivileged matter would not vitiate the privileged matter?

Mr. FLEMING. I certainly would so contend. I certainly claim that the privileged matter can not be vitiated by the unprivileged matter.

The SPEAKER. That has not been the ruling in any case within the knowledge of the Chair.

Mr. FLEMING. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no precedent can be brought for the position just intimated by the Chair. I should like to have a case pointed out where such a resolution of inquiry was, if presented to the head of an Executive Department——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will pardon the Chair; that is not the question. The question which the Chair suggested to the gentleman was whether the incorporation of unprivileged matter into what would otherwise be privileged matter did not vitiate the privilege.

Mr. FLEMING. I would like to have some precedent cited where a resolution embracing a privileged matter of inquiry was ever regarded as being vitiated by reason of some further matter in the way of direction incorporated in it.

The SPEAKER. If part of an amendment is out of order and part in order, that which is in order does not carry that which is out of order.

Mr. FLEMING. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I submit, in all justice and fairness, that a resolution of inquiry or a resolution involving an inquiry when submitted to the committee, under the rule, requires action within the time specified.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not pass on that question, whether this is outside of it or not; but if so, it lays the foundation of the inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to hear it again read. I did not have my mind on the proposition when it was first reported. Let it be read again for the information of the House.

Mr. FLEMING. It was offered in absolutely good faith.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, in the absence of objection, will be again reported, as gentlemen on either side do not want, of course, to establish a precedent that is not correct, but to get at what is proper in these matters.

The resolution submitted by Mr. FLEMING was again reported.

Mr. FLEMING. Now, Mr. Speaker, my contention is that the Committee on Naval Affairs could have reported on both branches of this resolution; or, if they desired not to have the certified copies of this evidence brought to the House, they could have refused to act on that part of the resolution when the issue was made, as it is now made, in the House. But if the resolution involves elements of inquiry, and the committee refuses to report upon that inquiry for the space of a week, that question, so far as it involves the inquiry, becomes a privileged matter in the House, and I now have the right—the week having expired—to have the Committee on Naval Affairs discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and have it brought up for action in this body—certainly so far as the inquiry is concerned.

Mr. McEWAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if it has not been customary to add the words to such resolutions "if not incompatible with the public interests?" It seems to me that that has been the custom and that this provision should always be added where a question involves a matter of public importance.

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine, and is not, the Chair will state, upon the question of order.

If any gentleman desires to be heard on the question of order the Chair will be very glad to recognize him.

Mr. McEWAN. If the Chair will permit me, if this was a mere resolution of inquiry the position of the gentleman from Georgia would be correct. But I suggest to him whether the resolution, containing, as it does, other matter, should not have embodied the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia that my understanding is that a resolution that in part is privileged and in part not privileged, by reason of the part which is not privileged loses its privilege altogether.

Now, let me give an illustration. The Committee on Printing, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, is privileged to the extent of ordering printing for Congress; but if we present a resolution including printing also for one of the Departments of the Government, it has been invariably held that the resolution loses its privilege altogether. We therefore frequently appear here for that reason to ask unanimous consent under such circumstances. The resolution reported from our committee for printing for Congress is privileged, but if we attach to it a proviso that a certain number of a given document shall be furnished to one of the Departments, the resolution at once loses its privileged character and must be considered, if at all, by unanimous consent. That is the uniform practice under the rules of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, while concurring largely with what my colleague on the Committee on Printing has said, I do not understand that the cases would be exactly alike. That is to say, the one he suggests and this proposition.

It strikes me that the trouble here is that the concluding portion of this resolution calls for legislation on our part. It is not only a resolution of inquiry as to the facts, but assuming that the facts are but one way, this resolution of my friend from Georgia proceeds to go to the point of making legislation based on that information, and assumes (and it may be fairly assumed) that such would be the response to the inquiry as to demand such legislation. For that reason it seems to me that the resolution would not be in order.

It should be, I think, merely a resolution of inquiry, and if you put anything else into it making provision for legislation or laying the foundation for legislation it presents another question. You can, if such legislation be necessary, lay the foundation and subsequently have a resolution passed directing the information to be furnished to Congress. But I do not think it in order in this way.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state my own position clearly on that matter. I had supposed that the Committee on Naval Affairs would cheerfully accept this opportunity to make the investigation and remove all doubts that had been raised in the minds of the public on this question. For that reason I drew the resolution in the form in which it has been presented.

Now, it seems to me that the committee having decided not to remove these doubts which have existed and which continually arise in the public mind on this question, and having declined to take any action whatever upon that subject, that the House itself, under our rules, must take cognizance of it.

I claim that, no matter whether a part of this resolution goes beyond the question of privilege or not, the part of it which is privileged is separable from the part which is not privileged, and that what is good can not be vitiated, so far as the privileged nature of that resolution is concerned, by what is not privileged, and the committee should have reported upon the privileged branch of this resolution, the matter involving the point of inquiry, and, if they desired, have made no report upon the rest of it.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman see how far he could have gone if that were permissible; that he could have attached any bill to this resolution of inquiry and forced a report?

Mr. FLEMING. Oh, no; I think not. Mr. Speaker, I will say further that my purpose in offering the resolution was simply to get at the facts, and if the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine] will state to the House that he will take up the question immediately and have it investigated and have it properly reported to the House without delay, I am perfectly willing to withdraw my motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What does the gentleman want investigated?

Mr. FLEMING. I want to know whether or not the printed document purporting to contain all the evidence reported by the board of inquiry, and which evidence is now on file as an official paper in the Navy Department, contains all of the evidence submitted to the board of inquiry. Or, in other words, I want to know whether there is any variation between that publication and the official report now filed in the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, it is only fair for me——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia can arrive at this matter by putting in a resolution of inquiry, which will be privileged.

Mr. FLEMING. Of course it can be done over again, and I will state to my friend the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that if this question is not considered privileged by reason of its double aspect, I will immediately draw another resolution and shoot one barrel instead of two; but I hope he will take the matter into consideration. All I want is a report.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps proper for me to say that in a personal conversation with the gentleman from Georgia who introduced this resolution, and subsequent to its introduction and reference to the Naval Committee, I found an entire absence of any apparent ground on which the resolution was based, and I derived the impression certainly that the gentleman himself was not at all strenuous about the resolution.

I called his attention to the fact that the documents to which this resolution referred had, under a peculiar condition of circumstances, been referred officially to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that therefore in a parliamentary sense the Naval Committee were not supposed to be so officially familiar with the subject as the Foreign Affairs Committee, and I suggested to him that he make inquiries of the members of that committee. It is apparent this morning, from the gentleman's attitude, that I must have misunderstood him. I certainly derived the impression that he did not attach much importance to the matter himself. I am free to say that I do not. I think this is very much of a mare's nest myself.

Mr. FLEMING. On that point I wish to say I am glad the gentleman brought the attention of the House to it. The gentleman did say to me, as he has just stated, that there seemed to be no basis for any reason for anyone to suppose that there was any variation between these documents. I state to the House now, as I stated to him then, that I, in common with others, have seen the statement in the public prints that there is a variation, and, furthermore, that a prominent member of this House, and on that side of the House, told me that there was evidence submitted to the board of inquiry which did not appear in that printed report. Now, following that up——

Mr. LACEY. Does not the printed report itself show that a portion of this evidence was not printed in full and give the reasons for it?

Mr. FLEMING. I do not mean the partial omissions to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. LACEY. Omissions because of the fact it might endanger the lives of some of the witnesses resident there—a partial suppression of information for that reason.

Mr. FLEMING. I am not speaking about that. Now, Mr. Speaker, furthermore it appears in the papers—and I think there ought to be no special partisan features to this question at all—and I will name the paper in which the statement does appear, because I think it has always been considered as an Administration organ, at least, as far as any organ represents the Administration; it has certainly been fair to it in every way—I refer to the Washington Post. The Washington Post of this morning specifies the pieces of evidence which were put before that board of inquiry and which do not appear in that printed document.

Now, I think there is ample basis for the Committee on Naval Affairs to investigate this matter, and all I desire to get at is the fact, and I hope the chairman of that committee will be willing to state to the House that he will take the subject under investigation and report within a reasonable time to the House. If he will do that, I will withdraw the motion. If not, I will wait for the Speaker's ruling, and if the pending resolution is not held to be subject to be called up now as a privileged question, I will introduce another resolution making it so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that upon the view presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] the resolution does not present a question of privilege.

Mr. FLEMING. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to consider the inquiry portion of that resolution

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to waste the time of this House in asking unanimous consent. If the gentleman will put his inquiry into proper parliamentary form, I will ask unanimous consent, and the resolution of inquiry will be passed without debate.

Mr. FLEMING. That is exactly what I asked.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Put it in proper form.

Mr. FLEMING. It is in proper form.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If it is to be subject to debate on this occasion, put the resolution into the usual form.

Mr. FLEMING. I have it exactly in the usual form.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. "If not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. FLEMING. That qualification applies in matters going to the State Department. That does not apply in matters of this nature going to the Navy Department.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It goes to all the Departments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. I do not think it will be possible to find authority for that position.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman does not want that information sent here if it is not compatible with the public interest.

Mr. FLEMING. If the gentleman will investigate the matter and come back and tell us why that portion has not been sent, I will not insist on the motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is really no reason for any investigation whatever. It is simply a resolution of inquiry to be addressed to the Secretary of the Navy about certain things.

Mr. FLEMING. And you will not let him answer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. And it ought to be made in the usual phraseology.

Mr. FLEMING. It is made in the usual phraseology of making inquiries to heads of Departments. I have copied it from precedents from the RECORD and Journal in respect to inquiries of heads of Departments. I think the chairman of the committee ought to indorse it, but if he will not make a report on that part, then I will put it in another form.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, well; the gentleman need not pose. I will state that if he will present a properly drawn proposition to make this inquiry, I will ask the House to unanimously pass it in a moment.

Mr. FLEMING. I will state that it is properly drawn, according to the precedents.

Mr. BRUMM and Mr. EVANS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded. The Clerk will present the unfinished pension bills.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, were respectively taken up, the amendments of the Committee of the Whole agreed to, the House bills ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, and the Senate bills ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2866) granting a pension to Myntie L. Hamilton;

A bill (H. R. 772) granting an increase of pension to William Taylor;

A bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell, late private of Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry (title amended);

A bill (S. 668) granting a pension to Frances Pease;

A bill (S. 1751) granting an increase of pension to Mose M. Crants;

A bill (H. R. 584) granting a pension to Mary I. Valentine;

A bill (S. 3517) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman;

A bill (H. R. 8299) granting an increase of pension to Thomas S. Tefft;

A bill (H. R. 7321) granting a pension to Lauritz Olsen (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 8680) granting an increase of pension to William Tompkins;

A bill (H. R. 4189) granting a pension to Newton W. Cooper (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 4488) to increase the pension of Peter Castle, late of Company D, Fourth Provisional New York Cavalry (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 6411) granting an increase of pension to Henry K. Opp;

A bill (S. 310) granting a pension to Johnson Hays (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 8181) for the relief of John A. Bingham, major and judge-advocate (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 9043) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann M. Smith, widow of the late Maj. Gen. Andrew J. Smith (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 7802) granting a pension to Emily A. Hausner;

A bill (H. R. 5776) for the relief of Sidney J. Hare, late private in Company C, Ninety-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers (title amended);

A bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Adolphine Krez, widow of Conrad Krez, late colonel Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers (title amended);

A bill (H. R. 4961) to pension George W. Osborn (title amended);

A bill (S. 487) granting a pension to Delia Gilman;

A bill (S. 1345) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Brumm;

A bill (H. R. 2497) to increase the pension of James E. Eaton;

A bill (S. 603) granting a pension to Clarissa E. Hobbs;

A bill (H. R. 99) granting a pension to Ira Ingraham;

A bill (H. R. 2318) for the relief of John T. Brewster;

A bill (S. 1450) granting a pension to Catherine Leary;

A bill (S. 499) granting a pension to Sarah R. Frary; and

A bill (H. R. 7554) granting a pension to William Iott, of Gowen, Mich. (title amended).

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a separate motion to reconsider the several votes by which the foregoing bills were passed was laid on the table.

JAMES W. M'MILLAN.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 157) to increase the pension of James W. McMillan.

The bill was read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, that was read here the other day; but the previous question has been ordered on these bills to their final passage.

Mr. TALBERT. I understand that does not prevent the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is ordered, and debate is not in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I move that the bill be recommitted with instructions to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five." This gentleman is getting a salary of $1,500 or $1,800 a year in the Pension Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to recommit would be in order after the third reading of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. The matter was discussed the other night in the gentleman's presence, and the bill was passed, and he even voted for it, if I remember rightly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is this gentleman drawing a salary in one of the Departments?

Mr. TALBERT. He has a position in which he is receiving $1,500 or $1,800 a year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not think he ought to get that.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Now I move to recommit with instructions, to strike out $50 and insert $25, or go back to the original bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is that in order now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is not debatable, is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether it is a fact that this man is drawing a salary from the Government?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DINGLEY in the chair). Without objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] can answer.

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill was introduced by one of the prominent Democratic members of this House. General McMillan was one of the bravest officers in the Army; he took part in many battles, and to-day he carries a bullet in his body and his head is scarred and cut by a shell. He is so broken down that he can not do manual labor. He is drawing a pension of $30 a month, and he has a little family dependent upon him. He asks for the fifty. He is holding a place in the Pension Office as a matter of grace from the Government. This matter was discussed the other night in the presence of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], and he voted for it.

Mr. TALBERT. Yes; I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] if this man was holding a position under the Government, and he said he was, but it would only be for a short time. I found out that he will hold it as long as he lives. I submit that his pension now is sufficiently large under the circumstances while he is drawing a salary of $1,800 a year. I think, upon a statement of these facts, it is enough to support the motion to recommit. I voted for it in Committee of the Whole on the statement of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, that this man would not hold his position under the Government but a very short time, and yet I find out that he will hold it as long as he lives. I think it is right that he should have the pension that he is now drawing, $30 a month, but I think it is quite enough.

Mr. RAY of New York. How can he hold a place as long as he lives?

Mr. TALBERT. How do they all hold it?

Mr. RAY of New York. They do not.

Mr. TALBERT. Upon what authority does the gentleman state that he can hold the position but a short time?

Mr. RAY of New York. Upon the authority of common sense, evidence that appeals to my common sense and reason, that when a man is upward of 70 years of age, trembling, broken down physically, and rapidly failing mentally, the day will shortly come when he can no longer perform the duties of the office he holds and must depend solely on his pension.

Mr. TALBERT. Then let me suggest that when he loses his place it will be sufficient time to raise his pension. That will be according to the rules of common sense.

Mr. LOUD. He may die by that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, does not General McMillan hold the same rank that did Gen. John D. Stephenson and Gen. A. D. Smith, of Missouri, the widows of whom only got $30 a month?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to the gentleman that we are not pensioning the widow of General McMillan——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why should he have more pension than his widow?

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). We are pensioning General McMillan, who stood the fire of more than one hundred battles.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He did not stand up in the face of any more than did General Smith, who saved Banks's army from destruction at Mansfield and Pleasant Hill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Thirty dollars for the widow is all right, but for the man, a brigadier-general, who did the fighting and now carries bullets in his body, and is scarred, broken down, and 70 years of age, a pension of $50 per month is not too much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He would be entitled to it if he was not drawing a salary of $1,800 from the Government.

Mr. RAY of New York. As I have said, he can not hold that place much longer; he is broken down physically and is breaking down mentally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 13, noes 40.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. As that point is made, Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that no quorum is present, and I suppose it is difficult to get one, and I therefore move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield a minute to me? It is not demonstrated that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question must be determined unless the point is withdrawn.

Mr. TALBERT. I will withdraw the point for the time being.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That involves the defeat of the motion to recommit.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I do not want to withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if an adjournment now will take us over beyond Friday night?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then I hope members when they vote will understand that.

Mr. RAY of New York. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the motion to adjourn will not prevail. Pension night was taken away from us last week, and to-night is pension night again, and if we adjourn, that is gone, too. I trust our Democratic friends will not defeat all pension legislation in this way.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point of "no quorum."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of "no quorum" being withdrawn, the motion to recommit is determined in the negative.

The bill was then passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DESTRUCTION OF THE MAINE.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution.

Mr. BRUMM. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to inform the House of Representatives if the Senate printed document No. 207, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, contains all the evidence embraced in the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor February 15, 1898, now on file in the Navy Department.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; and it was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

LOCAL INSPECTORS OF STEAM VESSELS, ALASKA.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up the unfinished business, being the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole last evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up the unfinished business, and the Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order on that motion.

Mr. PAYNE. It will not take a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was under the impression that this bill would not be in order on Friday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on the objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3927) to create a board of local inspectors of steam vessels for the customs district of Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of taking up the Private Calendar, as per regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Pending that motion, I want to ask the gentleman and the House if unanimous consent may not be given that we take a recess now until 8 o'clock for the evening session?

Mr. BRUMM and others. Oh, no; let us go on with this business.

Mr. CANNON. It is evident that no quorum is present.

Mr. CLARDY. We have been doing business all the week without a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. Well, as there seems to be objection to my request, the gentleman must pursue his own course.

Mr. BRUMM. If we can have another day set apart for the consideration of the Private Calendar, for my part I should not object. Will the gentleman consent to that?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Friday will soon come around.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I insist on my motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BRUMM; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 33, noes 5.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, evidently no quorum is present; and pending that, if in order, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion and submit one for a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. It takes a quorum to do that. I am quite willing if the House will give its consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the regular order. The motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not. The gentleman takes the sword in his hand, and must abide by it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no; you took the sword.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum not having yet been determined, without objection the Chair will receive a message from the Senate.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 25.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit more complete plans and estimates for the improvement of the Big Sandy, and the Tug and Louisa forks of same, in Kentucky and West Virginia, with probable cost of same if placed under the continuing-contract system.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 148) providing for the printing of House Document No. 396, relating to the beet-sugar industry in the United States; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER here resumed the chair.

Mr. CANNON. I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that I would ask unanimous consent, as there seems to be no quorum present, that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. RICHARDSON and others objected.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me make a suggestion. If the Committee on Claims can have another day for the consideration of its business, we are perfectly content, and I ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be substituted instead of to-day.

Mr. McEWAN. Subject, of course, to the consideration of important matters that may come in.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had better go on as we are. Friday will soon come around again. Many matters of public interest may come up by that time.

Mr. BRUMM. I would make the request subject to anything coming from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I suppose there will be no objection to that.

Mr. CANNON. It is perfectly evident that the House does not want to do business, because the members do not stay here to-day, and it is not safe to dispose of matters of importance on this Calendar without the presence of a quorum.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is certainly—if the gentleman will permit me—a quorum in the Capitol. There are matters of great interest proceeding in the Senate, and quite a large number of our members are over there who will no doubt return at once if they are notified that their presence is required.

Mr. CANNON. I want to be perfectly fair in dealing with this question and with the House when I state that there is not, in my judgment, a situation or condition such as should warrant us to go on with the consideration of this Calendar to-day. There is no disposition, apparently, on the part of members to give attention to business of this kind, under existing conditions, and that gentlemen understand; and, without criticising anybody, I do not think we ought to go on and take up the Private Calendar and pass upon claims here amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

That being the condition of affairs, I feel it my duty, as a Representative, to suggest that there is no quorum present, and I think we should let this go over. Perchance by next Friday or the Friday after we may be in a different condition.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I need only say that if this Congress, from any cause, has got to be so degenerate or rattled that it can not do business, it had better adjourn sine die.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we will come to that proceeding a little later, I hope. I want to say that I do not think it is right at this stage for the gentleman to press his motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not understand the position of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who is usually logical. If we can not do business this afternoon, it seems to me very probable that we could not do any business to-night.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to know if there has been a single Friday or a single day this session when we have been considering the Private Calendar that we have had a quorum here?

Mr. CANNON. Well, we have had enough business done on Fridays to have passed over $2,000,000 of private claims, and have broken the record in the aggregate for half a dozen Congresses.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is in error if he speaks of private claims reported from the Committee on Claims; but if he includes the war claims in the private claims on the Private Calendar, his statement is correct. I want to say that the whole of the bills on the Private Calendar now reported from the Committee on Claims will not, I think, exceed a million dollars, if they were all passed. The gentleman is certainly in error.

Mr. HAY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. Is not the question on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made a motion to adjourn, and all this has been proceeding by unanimous sufferance.

Mr. HAY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the regular order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that he was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 56.

Accordingly the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made the point that there is no quorum present, the pending question being the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You can not do that if there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRUMM. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count the House.

Having counted the House,

The SPEAKER announced 121 members present—not a quorum.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. One moment; the Chair desires to read the rule:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded.

That is the proceeding which is now in order.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I will suggest to the gentleman again, in order that the request for unanimous consent may be submitted, it is perfectly evident that a quorum of the House does not want to do business to-day.

Mr. HAY. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for the regular order. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for a statement of the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Shall the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Claims? The doors will be closed, and the Doorkeeper will keep the doors closed. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nays 23, answered "present" 11, not voting 79; as follows:

So the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. STRAIT. He is in bed. I have just left his side.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. MILLER. I withdraw my vote, and desire to be recorded as "present."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I desire to withdraw my vote and to be marked "present."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. BODINE.

Mr. HITT with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. MCALEER.

Mr. WARD with Mr. VEHSLAGE.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. CLARDY.

For this day:

Mr. BARBER with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. ROBBINS with Mr. STARK.

Mr. BEACH with Mr. LEWIS of Washington.

Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. HINRICHSEN.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. STRAIT.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

RICHMOND LOCOMOTIVE AND MACHINE WORKS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Claims, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Claims, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration the last day of our committee was the Senate bill 1133, which was unfinished.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1133) to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. Is that the first business before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill was before the committee at its last meeting, and of course comes up as unfinished business.

Mr. CANNON. I do not see that it is on the Calendar as unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. It is unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole, when the committee was last in session.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he has any objection to going back to the Erie Railroad case. I do not think it will take more than twenty-five or thirty minutes?

Mr. BRUMM. I can not now. I will say to the gentleman from California, because these people have the floor.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to hear what is being said.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I desire to present this condition to the Chair, and to the committee. The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and took up a bill relating to the Erie Railroad. It was temporarily laid aside. Then we went on to another bill. Now I would like to make some arrangement to dispose of that case, because I am compelled to go away, and I have some matter that I desire to submit on that question.

Mr. BRUMM. How long will you be away?

Mr. LOUD. It is a question of whether I know as much about it——

Mr. BRUMM. How long will you be away?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know.

Mr. BRUMM. I will agree, if the gentleman is not gone too long, that the matter shall not come up in his absence.

Mr. CANNON. That will depend upon the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would suggest to the gentleman from California that he might ask unanimous consent to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims, and I think that would facilitate business.

Mr. BRUMM. I could not consent to that.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to have the matter come up now. I am satisfied that if the chairman of the committee had been in possession of the evidence which I have the bill would never have been reported; but I shall be away when it comes up.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that some arrangement can be made about it.

Mr. BRUMM. Any reasonable time the gentleman may fix.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman is not willing to give way, and holds that the Richmond Locomotive Works bill is before the committee, I suppose I must give way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Erie Railroad bill was postponed when this locomotive works bill was taken up before the committee. The Chair thinks that the present bill must be completed before the other will be in order.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I want to make some remarks about the bill. From reading the report I see that it carries an appropriation of $69,550.39. It seems to be a Senate bill, passed by the Senate, and now comes before the House. The gentleman in charge has not seen proper to make any explanation of this bill, and so I am compelled to get it by picking it out from twenty-eight or thirty pages of a closely printed report. I have had to read the report in a sort of hop-skip-and-jump order during my other work. Of course I am not here to criticise the presentation of the merits of the bill, but I find this to be the state of facts, if I get a correct idea about it:

The Richmond Locomotive Works agreed to do certain work for the Government touching the machinery of the Texas. A time was fixed, either two years and six months or three years and six months—the report shows—in which they were to do it. They were to have a certain price for it, and that price included a certain extra price for speed. There were penalties fixed in the event that the locomotive works failed to perform its part of the contract on time, but there was no penalty affixed in the event that the Government failed to furnish, at such a time as the locomotive works might demand, the hull for the purpose of placing the machinery in it.

This is a very important fact. In other words, the Richmond Locomotive Works entered into a contract with the Government, as appears from their own statement in the claim they file, to do certain work, the Government to furnish the hull, but no provision as to what time the Government should furnish the hull, and if it did not furnish it at such time to suit the convenience of the Locomotive Works, there was no provision for damages.

Mr. YOST. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I should be glad to have the gentleman make any statement he sees fit.

Mr. YOST. Did not the contract provide that at the end of two years and a half the machinery should have a trial in the hull, and therefore it must be furnished prior to that time and in sufficient time to allow the machinery to be put into the hull?

Mr. CANNON. They say in their claim:

Inasmuch, therefore, as the Secretary of the Navy is bound by the letter of the contract, which makes no provision for loss to the builders of the machinery by reason of the failure of the Government to construct the hull in due time, the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works asks that the Secretary of the Navy, who has full knowledge of the facts, or can be apprised of them, shall be authorized to make such allowance to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works as, under all the circumstances, may be fair, just, and right.

Now, then, there was no legal liability on the part of the Government. That is the object of my stating it. And if there was a legal liability, recovery could be had in court; it could have been audited by the Auditor's Office of the Treasury, and would have been paid long ago. Now, I want to state that that fact is not in controversy.

Mr. LAMB. The Secretary of the Navy has made a report and decided what was due.

Mr. CANNON. My point is this, there is no legal liability on the part of the Government to pay the Richmond Locomotive Works one cent.

Mr. YOST. May I answer the gentleman right there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; I merely want to get at the facts.

Mr. YOST. This claim was sent to the Navy Department under a bill from the House, with instructions to the Navy Department to audit and adjust the account, and upon that they did audit and adjust it, and that adjustment gave the claimants $80,000. In that adjustment they allow for insurance and surety and for interest, and the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate cut out those three items which the Department itself allowed. The claimants then agreed, if the bill could be passed at once, that they would take the $69,000, notwithstanding the fact that the larger amount was justly due them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if in the sense of this claim being audited as claims ordinarily are audited—which means a legal liability—if in that sense this claim was audited the Richmond Locomotive Works could go into court and recover judgment. They can not do that because it is a mere claim. That is the point I want to get at, so that the Committee of the Whole may understand that this is a mere claim, the contention being that in good conscience and from the standpoint of full justice, without regard to legal right, the Government ought to pay the Richmond Locomotive Works this amount of money. Am I stating the matter right?

Mr. YOST. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If that is not a correct statement, what is the necessity for this bill? If the Government is bound to pay this claim as a matter of legal liability, the courts are open.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me right there? There is a fact of which I think he is not aware, or he would not make that statement. Congress ordered an investigation of this case by the proper accounting officers, and the claim was duly audited after examination by them.

Mr. CANNON. No; my friend is himself laboring under a misapprehension. The proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department are the Auditor and the Comptroller; and whenever a claim is audited by the auditing officers of the Treasury Department it is treated as having the same force and effect as a judgment; and all it awaits is an appropriation. Such a claim would go into a deficiency bill. It need not go upon the Claims Calendar.

Mr. McMILLIN. This claim has been investigated and audited and now awaits an appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. This claim has not been audited. It was referred to the Secretary of the Navy, and we have from that Department a report covering many pages of discussion, some of which I will read a little later on, touching the merits of the claim. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee sees proper to call that an auditing. The claim never went to the proper auditing officers. It never went to the Treasury Department. It is not an audited claim, so far as I can discover. In fact, I think I discover to the contrary.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the Secretary of the Navy say it should be paid?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the Assistant Secretary wanders along—I speak respectfully—I mean he goes along, using many words—and says that he thinks it would be well enough to pay these people. His statement simply shows, and I will refer to it later on, that he is in favor of paying these people what they ask.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did not an act of Congress authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and audit and settle this claim?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. McMILLIN. I mean the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well; if those words were used——

Mr. McMILLIN. And did he not make the examination as ordered?

Mr. CANNON. The Secretary of the Navy was "authorized and directed to audit and adjust the claim of the Richmond Locomotive Works against the Government," etc.

Mr. McMILLIN. He was authorized to audit and adjust the claim, and now we are trying to make the appropriation to carry into effect his auditing and adjustment. That is all there is in this claim—nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is confused as to what an auditing is. If there has been an auditing in this case, then we ought to appropriate, instead of $65,000, $80,049.35.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is right. There is a just claim for eighty-odd thousand dollars; but rather than have their claim perpetually postponed, these people are ready to take the $65,000.

Mr. CANNON. Now we come to the point which I wanted to make clear to this Committee of the Whole—that this is a mere claim, not an audited account which has received the sanction of the proper officials of the Treasury Department and which has a binding effect substantially like the judgment of a court.

Mr. McMILLIN. The Secretary of the Navy was directed by law to audit and adjust this claim.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; it was merely referred to the Secretary of the Navy practically to make a report. He had no power to audit it. He was not connected with the Treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. He can discharge any duty that the Congress of the United States under the Constitution may impose upon him.

Mr. YOST. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. YOST. The gentleman said that the Navy Department did not audit and adjust this claim.

Mr. CANNON. In the proper sense of auditing a claim, it did not. That is what I say.

Mr. YOST. The Navy Department says that it did. I refer the gentleman to page 7 of the report.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if Congress does not pay the claim, why do not the parties go into court and get their judgment?

Mr. YOST. We want the money; we do not want a judgment.

Mr. CANNON. If you get a judgment, payment will be made in a deficiency bill.

Mr. YOST. I read from the report of the Navy Department, on page 7 of the report of the committee:

> Pursuant to the authorization contained in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, approved March 2, 1895, that the Secretary of the Navy audit and adjust the claim of the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works against the Government for damages and losses sustained by said company, by reason of delays on the part of the Government, in the execution of their contract for the construction of the machinery of the armored battle ship Texas, and report to Congress at its next session what amount may be due said company, I have the honor to report as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is not that conclusive of the whole matter?

Mr. CANNON. By no manner of means is it conclusive to make this an audited claim, creating a legal liability.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois two very short and pertinent questions.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. First, whether it is not the custom of Congress to refer claims to the Treasury Department to be adjudicated, to be audited, and to be adjusted? Is that not the ordinary course?

Mr. CANNON. No; not necessarily. They go under a general law.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Well, then, they go under a general law, but at all events they get there.

Now, in the second place, is not a law as binding, and the adjustment under that law as binding, if a special law is passed committing the auditing of the claim to another Department of the Government instead of to the Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. Now, has the question been asked?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; and it is upon the conscience of this Congress that we should rely in the consideration of these matters.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman. If any citizen has a legal claim against the Government of the United States he can go into the Court of Claims and have it audited by the Treasury Department.

Now, these parties did not have a legal claim against the Government, I apprehend. A legal claim would have been paid. But they come and set up a claim that under and by the conditions under which this work was done they are entitled to something in fairness and justice; and this claim of theirs is sent to the Secretary of the Navy, not to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of getting a report from him. Now, that is just the size of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But does it not direct the claim to be audited? If so, what does that mean?

Mr. CANNON. It directed it to be audited, but not in the sense of a claim on the Treasury of the United States, where the only question is as to the amount. If so, I will say to my friend from Tennessee—because I know him to be a good lawyer—if so, why did they not go into the court to recover the whole amount? That is the entire question in a nutshell.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, they did not go from the very best of reasons, for instead of sending them to the court, Congress, by law, sent them to the Secretary of the Navy, because this transaction had been had under that Department, and the Secretary of the Navy was supposed to know more about it than anybody else.

I will state to my friend further, with his indulgence, that this work was for the benefit of the Government, and was sent on account of the particular nature of the transaction to the Secretary of the Navy, he having had to do with the building of all of these vessels. In other words, the Government selected its own forum, and from that forum this resolution has been brought forth.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, as long as I have the claim of the gentleman from Tennessee set up in support of his case, I can proceed. He claims this to be a legal liability on the part of the Government. I deny it. I say that the only effect of sending this to the Secretary of the Navy was to get him to make a statement of facts, and that it should come to Congress for its consideration.

That there was no legal liability is acknowledged by the claimants themselves on page 5 of the report about the center of the page.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Just what is your objection to the proposition? Is it not just, and a proper claim against the Government, if it is not a legal one?

Mr. CANNON. I will proceed so discuss that, but I wanted to show what the claim was from the friends of the claimants.

Now, this claim seems, by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to arise in consequence of the contract that was made on May 30, 1889, and provided that the work of fitting up this machinery should be completed in two years and six months from that date; that is to say, November 30, 1891.

Now, what next? The Secretary of the Navy says:

The contract for the machinery of the Texas was dated May 30, 1889, and provided (seventh clause) that the delivery of the machinery should be completed and its erection, fitting, and connection in place on the vessel should be commenced within two years and six months from the date of the contract, or by November 30, 1891, and that its erection, fitting, and connection in place should be completed within three years and six months from the date of the contract, or by November 30, 1892——

Mr. CARMACK. What page is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. CANNON. Page 7 of the report—

at which time it was contemplated that the machinery should be subjected to a trial at sea to test its construction and the working of all its parts, and to ascertain whether it would develop the horsepower required. On the 14th of January, 1891, the boiler shop of the contractors was destroyed by fire, and they were on that account granted an extension of time under the contract of eight months, carrying the time for the completion of the whole work to July 30, 1893.

And they wanted a longer extension, as appears from the same report.

Turn now to page 9:

The contractors have taken December 31, 1892, as the date from which expenses should be charged to the Government, and by ascertaining upon that basis those expenses that are accurately determinable they get an amount which, subtracted from the whole amount, leaves the sum of $79,312.50, claimed as direct damage. I consider that the contractors are fairly entitled to extra compensation—on account of the matters set forth in their brief of claim, but for the reasons stated above it would seem to be reasonable and proper that July 30, 1893, the date of the expiration of the contract time as extended, should be taken as the date from which to reckon those items of expense that depend upon the element of time for their determination.

Now, this is Mr. McAdoo, the Assistant Secretary—

Now, that extension was made to July 30, 1893, and when it was made the contractors were insisting that it should be four months longer. Yet, having obtained the extension to July 30, 1893, they come in now and claim from December, 1892, and this Secretary, as he investigates, although he makes it start at July 30, 1893, does allow them from that time, when before that they had agonized for four months longer. Well, now, what does this prove, do you say? It proves that these parties wanted to get something out of the Government. The first delay that came came from the act of the claimants.

Mr. CARMACK. What act?

Mr. CANNON. They came and asked it because their shops had been destroyed by fire.

Mr. YOST. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I take it from that report.

Mr. YOST. I understand you take it from that report. Now, this accident to the shops occurred within a very few months after the contract had been let. They went to the Government and asked for a year's extension on their contract.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. YOST. The Government refused to give them more than eight months' extension.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. YOST. Then, desiring and intending to comply with their contract, they made extraordinary efforts to comple it within the eight months. They were ready, and did complete their contract, and here is the evidence of it, shown in the letter of Chief Constructor Hichborn, on page 17 of the report. He says:

On July 30, 1892, the contractors had complied with the terms of the contract.

Now, all that time inured to the benefit of the Government itself, as is shown in this statement of Secretary McAdoo which you yourself have read. The Government got the benefit of it and not these contractors. Nothing was allowed them for that extension.

Mr. CANNON. Why, they got the extension of eight months.

Mr. YOST. The Government got that, because this extension is not included at all in the time during which the Government agreed to pay damages.

Mr. CANNON. The Government got it! Why, certainly the gentleman can not or will not read. These men went and agonized for a year's extension. They got an extension of eight months. Now, they came with this claim and sought in their claim to establish damages for almost eight months of that time that the extension was granted on their own request.

Mr. LAMB. The Secretary cuts that out.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield first to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR], and then I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. I only wish to set the gentleman from Illinois right.

Mr. MINOR. That is what I am going to try to do. I read from this letter of Commodore Hichborn, dated February 5, 1895, found on page 17 of the report. Speaking about this time extension, he says in this letter:

The hull was launched on June 28, 1892, and if the contractors' time had not been extended on account of fire they would have been delayed in commencing the erection of the machinery on board seven months by the delay in the launching of the hull.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. When the Government found out that the contractors could not do their work on time, there was no necessity for the Government hurrying up.

Mr. MINOR. Oh, no——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says, "Oh, no." I say, in my judgment, oh, yes.

Mr. CARMACK. There is nothing to show that, is there?

Mr. LAMB. No.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose that had been done six months before. You could not put the machinery in, because your shops had been burned.

Mr. MINOR. I read further from Commodore Hichborn's letter:

It appears that although the original orders for the armor of the Texas were given prior to the orders for the armor for the Maine, Massachusetts, Indiana, Amphitrite, Puritan, Monterey, and Oregon, yet the delivery of armor for the latter ships antedated the delivery of that ordered for the Texas. This has resulted in delaying the completion of the Texas, and in preventing a trial of the machinery as required by the contract.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well——

Mr. MINOR. Now, whose fault is it; the fault of the Government or of the contractor?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman, by this claim that these men made, and it appears here in black and white, they went to the Government and asked for an extension of a year and got an extension of eight months, until the 30th of July. Then, when the Government paid them every dollar that it owed them under the contract, these claimants turned a double somersault and came in and filed a claim for damages from December up to July, when from December to July 30 the extension was granted at their own request because their shops had been burned up.

Mr. LAMB. They did not get that, because that time was cut out.

Mr. CANNON. That is what you say, but this is what the report of the Secretary of the Navy shows.

Mr. LAMB. I know you do not want to do an injustice, but that is a mistake.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend permit me right there?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know the gentleman would not do an injustice to anybody. We often do for the Government what we could not afford to do for ourselves. I am not an exception to that rule. The fact is that this company's works were burned.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. They feared that they were not going to be able to perform their contract within the time.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Availing themselves of another clause in the contract to provide against accidents, they applied for an extension of time.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. An extension of time was granted.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. But as a matter of fact they did not delay the Government and did not take the time, and in the statement of this claim, however, the time has been deducted, and that is the cause of the difference between the claim originally made and the claim as audited by the Navy Department. Now, this being so, it strikes me that it is unfair for the gentleman to claim that this was produced by their delay. They never delayed an hour. They feared they would not get their works in order in time, and they asked this delay; but they never availed themselves of it; and then the delay has been counted against them, and notwithstanding that delay the Navy Department says this is due them. That is the claim—all of it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to say to the gentleman, when he says that Representatives will avail themselves for the Government in matters they would not avail themselves of, by the letter of this contract and the substance of it, these claimants have no more legal right for redress than they have to repose in Abraham's bosom. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. But my friend will admit—and that is the distinction I draw—that neither he nor I would stand up before the world for an hour owing an equitable claim, whether it was a legal one or not, and refuse to pay it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let us see about an equitable claim. When two parties make a written contract and one party comes in and claims to recover damages for the other party not doing something at a certain time which he never agreed to do within a certain time, there is nothing in law and nothing in morals that requires the party to do that which he did not agree to do. Now, my point is this: By the contract, and by the statement of these men—the Richmond Locomotive Works—the Government never agreed to do what they wanted the damages for the Government not doing. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Did not the Government agree in this contract that this hull was to be ready at a certain day, so that this machinery could be put into it by this company? That the Government did not complete it at that time, and then, because the hull was not completed at that time, that these damages were incurred? So it was the fault and failure of the Government that caused the damages.

Mr. CANNON. Now my friend draws on his imagination.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not at all. I have read this case very carefully.

Mr. CANNON. I fear my friend has not read this part signed by the Richmond Locomotive Works, on page 5, in the center of the page:

> Inasmuch, therefore, as the Secretary of the Navy is bound by the letter of the contract, which makes no provision for loss to the builders of the machinery by reason of the failure of the Government to construct the hull in due time, the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works asks that the Secretary of the Navy, who has full knowledge of the facts or can be apprised of them, shall be authorized to make such allowance to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works as under all the circumstances may be fair, just, and right.

Now, my friend went to lunch just before he read that, or he would not have made the statement that he did. So much for that. Now let us go to another matter.

Mr. MINOR. Read the act.

Mr. CANNON. I have read the act. I will say to my friend that the act of Congress as passed sent that matter in claim to the Secretary of the Navy to consider and report to Congress. That is what this was. You say it is his duty, but the meaning of the language is that he shall consider and report the case to Congress, and we are not bound by these conclusions, and to show that we are not bound——

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, just one moment——

Mr. CANNON. Let me complete this statement. I say that we are not bound by the decision of the Secretary of the Navy, and in this report he reports instead of $12,000——

Mr. BRUMM. That is stricken out.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly. But if you can strike out $12,000—if you say he could audit and investigate this claim under an act of Congress and not be justly subject to criticism for the act—why can not I stand here and discuss this question before us so that I can strike out something without being criticised?

Mr. BRUMM. You discuss, but do not produce any argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. That is my misfortune.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, then, not in this case. It is true that, strictly speaking, according to law, there is no legal claim here, but the Government should act in good faith, and there is an implied contract, as well as a written contract. The implied contract was that this hull was to have been finished in a reasonable time. Having failed to do that, damages have accrued, and it is, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, a just claim, and he has adjusted it; and all we ask here is what the Secretary of the Navy has approved as the damage under these conditions, less the interest. They have even stricken that out; and because we have not done all the Secretary of the Navy says we shall do, you attempt to use that as argument against the equity and justice of the whole bill.

Mr. CANNON. I say this, and I want my friend's attention. I say that when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] draws an act of Congress which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to audit this claim and fix the liability of the Government, and that he has done that, when it comes here, I put that down by calling attention to the fact that this claim, this audited claim, which is not an audited claim, as I have contended from the beginning, is kicked aside and the gentleman himself strikes out $8,000 as well as some other matters.

Mr. LAMB. No; the gentleman misunderstands the whole thing. That was done by the Senate committee.

Mr. BRUMM. It makes no difference who did it.

Mr. LAMB. The Senate committee reduced it to $69,000.

Mr. CANNON. You are asking us to pass the Senate bill.

Mr. LAMB. You made the very objection last year when that question was brought up that it had not been approved by the Navy Department.

Mr. CANNON. What are you asking the House to do now?

Mr. BRUMM. We are asking the House to pass the Senate bill as we have it reported.

Mr. CANNON. You are asking us to ratify the action of the Senate, which strikes out these three items. Now, if there is anything in the act of Congress or the action of the Secretary of the Navy that commits the Government, legally commits the Government for the whole thing, it would be legally committed for the whole thing even if they had found a half a million. I undertake to say that the Secretary of the Navy never was given the power to bind Congress, and for that reason I am trying to show that these men have no just claim that we are bound to pay. Now, I want to go to another item.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] allow me to call his attention to one fact?

Mr. CANNON. I always yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOODY. Let me call his attention to the provision of the contract, printed on page 13 of the report, which prescribes what the obligation of the Government shall be in case of delay attributable to the Navy Department. The contract itself provides exactly what obligation the Government shall be under.

Mr. CANNON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to page 5, where the claimant himself says——

Mr. MOODY. I am not antagonizing the gentleman's position, but showing that the contract itself points out something other than a pecuniary compensation which would arise as an obligation on the part of the Government in case there was a delay, viz, that if there was delay attributable to the Navy Department, then the only obligation on the part of the Government would be to entitle the party of the first part to a corresponding extension of time, and no delay should be attributable to the Navy Department unless notice in writing was given by the other party to the contract. This is right in line with the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and I am much obliged to my friend from Massachusetts for the patient reading of the contract, which I had not read, but took the statement of the claimant as to its terms. The gentleman from Massachusetts, by a patient reading of the contract, points out a provision or clause that shows that these people are without legal claim and without equitable claim upon the Government.

Mr. BRUMM. You do not mean that?

Mr. CANNON. I mean to say that that clause of the contract made between these parties legally and equitably estops the claimant, in good conscience, from having one single cent.

Mr. BRUMM. That depends on the extent of the delay.

Mr. CANNON. And why? Because by this contract made between the parties it was agreed that if the Government did not furnish the hull in that time, after a written notice by the locomotive works, they should have a similar extension of time.

Mr. YOST. Now, before the gentleman gets away from that point I would like to have the gentleman read what is underneath that clause. The contract provides:

> In case any question shall arise under this contract concerning premiums or penalties, such question, with all the facts relating thereto, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Navy for consideration, and his decision thereon shall be conclusive and binding upon all the parties to this contract.

Mr. MOODY. That refers to penalties against the party of the first part.

Mr. CANNON. That is a penalty against the party of the first part, the claimants, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says. Now, these people have been pretty leniently dealt with by the Government, and yet they come in and make a charge here for dock trial, $12,000.

Mr. YOST. They are entitled to that under the contract.

Mr. CANNON. There was to be a trial under the contract at open sea. The Secretary of the Navy says these parties were in such a bad condition pecuniarily that he would not compel them to wait until the completion of this work, and so he let them have a dock trial that they might get their money earlier. They had a dock trial and did get their money, and now they come in here and charge $12,000 for that very dock trial, which was granted at their request that they might get their money sooner than they would have got it under the contract had they waited for it to be finished and sent to sea for a trial in the open sea. There is a maxim in equity that "He who receives equity must do equity." There is another maxim that "He who seeks equity must come in with clean hands."

Now, when we come to read this report, even imperfectly as I have been compelled to read it, there comes out one fact and another fact and another fact, showing, in my judgment, that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in attending the sessions of this House a long time ago I used to hear a very eminent gentlemen from Illinois, when questions were being argued against him, cry out: "Oh, don't play the cuttlefish; don't muddy the waters." Now, if my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has been doing anything else than playing the cuttlefish and muddying the waters I am not aware of it. [Laughter and applause.]

There is not a single concession that has been made by these parties seeking justice at our hands that has not been used by the gentleman to befoul and befog their case and damage their claim to the utmost of his ability. Of course this has been done by him conscientiously, in his desire to protect the Treasury and in accordance with his action as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, bringing in upon his appropriation bills containing things legal and illegal if they only commend themselves to his judgment, which could not be gotten in bills regularly on the floor of the House. He did not see fit to put in any appropriation bill this particular claim, which he might have done in the line with hundreds of others that he has put in his bills in the few years that I have served under his instruction, tutelage, and example. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend was a confirmed sinner before I made his acquaintance. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not think there is anything more gratifying to my friends than the progress I have made under the gentleman's tuition. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be a lawyer, but I have heard it said that evidence of a proposition for a compromise having been made can not be brought into court in the trial of a cause when the effort at compromise has failed.

The gentleman from Illinois would have us believe because these parties when they were kept out of their money for years and could not get it, knowing the habit of this House with respect to such claims—not the Senate, for, thank God, there is one place where a claim against this Government has a slight show of getting justice—because these parties said that if they could have immediately $69,550 instead of the $80,000 to which they were justly entitled, they would accept it—and this was two years ago—the gentleman [Mr CANNON] proposes to strike out all the rest of the items of this bill to zero. That is the degree of fairness, I am sorry to say, with which my friend has treated this case.

What are the plain facts of the case? First, the Government led these parties to believe, and morally, if not technically, agreed in the contract that this ship would be completed within two years and a half. If there is a manufacturer on this floor, especially one engaged in a line of business where the fixed charges on the cost of the plant, etc., make such an enormous portion of the cost of the finished product as in locomotive works and machine shops, where I think it must be from 25 to 33 per cent, I wish to appeal to his conscience in this matter and ask him to sustain me in my statement that when these parties were delayed with that machinery on their hands for sixteen months it must have been an enormous expense to them and reduced very largely, if it did not destroy, the profits that there may have been in this contract, unless the profits were out of all proportion to any profit I have ever known contractors to figure to make on any contract with the Government.

The work was to be completed November 30, 1892. The adjustment of this claim as a matter of fact, auditing, if not technically, was arrived at March 2, 1895. These acccounts were committed to the Navy Department to be audited and allowed, that they might be audited by experts familiar with the whole business and situation, so that the Government might secure all the rights and advantages to which it was entitled, and which it might not secure if the case had been regularly sent to the Treasury Department. So that the sending of this case to the Navy Department rather than the Treasury Department, was, as a matter of fact, against the interests of these parties rather than in their favor.

As I have said, the work was to be completed November 30, 1892. A fire occurred at the works of the contractors and they appealed to the Government for one year's extension. They obtained an extension for eight months, bringing the time for completion of the work, according to the letter of the contract, down to July 30, 1893, on which date the work contracted for was ready, as agreed in the contract. But the contractors were delayed and hindered by the Government until November 30, 1894—sixteen months.

The Government was under contract to complete the ship for which this machinery was constructed in two years and a half; and as the Government was in a hurry for the vessels, there was no thought on the part of these contractors that there would be the slightest obstruction to their completing the machinery or other matters covered by their contract. If the contract provided for penalties which were to be paid to these contractors if the Government did not carry out its part of the contract, as it did not, these parties could not have collected the penalties, and they knew it. They must rely on the honor of the Government. All gentlemen know that penalties can not be collected from the Government, whatever provision there may be in a contract for such penalties.

The gentleman says that if there had been any penalty due, provision for it would have been inserted in an appropriation bill, provided it was a legal claim. It would have been inserted now if the gentleman had pleased to put it in, and it would not have been inserted if he did not so please. If his committee did not choose to put it in any bill, this House even could not get it in and it would have stayed out. There is no way to collect the judgment of a court against the Government. We all know that.

The claim, which was justly due in this case, amounted to $108,983. The agents of the Government reduced the amount to $84,049; and six different committees of the House and the Senate have unanimously reported in favor of the allowance and payment of this claim. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois would defeat the payment of this just claim of these parties on purely technical grounds. He does not go at all into the equities of the case, but simply the technicalities; and here, on the eve of the Government desiring to make large contracts with just such parties for immense supplies likely to be needed in the near future, do they set an example of encouraging contractors to enter into obligations to do the work of the Government?

I myself made a contract with the Government early in the late civil war, and the Government kept me out of my money—the contract amounting to some $300,000—for years, until every dollar of the margin was swept away, and made a loss to me of several thousand dollars. And I said then, "Never again will I contract with the Government for anything whatever;" and I stand there now. After my own experience, my advice to my friends is never to make a contract under any circumstances for anything with the Government of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How about your salary? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Oh, well, I will take my chance on that, for we all have "a little pork in that pot" [laughter], and the gentleman from Tennessee is familiar with the fact that we can usually get something out of it when we are all interested.

Now, because these parties have said that rather than pursue this claim further in Congress to get justice they are willing to submit to the sacrifice of some $11,000, the gentleman from Illinois wants us to strike out all the balance of the claim and pay them nothing whatever.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say—and if I have any time remaining I will yield it back to the chairman—I have known the circumstances of this case somewhat familiarly, because I was referred to it as a claim like one of my own constituents had which was pending before Congress for fifteen years, as having similar characteristics to this one, and I was trying to get his claim through, which I succeeded in doing a few days since.

I examined this case in connection with the other, and I wish to say that it is incumbent on the House to show, in every single one of these cases where there are findings of the Court of Claims, or where there has been a report made by the Committee on Claims, that there has been some error either in the findings of the court or in the judgment of the committee. It is incumbent on the House, where this is not shown, to vote to pay claims that are pronounced just by our committee or by the court.

I shall not only vote "yea" in this case, but in every claim passed on favorably by the Court of Claims or reported by the Committee on Claims favorably, unless some member of the committee shows conclusively that it ought not to be paid. I care a great deal more about my own conscience and the good character of the Government than for all the money in the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. My friend's conscience is a pretty expensive one to the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; it is expensive also to me; but where I have lost ten dollars I have made a hundred by dealing honestly.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is a good paying conscience.

Mr. YOST. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 706) for the relief of the Erie Railroad Company.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be authorized to take jurisdiction of and adjust the claim of the Erie Railroad Company, successor of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, and of the Erie Railway Company, for the transportation of the mails of the United States from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877, upon routes (old numbers) Nos. 1201, 1207, and 1208, said claim being based upon alleged contracts between the United States of America (acting in that behalf by their Postmaster-General) and the president of said Erie Railway Company, signed and acknowledged by John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster-General, on the 10th day of January, 1874, and by P. H. Watson, president of said Erie Railway Company, on the 29th day of April, 1874.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] came very near stating what doubtless he intended to say when he set out, that he would vote for any claim reported from the Committee on Claims of this House.

There may, perhaps, on the face of this claim now before us, be something very strange, although when a man is familiar with the policy of the Committee on Claims of this House, and I refer to both sides, there is nothing unusual in the claim itself.

You will find by looking at the report accompanying it that it was made on the 14th day of last December, six or seven days after this Congress convened; and you will find, further, from looking at the report, that they have recited a letter from the Post-Office Department——

Mr. BRUMM (interrupting). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. How does this bill come up?

The CHAIRMAN. It comes up in the regular way.

Mr. BRUMM. The committee has not asked to have it brought up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed the Clerk to read the next bill on the Calendar, and the Clerk read this.

Mr. BRUMM. But this is not the next bill. This bill was set aside, and the committee is not ready to take it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is properly before the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. It seems rather strange that such action should be taken when the committee do not desire its consideration now.

Mr. LOUD. It is too late now, Mr. Chairman, to make that point.

Mr. BRUMM. We are not ready to discuss the bill, and the reason is due to my friend from California. I told him that if he had no objection I would be glad if he would let me know what information he possessed with reference to this claim, as he had made some statement in regard to it to me. I understood that we were to have the benefit of that information before the claim was to be considered. We have come here, therefore, unprepared, and it is not fair that the bill should be taken up under these circumstances.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend ought to be——

Mr. LOUD. Let me take care of this. Let us see whether it is or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is properly before the committee.

Mr. LOUD. The bill is properly before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRUMM. If I am in order, I now move that this bill be laid over.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is not in order. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do it, unless the gentleman from California yields the floor.

Mr. LOUD. And that I shall not do.

Now, let us be perfectly fair about this. The chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. BRUMM] did come to me and say if I had any evidence as to why this claim should not pass that he would like to see it. I am perfectly willing to admit that. Now, Mr. Chairman, the very evidence that I have here to-day has been submitted to this Congress before, and years subsequent to the letter which the gentleman has published in his report; and I want to call the attention of Congress to the fact that in less than one week after this Congress assembled, or within a week after the committees were organized, this bill was reported to this Congress upon a report that was made years ago, without any investigation on the part of the committee whatever, and I defy successful contradiction of that statement.

This is not the only case in which that has been done. It is a common thing for committees to do that, and I do not desire to criticise this committee any more than I desire to criticise other committees. It is a well-known fact that the Committee on War Claims for years have submitted fifteen, twenty-five, or fifty reports to this House within one week after that committee has been organized, a time which would not allow an intelligent investigation of one of those cases, let alone fifty or seventy-five.

Now, I have no evidence in this case, Mr. Chairman, that is not accessible to every man on the floor of this House, and such evidence as the committee itself should have been in possession of before they reported this case to Congress.

What should a committee do first when a claim is referred to them? They should refer that claim to the Department that has charge of that character of business, and ascertain from that Department what its views are.

Now, what are the merits of the Erie claim? I propose, without reading these documents which I have here, later on to ask that they may, perhaps, be buried in the RECORD, but to have them go into the RECORD, where any man can obtain the full evidence in relation to this case.

In 1872 or 1873 the Erie Railroad Company, presumably, according to the claim of the committee, entered into a contract to carry the mails over the Erie Railroad, connecting at that time with the Lake Shore, the Erie Railroad at that time having a direct connection with the Lake Shore Railroad Company, one of the most accessible routes for the through mails from New York to the city of Chicago. I am willing to admit that the contract was executed by the Post-Office Department—that is, it bore the signature of the Postmaster-General—and was transmitted to the Erie Railroad Company for them to attach their signature to it, the Erie Railroad Company knowing as well as any individual who deals with the Government must know that that contract was required to be returned to the Post-Office Department that it might be filed, and a copy of the same filed with the Auditor in order that he might properly make the account.

Now, what did the Erie Railroad Company do? They not only failed but refused—and I say "refused" by failing to send the contract to the Department after they were notified to send it there.

Now, the mails on this railroad were weighed. Let me say that prior to this contract there is some little valuable history in connection with this railroad company, to show how leniently the Government dealt with them, giving them repeated reweighings, contrary to the custom of the Department, to increase the pay; and mind you that new weighings were ordered in order to get this pay. At the time of the making of this contract they were carrying the mails, and should have carried them strictly under their contract for three years more, on an annual payment of $172,500. The Department came in at this time and gave them a new weighing, which weight showed that they should have received some $320,000 per annum for the carrying of these mails.

Now, the Erie Railroad carried these mails for a short period of time, and the Government paid them every dollar that was due to them, notwithstanding they had not returned the contract to the Post-Office Department to have it filed there. Events subsequently demonstrated that the Erie Railroad Company had lost control of its service over the Lake Shore road and the New York Central had gained that close connection with that road which it has had ever since. The Erie Railroad Company were not in a position then to transmit the mails expeditiously to Chicago, and the Post-Office Department notified the company that it would take from their road a certain amount of mail and transfer it to the New York Central in order to expedite the transportation.

The Government did so. The mails were weighed, and the New York Central began to carry this mail. Then the Erie Railroad Company came and claimed payment for the carrying of the mail which the New York Central was carrying. There was a little quibble between the railroad company and the Department, the railroad company claiming that they were not duly notified of this transfer of the mail. The Department, recognizing the equity of that as against the law, paid the Erie Railroad Company for a little over a month for the carrying of this mail which they did not carry and for which the Government had paid the New York Central, which road did carry the mail.

Now, then, the claim of the Erie Railroad Company was originally—I forget the exact amount—but for one month's pay, about $25,000 or $26,000. That was the original claim to the Department. They claimed that they had a contract. Well, now, if they had a contract, why did they not go to the Court of Claims? They have allowed all these years to elapse, allowed the time to pass in which they could have gone into the Court of Claims if they had a contract; and when that time has passed, knowing Congress, as its adroit attorneys evidently do, knowing that they had no case before the Court of Claims that they could get through, they took it into Congress, and of course if they can not get this case through now, they might some time during the next twenty-five or fifty years. Here is an effort that is repeatedly made to blow the breath of life into a claim that never had a legal standing or even an equitable one before anybody.

Now, let us see what the Department said about this—and they did not mince matters about it when it was referred to them. I want to say that this is not secret information, but it is the information that the committee should have reported to this House. Under date of February 9, 1894, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General reported to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and that is where all reports of this character, permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, should be referred. We have several of them there.

Here is the correspondence:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 5th instant relative to the claim of the Erie Railroad Company for additional compensation for mail service performed between January 1, 1874, and June 30, 1877, and to the H. R. No. 706, which proposes to provide for the waiving of the statute of limitations in favor of this claim and its submission to the Court of Claims, I have the honor to forward herewith copies of a memorandum prepared by the superintendent of railway adjustment for the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in February, 1894, and a letter of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to the Postmaster-General, dated February 9, 1894, which give the facts and the views of the officers of the Department then in charge of the files and records relating to such cases.

I also inclose herewith a statement prepared by the Auditor for this Department, which shows the amount paid the company for service on routes 1201, 1207, and 1208, from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1877.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. GARY, Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. F. LOUD,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1894.

Memorandum for Second Assistant Postmaster-General, prepared by the superintendent railway adjustment division, relative to claim of Erie Railway Company. Term, 1873 to 1877.

Route 1201, term 1873 to 1877, New York to Dunkirk, 459 miles. October 1, 1873, service of Erie Railway Company was recognized for quarter ended September 30, 1873, at $172,500 per annum. Route was weighed from October 1, 1873, and average weight ascertained to be 39,170 pounds per day. On this basis the rate of compensation was fixed at $323,595 per annum.

December 31, 1873, service of Erie Railway Company was recognized for quarter ended December 31, 1873, at $323,595 per annum, and order of October 1, 1873, was modified so as to pay at same rate for quarter ended September 30, 1873.

January 1, 1874, order was made to contract with the Erie Railway Company at $323,595 per annum from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877.

The records show that contracts as above were drawn in duplicate and signed by the Postmaster-General (as was then the custom), and on February 3, 1874, forwarded to the Erie Railway Company, to be signed on part of the company and returned to the Department, so that they could be recognized by the Department and a copy forwarded to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, as required by section 262, Postal Laws and Regulations, 1873.

It appears that the "contracts" above mentioned were not returned to the Department by April 8, 1874, for on that date "the company telegraphed the Auditor asking payment. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General replied the same day by telegram that the Department awaited the execution and return of contracts."

The "contracts" were not returned, and an order was issued April 24, 1874, recognizing the service of the Erie Railway Company for the quarter ended March 31, 1874, at $323,595 per annum.

Similar orders were made at the close of each quarter from this time to and including the quarter ended September 30, 1875.

"The establishment of the 'fast mail' between New York and Chicago, via the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, which went into operation September 16, 1875, caused a large portion of the mail matter hitherto carried on routes 1201 and 1208 to be diverted to the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad from the date named."

The Erie Railway Company must have been aware of this diversion, but no notice of the change of the routing of these through Western mails seems to have been given the Erie Railway Company by the Department until the letter dated October 13, 1875, was sent. This letter notified the company that the mails would be weighed for thirty days from November 1, 1875, with the view of adjusting the pay from September 16, 1875.

The weighing was postponed to begin December 1, 1875, and the company was notified of such postponement by letter dated October 25, 1875.

The mails were weighed for sixty days from December 1, 1875, and the aver age daily weight found to be 6,082 pounds.

On this weight the pay was adjusted at $128,948 per annum.

Order of July 31, 1876, recognized the service of the Erie Railway Company from January 1 to June 30, 1876, at $128,948 per annum, and modified previous orders so as to fix pay from September 16, 1875, at the same rate.

Under the act of July 12, 1876, which directed a reduction of 10 per cent in the compensation of all railroad companies for the transportation of the mails, the pay was stated at $119,217.20 per annum, and service of Erie Railway Company was recognized at that rate from July 1 to July 22, 1876, by order of February 17, 1877.

The mails were again weighed for thirty days from November 15, 1876, and the daily average weight found to be 15,659 pounds, and on the basis of this weight the service of the Erie Railway Company was recognized (in order of February 17, 1877) from July 23 to December 31, 1876, at $160,302.30 per annum.

Pay from January 1, 1877, to be fixed.

Order of April 10, 1877, recognized the service of the Erie Railway Company for the quarter ended March 31, 1877, at the rate of $160,302.30 per annum.

The mails were again weighed for sixty days in February and March, 1877, and the weight ascertained to be 12,312 pounds, and the pay fixed at $151,852.10 per annum.

Order of July 13, 1877, recalled order of April 10, 1877, and authorized the Auditor to pay the Erie Railway Company for service from January 1, 1877, to June 30, 1877, at the rate of $151,852.10 per annum, in accordance with the new returns for February and March, 1877.

By an order made December 1, 1877, previous orders were modified and restated so as to allow pay to October 15, 1875 (the date on which the railway company received notice of the intention of the Department to reweigh the mails for the purpose of ascertaining the basis on which to adjust the pay for service from September 16, 1875, the date on which the diversion of the through Western mails to the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad took place), at the rate of $323,595 per annum, thus authorizing payment of the Erie Railway Company at the full rate allowed under the weighing from October 1, 1873, to and including October 15, 1875, notwithstanding the large weights of the through Western mails were diverted from its line on September 16, 1875.

Route 1208, Buffalo to Hornellsville, was treated in a manner similar to that of route 1201, and the above statement, except as to termini, amount of pay, etc., will apply in the case of route 1208.

The service on route 1207 was weighed from October 1, 1873, pay fixed at $30,525 per annum, and contracts were sent out on February 3, 1874. The contracts were not returned, but service was recognized quarter to quarter to October 1, 1875, and the Auditor was then authorized to pay at same rate from October 1, 1875, to June 30, 1877.

Under date of January 10, 1874, contracts with the Erie Railway Company were ordered drawn for service from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877, on the following routes:

1201, New York to Dunkirk, 459 miles.
1202, Suffern to Piermont, 18 miles.
1203, Buffalo to Suspension Bridge, 25.94 miles.
1204, Newburgh to Chester, 19.75 miles; branch, Vails Gate to Junction, 12.75 miles.
1205, Rochester to Avon, 18 miles.
1206, Avon to Dansville, 30.73 miles.
1207, Attica to Corning, 111 miles.
1208, Buffalo to Hornellsville, 91 miles.
1209, Goshen to Montgomery, 10.25 miles.

These contracts were drawn in duplicate and signed by the Postmaster-General, and on February 3, 1874, they were sent to the Erie Railway Company to be executed on part of the company and returned to the Department, so that they might be regularly recognized by the Department and a copy forwarded to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, as was required by section 262, Postal Laws and Regulations of 1873.

Contracts for 1210, Goshen to Pine Island, 11 miles, were sent to the railway company February 9, 1874.

Of the contracts forwarded to the railway company for execution and return, as above stated, the records show that those for routes 1202, 1204, 1206, 1209, and 1210 were executed and returned to the Department, and that the Department recognized them and forwarded copies of each to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department on April 24, 1874.

Those for routes 1201, 1203, 1205, 1207, and 1208 were not returned.

Under date of November 2, 1875, the Department wrote the receiver of the Erie Railway Company that—

"An intimation having reached the Department to the effect that the proprietors of the Erie Railway regard the rate of compensation fixed at the last readjustment for mail service on route 1201, between New York and Dunkirk, and route 1208, between Buffalo and Hornellsville, as still continuing in force, notwithstanding the diversion of mails consequent upon the establishment of the new fast-mail line between New York and Chicago, it is deemed proper to reiterate the notice given in the Department's letter of the 13th ultimo, that the readjustment of pay to be based on the weighing of mails soon to be made is to take effect from the 16th September, 1875, the date of the establishment of the fast-mail line above mentioned."

The mails were weighed on route 1201.

First. Thirty days from October 1, 1873, weight, 39,170 pounds.
Second. Sixty days from December 1, 1875, weight, 6,082 pounds.
Third. Thirty days from November 15, 1876; weight, 15,659 pounds.
Fourth. Sixty days from February and March, 1877; weight, 12,312 pounds.

The Erie Railway Company claimed that contracts were made for service on routes 1201 and 1208 from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877, exhibited alleged contracts, and that the rate of compensation fixed on the basis of weight of mails ascertained by the weighing from October 1, 1873, should apply to the end of the quadrennial term June 30, 1877, and that the Department had no right to change the rate during such term; also that if the Department had the right to order a reweighing and make such change in compensation, it must allow the prevailing rate to continue until the weights were taken, the pay adjusted, and the notice of such adjustment was sent to the railway company; and that the company should be allowed one month's extra pay on any reduction in the compensation of the company for carrying the mails.

The claim relative to the "one month's extra pay" was based on the provision of the alleged contract, which provides for the allowance of "one month's extra pay" to star contractors "as full indemnity" in case of discontinuance or curtailment of such star service.

In connection with these claims the Erie Railway Company, through its attorney, Mr. W. W. MacFarland, under date of March 29, 1876, filed an extended argument, which was submitted to Hon. T. A. Spence, Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department.

Under date of May 4, 1876, the Assistant Attorney-General submitted an opinion, in which, after calling attention to errors as to the facts in the argument of Mr. W. W. MacFarland, and stating the circumstances which led to the reweighing and the change in rate of compensation, he says:

"I am therefore of the opinion that the notice given the Erie Railway, of the contemplated change of compensation, bore date the 13th of October, 1875, and was probably received on the 14th or 15th of that month. The notice designated the 16th of September as the date from and after which the compensation would be according to a readjustment to be made on a weighing to be subsequently made.

"Inasmuch, however, as the service performed by the Erie Railway Company, after the 16th of September to the 15th of October, 1875, was performed under the reasonable impression from the (past) action of the Department that it would receive for the service the same compensation that it had theretofore received, it is proper that that compensation should be paid for it, to the receipt of notice of the change of compensation.

"The Erie Railway can not legally claim, nor can the Postmaster-General allow, a larger compensation for the service rendered by the said company on routes Nos. 1201 and 1208, after the notice given by the Postmaster-General on the 13th October, 1875, than that fixed by the law, according to the average weight of the mails carried, as ascertained by the weighing of the mails, made for that purpose under the direction of the Postmaster-General, commencing on the 1st day of December, 1875."

March 8, 1877, Mr. S. R. Hamill was appointed agent and attorney for the receiver of the Erie Railway Company.

Mr. Hamill filed a claim for compensation on routes 1201 and 1208, from September 16, 1875, to November 30, 1875, at the rate authorized under the weighing from October 1, 1873, and submitted an argument thereon.

In this argument he recites the signing of the contract forms by the Postmaster-General, and by the president of the Erie Railway Company, and the approval of sureties on said contract forms by the postmaster at New York, N. Y.; but fails to allege that the contracts, so executed and approved, were ever forwarded to the Department for acceptance and recognition, or that it was ever in the power of the Department to recognize the contracts and forward copies to the Auditor as required by law.

Mr. Hamill summarizes the claims on part of the company as follows:

"It is suggested that it must be first decided whether there was, or was not, a contract. If there was, then the company are clearly entitled to one month's extra compensation from the date of the receipt of the notification of reduction of service under it (October 15, 1875). If there was no contract then the company were entitled to compensation under the law based upon the average weight of mails transported. The rate of compensation once fixed by actual weight can no more be diminished than it could legally be increased, until by a new weighing the decrease or increase was legally determined, and they are clearly entitled to pay to which they were entitled by the actual weighing in the fall of 1873, to the 1st of December, 1875, when the new weighing was commenced."

In proof of the existence of contracts, Mr. Hamill submits copies of the contract forms signed and sureties approved, as above stated.

This appears to be the first record on the Department files of the filing of the alleged contracts or copies thereof.

Mr. Hamill asks that this matter be submitted anew to the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department.

This request was complied with and the matter was referred to Hon. A. A. Freeman, then Assistant Postmaster-General, with a letter from the Acting Second Assistant Postmaster-General, dated August 23, 1877, reciting the facts and asking direction as to further action if any should be taken.

Hon. A. A. Freeman, Assistant Attorney-General, under date of September 8, 1877, returns the papers in the case, and says:

"This case was once before considered by my predecessor in office, the Hon. T. A. Spence, and I am of opinion that nothing is now presented which in any manner affects the correctness of the views expressed in his letter of the 4th of May, 1876."

The attention of the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General was not called to the opinion of Hon. T. A. Spence, Assistant Attorney-General, of May 4, 1876, until the 21st of August, 1877.

The opinion of Hon. A. A. Freeman, Assistant Attorney-General, was rendered September 8, 1877, and in pursuance of the lines laid down in these opinions the orders of December 1, 1877, were issued, thus providing for the payment of the Erie Railway Company to October 15, 1875, at the rate authorized by the weights as ascertained by the weighing of October 1, 1873.

September 14, 1877, Mr. Hamill writes urging the Department to "complete the settlement," and says therein:

"The concurring opinions of the late and the present Assistant Attorney-General would seem to be conclusive."

The issuance of the orders of December 1, 1877, allowing compensation at the larger rate to October 15, 1875 (the date on which the Erie Railway Company acknowledges the receipt of notice of intention to weigh the mails for the purpose of ascertaining the basis for the readjustment of compensation), seems to have been considered by the Department as a settlement of the controversy; but notwithstanding this action on part of the Department Mr. Hamill files a claim, December 7, 1877, for compensation at said larger rate from October 15, 1875, to December 1, 1875.

December 28, 1877, referring to the claim filed on December 7, 1877, Mr. Hamill was informed that "the Postmaster-General * * * deems it his duty to decline to take further action thereon."

January 26, 1878, Mr. Hamill filed a protest with the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department against the settlement of the claim on the basis of the orders above noted, and claimed compensation to December 1, 1875, at the rate authorized for the service from July 1, 1873, to October 15, 1875.

This protest is accompanied with an extended argument and a statement of "facts" on which it is based, but no mention is made in such statement of the former claim that contracts for service on routes 1201 and 1208 had been made. The contention relative to the alleged contracts seems to have been abandoned.

The statement was made that this matter was brought to the attention of Postmaster-General Gresham in 1884, and that the claim of the railway company was passed upon adversely by him. After a careful examination of the files and records of this office I have to state that I fail to find any papers or records to sustain the statement that Postmaster-General Gresham ever passed upon this claim.

The claim of the Erie Railway Company was again presented, and on February 21, 1888, Mr. Knott, then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, mentions the fact that Assistant Attorney-General Spence held that the "company had no claim," and says, relative to the request of Messrs. McGrew & Small, attorneys for the company, that "the Department concur in having this matter referred to the Court of Claims, waiving the operations of the statute of limitations;" that "the claim is a very dubious one, but so far as I have examined it it seems to grow out of the fact that the alleged contracts provided one rate of pay and that by a subsequent extensive diversion of the mails from that road and a reweighing on it their pay was very heavily reduced. It seems to me, however, that the argument of Mr. Spence is a very strong and unanswerable one."

The report of Mr. Knott and accompanying papers evidently went to Assistant Attorney-General Bryant, for I find, under date March 3, 1888, an opinion signed by Mr. Bryant, which concludes as follows:

"The bill submitted to me I do not think ought to pass—

"1. Because it is a doubtful question whether this contract can be regarded as ever having been executed so as to bind the Government—

"2. It is doubtful whether it is valid even if executed—

"3. It is not clear that the service was performed under this contract. It certainly was never so regarded by the Department, but was considered as 'recognized service' and paid for under the statute, as I am informed.

"But as there are questions of law involved which appear to me doubtful, it would seem to me that a bill permitting the company to test such questions in the Court of Claims would be a more proper measure of relief, should Congress deem it in the interest of justice to waive the bar of the statute of limitations."

Under date of December 8, 1888, Postmaster-General Dickinson writes to Senator McPherson, United States Senate, and, after stating the substance of Senate bill No. 779, and quoting sections 402 and 404, Revised Statutes, seems to favor the submission of the case to the Court of Claims, and says:

"In order that the whole question as to the execution and validity of the contracts may be passed upon, I suggest that the inclosed amended bill be further amended by the insertion of the word 'alleged' before 'contracts,' as otherwise it may be claimed that the legislation intended to foreclose that question."

Under date of February 9, 1894, Second Assistant Postmaster-General Bell wrote Postmaster-General Bissell, and the Postmaster-General forwarded the letter to Hon. J. S. Henderson, chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives. The records show that the Erie Railway Company was fully paid for all the service it actually performed from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1877.

That covered the period for which they allege there is a contract in existence.

The company had the benefit of frequent reweighings on the routes in question, and the rate of pay was based on the weights actually carried as shown by these reweighings.

Because of the presumed failure of the Department to give the company notice in advance of the diversion to the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, which occurred on September 16, 1875, the Department made orders allowing the company at the rate of compensation based on the weight ascertained by the weighing from October 1, 1873 (39,170 pounds per day), for the time from September 16, 1875, to October 15, 1875, the date the company received the notice of the intention of the Department to reweigh the routes for the purpose of ascertaining the basis on which to adjust the compensation. This weighing showed an average weight of 6,083 pounds per day.

That covers the period during which they did not carry the mails.

The company has no right to consider the alleged contracts as binding on the Government while it held them in its own possession and gave the Government no notice of its intention to consider them as contracts until long after the conditions under which they were authorized had materially changed, and the company had been notified of the changed conditions and the consequent reduction in pay.

Mark you. May they not have had an object in withholding these contracts?

If the conditions were reversed and the weights largely increased, would the company admit that the Government might consider forms of contracts drawn and signed in 1874, when the weights were light, binding on it, if not presented for acceptance until 1876, when the conditions had changed and the increased weights had been shown?

The contract forms for routes 1201 and 1208 were not returned for acceptance until the conditions had materially changed and the company had ascertained that its pay would be reduced in accordance with the reduced service it was performing.

It may also be noted that pending the time preceding the reduction of weights on the routes mentioned the company failed and refused to provide the cars and facilities which were desired and requested by the Department.

It would seem from the above that the railway company was paid for the transportation of all the mails that it actually carried.

That the Department was justified in diverting the mails to other lines because of the failure of this company to provide the necessary facilities and make the connections essential to good mail service.

That the alleged contracts were not returned to or recognized by the Department.

Permit me to say, and it is done in a great many instances, the Department reserves, in verbal as well as specifically in its contracts, the right at all times to divert the mail to other routes if in their judgment it will be for the betterment of the service.

That any contract entered into after the passage of the act of the 3d of March, 1873, which obliged to Department to pay more than authorized by that act would be illegal.

That was the date at which the maximum rates were fixed for carrying the mail.

That this case was presented to the Department by competent attorneys of the railway company at various times within the time specified in the statute of limitations, and would have been taken to the Court of Claims by those attorneys if they had considered it possible to make a case in that court.

That there appears to be no reason why his case should be allowed to go to that court in violation of a law that prohibits other cases of similar age from being taken to that tribunal.

That, as a rule, it is detrimental to the interests of the Government to waive the six years' limitation in favor of those who have allowed their rights to slumber until the time specified in the law has passed.

That to allow such old cases to be reopened after a lapse of so much time, after the persons who had handled the case in the Department are dead or have left the Government service, and after the records and papers in the cases have been lost or destroyed, is to put the Government at a great disadvantage in these matters and to foster the perpetuation of claims which should be passed upon and disposed of by the parties who handled the case and were familiar with its details.

I believe that, in the interest of justice and fairness, the statute of limitations should be enforced in all cases of a character similar to that under consideration.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1894.

SIR: I beg to submit the following concerning bill H. R. 3815, entitled "A bill for the relief of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company." Its direct purpose is to provide a way for the establishment by the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company of a claim amounting to $344,661.76 as additional compensation for mail service during the term beginning July 1, 1873, and ending June 30, 1877.

Its passage, however, involves a great deal more than might be supposed. It carries with it the establishment of a precedent which would warrant the institution of legal proceedings by every railroad mail carrier that has had its compensation readjusted during a four-year contract term.

It should be understood that the claim is not for mails actually carried and for which the Department has omitted to compute compensation, but it is based on the ground that the Department's contract named a weight and rate which it was bound not to reduce throughout a four-year term.

There can be no disputing that the railroad company was paid for all of the mails hauled under precisely the same methods that applied to all other railroad mail carriers, and, besides, was paid an extra allowance of one month upon the maximum weight. The month's extra consideration was really not an obligation, nor would a practice of the kind be sanctioned now in dealing with railroad-transportation service.

FACTS.

At the beginning of the contract term in question, July 1, 1873, the Erie was the route upon which the greater portion of the Western mails was being carried from New York; and its pay, based upon the weight of such, was accordingly adjusted. Nearly two years afterwards, however, the policy of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway management (Erie's best connection) changed, because of which it was no longer possible to advance the bulk of the through mails by way of the Erie's lines, and it therefore became necessary to divert a considerable extent of the service to other routes, in consequence of which the Erie lines were reweighed, and compensation accordingly was reduced.

Similar fluctuations and readjustments occurred in 1876, when, because of a restoration of certain mails, the Erie's compensation was again advanced, but not to the extent that prevailed in 1873, as the route never again resumed its importance as a fast-mail route, owing to the alliance between the New York Central and the Lake Shore, which alliance has grown stronger and stronger until the relationship has become so close that, from a mail-service standpoint, they are now practically one interest between New York and Chicago via Buffalo.

The claim to which bill 3815 applies is not a new one. There are no facts in existence now that were not known at the time it first came before the Department, and it is not improper, I add, that sanctioning its resurrection would place the Government at a disadvantage, as some of those who were most familiar with all of the circumstances are dead or have severed their connection with the Post-Office Department.

I have taken more than ordinary pains to acquaint myself with all the circumstances associated with the case, and have no hesitation in declaring that I discovered nothing which would warrant recommending that Congress interfere with the action taken by the Post-Office Department at the time the claim was first presented by the railroad company.

The granting of a month's bonus in 1875, calculated on the maximum weights carried in that term, is strong evidence of a purpose of the Department at the time to deal most generously with the Erie Company. Other than from such a desire there was no good reason for allowing the month's additional pay.

Yours, respectfully,

J. LOWRIE BELL,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1893.

SIR: In compliance with a verbal request from your office I have the honor to inclose herewith a statement of account, showing that there was paid to the Erie Railroad Company for the transportation of mail from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1877, on routes Nos. 1201, 1207, and 1208, as follows:

Route No. 1201	$974,861.27
Route No. 1207	118,852.48
Route No. 1208	100,293.81

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY A. CASTLE, Auditor.

The SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1898.

HENRY A. CASTLE, Auditor.

Hon. SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.

Now, then, briefly summed up, while this company claimed that they had a contract—a bona fide contract, which they will probably present on the floor—for the carrying of this mail, yet the first claim that they ever made to the Department was for but one month's pay, and they claim now three hundred and forty-four thousand and some odd dollars, the difference in the amount of the money they received for the carriage of the mail that they did not carry and the amount of mail that they were carrying when this assumed contract was entered into between these two parties. This railroad company has been paid for every pound of mail they ever carried during the life of this contract, as will be discovered by the reading of this testimony, and during the life of this contract this railroad company was given frequent reweighings, which increased its mail pay; and further, that the mail had been diverted to that line, the only line which had unbroken connection to Chicago and expedited the mail—the New York Central—and that it has been paid for every pound of mail it carried.

Mr. TALBERT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they transferred the contract to another road, and that road has received the money?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; they did not transfer the contract. Of course there is no contract in existence.

Mr. TALBERT. Did they transfer the work?

Mr. LOUD. The Post-Office Department took the mail from that road over to the New York Central, because this road could not make the time and would not provide the cars.

Mr. TALBERT. And they paid the money to the road they transferred it to?

Mr. LOUD. Yes; to the New York Central, which road has been paid the $344,000, and now this company wants to get it out of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask my friend from California a question, and see if I have got it right. This work was done under the general statute. There was no contract; the statute was the contract.

Mr. LOUD. There was a contract partially executed but never delivered.

Mr. CANNON. Then there was no contract.

Mr. LOUD. I have stated that this railroad company held this contract, and notwithstanding the fact, as will appear by the testimony submitted, that they had been notified to forward it to the Department, they held it after the notice for two and a half years.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I understand that many of the railways, probably the most of them, never make any contract; that is, the statute is the contract.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CANNON. The statute provides for the payment of so much per mile per annum, according to weight.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Illinois must understand that this was about the time of the passage of the law of 1873. Prior to that time contracts had been entered into, and this contract was assumed to be entered into some time in January, 1874.

Mr. CANNON. That was after the enactment of the statute.

Mr. LOUD. After the act of March 3, 1873.

Mr. CANNON. Under the statute they performed the service and were paid according to the weight.

Mr. LOUD. They got pay for every pound of mail they ever carried and for some they did not carry.

Mr. CANNON. And the Government at any time, for any reason satisfactory to itself, could divert mail from that road to another road——

Mr. LOUD. Always has reserved that right.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). And has that right under the law. Now, then, that is what the Government did; and now this railway company, after the Government had diverted it to another railway which would perform the service the Government wanted performed and which this company could not perform, claims in equity that they should be sent to the Court of Claims to try and recover, if they can, for the mail they did not carry?

Mr. LOUD. That is correct.

Mr. COX. And for mail that another railroad carried.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and for transporting mail that another railroad carried. If they ever had any rights, they have slept on them six years, and almost four times six years.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; and their first claim was for one month's pay; then they had six years to go to the Court of Claims under the statute of limitations, but they allowed the statute of limitations to elapse and never presented the claim to Congress until 1887. Why, that company had good enough attorneys to know that if they had any claim, they could recover it in the Court of Claims.

Mr. CANNON. This bill proposes to send them to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; after all the parties that handled the case and knew the facts are dead.

Mr. CANNON. And if we do not pass this bill, they are in the box?

Mr. LOUD. We shall probably lay the bill on the table; but if the gentleman continues in Congress for years, he will find it popping up again and being reported to the House. Without any disrespect to the Committee on Claims, I want to say that this bill is utterly without merit.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and if it should dance its way along Congress after Congress, in about forty or fifty years it will become a shining example of the injustice of our Government in denying claimants their just rights. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. As illustrated by my friend from Massachusetts, yes; and probably from $344,000 it will grow to be more than a million.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. You have made reference to a contract which was partially executed. I want to ask if the railroad company is setting up that contract as a basis for their claim?

Mr. LOUD. It is the only basis they have to go to the Court of Claims upon.

Mr. RIDGELY. They claim that the contract actually exists?

Mr. LOUD. Yes; they held the contract for the apparent purpose, knowing that the mail had been delivered originally to their line and it must necessarily increase in weight to a large amount, and knowing that under the contract they would not be entitled to extra compensation, they held it back hoping to hide it.

Mr. RIDGELY. The Department permits the weighing from time to time and compensation for increased weight.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; of course. Now, the Government does not owe this company a dollar. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STEELE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with Senate Report 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba, 6,500 for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to substitute for the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] a motion that this bill be laid aside for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be postponed for two weeks?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir; and on that motion I wish to say just one word.

When this bill was up last Tuesday week, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] requested that it be laid aside; and upon their request it was laid aside. I then went to both those gentlemen and told them that if there were any reasons why the bill should not pass, I wished they would let me know, promising on my part that I would examine the matter further, and saying that I had no disposition, and I knew the committee had no disposition, to force the passage of the bill unless it were a proper measure.

The gentleman from California agreed that he would let me have the testimony in his possession. I knew nothing about this testimony until he brought it on the floor to-day. Under these circumstances, we were not prepared to discuss this question; and I say, when we ask a postponement of the bill, it is not fair that gentlemen should ask us to vote upon it finally, when by reason of their action we are not prepared to discuss it. If they do not want the bill to pass, they ought not to object to having it lie over. We are not asking for its passage; we are simply asking that it be laid over in order that we may have an opportunity to investigate the case further, they having put us in a position where we have a right to ask delay for this purpose.

The gentleman from California says that he is going away. Well, he has made his speech; he has introduced his testimony.

Mr. LOUD. I intended to go away this afternoon.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, if the gentleman is not going to leave the city, he can be here when the case comes up again, and he can engage further in the discussion. There is no disposition to prevent discussion. His speech will appear in the RECORD. Those who desire information upon the case will have the benefit of reading that speech. I say in all fairness that this bill ought to lie over so that we may have an opportunity to investigate further and see whether the bill ought finally to pass or ought finally to be defeated.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think there ought to be any misunderstanding between the gentleman and myself. And I do not want the implication to arise that I have any disposition to be unfair in this matter. The gentleman did say to me that if I could submit any reasons or evidence why the bill should not pass, he would be glad if I would let him know. I have obtained no information, Mr. Chairman, except such as was generally in my head at the last session when this matter was up and such information as is of a public character. This is the first time I have ever heard a committee come on the floor and plead for further time to gain new evidence in a case that they have presented to the House and asked the House to pass and after the bill has been on the Calendar for some five or six months. This is certainly an unusual proceeding. It seems to me the committee itself should be in possession of such evidence as would sustain their report.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish only to say, Mr. Chairman, that the reason no further action was taken, so far as the committee was concerned, was because we relied on what the gentleman from California said—that he would first introduce certain testimony or give us certain facts. So we were content to let the matter lie over. With all the bills that we have on the Calendar, it is utterly impossible for the chairman or any member of the committee to be prepared at a moment's notice to discuss every measure that the committee may have reported. I am prepared to discuss measures which I thought would be brought up. We have our briefs prepared. The course of the gentleman from California is the cause of our committee being misled. I do not mean to charge the gentleman with wittingly being unfair, but I submit it is unfair to ask a vote on this bill now when we ask for a postponement.

Mr. LOUD. Has the gentleman any briefs here to-day?

Mr. BRUMM. We have the briefs and we have the testimony, but we are not prepared to go on with the discussion.

Mr. LOUD. Why not?

Mr. BRUMM. We had no idea that the case would come up to-day. A lawyer may have prepared his brief with a view to a case coming up in court, but he may not be able to refresh his memory instantly. In that way we are not prepared on this bill.

Mr. COONEY. I wish to inquire whether the information which the chairman of the committee asked of the gentleman from California was information to be submitted to the committee before this bill was reported, or information asked for since the bill was reported and placed on the Calendar?

Mr. LOUD. This bill has been on the Calendar since last December; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] made this request last Tuesday.

Mr. COONEY. Then this information was not asked for the purpose of laying it before the committee?

Mr. BRUMM. My understanding was that I was to have the information and lay it before the committee; but as I received nothing, I, of course, let the matter pass. That is the whole situation. Certainly it is no more than fair that there should be an opportunity for the committee to consider any new matter of this kind.

Mr. HANDY. Has not the committee already considered it?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, yes; we have considered it. The committee reported it to the House, but at the suggestion of the existence of other testimony, we desired to withhold it from consideration for further examination. But we have examined it.

Mr. HANDY. Then, why not proceed?

Mr. BRUMM. For the reason that we are not ready now, because of the facts I have stated. After having made the request for its continuance, I do not think these gentlemen ought to take snap judgment on the committee.

Mr. HANDY. But it has already been postponed for two weeks.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; at their request.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; at your suggestion.

Mr. BRUMM. You asked unanimous consent for the postponement, and I objected, and you said you wanted to investigate the matter with a view to introducing other testimony, and I consented to that.

Mr. CANNON. I want to suggest, if I can have the attention of both the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment, that I have a distinct recollection or understanding—I will not state it absolutely for a fact, but that is my impression—that this bill is one of the omnibus bills amounting in the aggregate to say ten millions of dollars, that may be pending elsewhere, and as this bill was bald in its impropriety, and as the gentleman will not have the floor again possibly this session, I would have been glad if it could have received its final black eye before any omnibus bill that may come, from heaven or elsewhere, is presented on this floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, I know the gentleman from Illinois assumes that he is the whole House. But we will probably have the floor again, for it is for the House to determine whether we will get it or not.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not think I am the "entire House," but I think sometimes I ought to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand the gentleman to say that the committee was ready, a few days ago when this bill was up, to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly we were.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand further that these gentlemen who request the postponement have not brought in any new evidence.

Mr. BRUMM. Not at all.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then if you were ready two weeks ago, and no further evidence has been submitted, why are you not ready now?

Mr. BRUMM. They have brought in other matters, and we wanted time to investigate them.

Mr. RIDGLEY. But what possible effect, unless the evidence is presented, could that have upon the bill?

Mr. BRUMM. We wanted an opportunity to investigate the matter fully. I do not know of any such testimony, but I am informed that it exists. I may be mistaken about that. But I understand that one suggestion made by the gentleman from California is not correct. That is, that this bill is not the same as the other presented a few days ago.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; I did not say anything of the kind. The letter, I say, bears date of February 3, 1894. That is not a very recent occurrence——

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, although I am a member of the Committee on Claims, I know very little of this bill. I was one of the new members of the committee, and the bill reported was presented early in the session. But it does seem to me that the request of the chairman of the committee is only a reasonable and proper one.

This bill, like many others reported upon by that committee, is reported upon the old reports which have been made by former committees of Congress; and it is impossible for a member of the committee to carry in his mind all of the facts connected with every bill coming from the committee.

When the matter was up for consideration two weeks ago we were ready to proceed and try the case on the report of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. RIXEY. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. Was there not a unanimous request on the part of the committee to withdraw the bill?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, I have explained that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LOUD. I think it was ascertained by the committee that the bill would be beaten there and then, and I was severely criticised, permit me to say, for allowing the bill to be laid aside as requested. There were a number of gentlemen at the time sitting all around me who desired to defeat the proposition. Now, I know these gentlemen are in existence, and permit me to say further, in all fairness to the committee, that in my judgment it would have been better for them to have corresponded with the Post-Office Department and got the facts since the postponement of the bill was made.

Mr. BRUMM. We did get them.

Mr. LOUD. Then why not submit them with the report.

Mr. BRUMM. We do submit them with the report.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; you have a statement here, and submit a letter which seems to have been written in 1888.

Mr. RIXEY. I should like to know what the question is which the gentleman wished to ask me. I understood he wished to ask me some question.

Mr. LOUD. I wanted to make that suggestion to you.

Mr. RIXEY. My statement, Mr. Chairman, is that it seems to be a reasonable request that this matter be laid over, in order that the chairman of the committee who reported the bill shall have an opportunity to look into the new evidence—these new facts which the gentleman from California now brings before the House.

Mr. LOUD. Why, they are not new.

Mr. RIXEY. They are new so far as the committee are concerned.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to make a suggestion to the gentleman in relation to the position which we, the attorneys of the Government—I refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself particularly——

Mr. SULLIVAN. Attorneys!

Mr. LOUD. Yes; what opportunity we have to fight these cases that come on the floor. We have to do it simply on the reading of the report as the case confronts us here. That is all the information we have.

Mr. BRUMM. You have access at all times to the committee.

Mr. LOUD. I can not watch all the cases.

Mr. RIXEY. I will say to the gentleman in reply that if he is the attorney for the Government, he ought to have appeared before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOUD. If I had been notified I should have done so.

Mr. BRUMM. If you had notified us that you were the attorney of the Government, we would have notified you.

Mr. LOUD. You ought to know that.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, perhaps we ought. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIXEY. The Committee on Claims passed upon this claim as it was presented to the committee. Since that time these attorneys, who say they represent the Government, have come here with additional evidence and have introduced it. Now, I insist that by all the rules of court the other side should have an opportunity to meet the evidence which they present here to-day.

Mr. BRUMM. Which they have presented without notice.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know anybody connected with the Erie Railroad Company, but they come here and say that they had a contract with this Government and that all they ask is that they be permitted to submit their case to a court of the United States and have a construction of that contract, and have the court say whether they have been damaged or not. For myself, I am willing to allow anybody who is willing to pay the expenses of going into court the privilege of taking his case there and having a decision upon the merits. I should like to see other cases go there; but certainly when a claimant comes and only asks the privilege of being sent to the Court of Claims to ascertain whether he has a claim or not, it seems to me the privilege ought to be granted. But as I understand it, sir, the request of the chairman of the committee is that he be given time to consider the evidence introduced by the gentleman upon the other side, and perhaps to present additional evidence.

Mr. BARTLETT. How old is this claim?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it barred by the statute of limitations?

Mr. RIXEY. I have not examined into that. I suppose that is waived.

Mr. GAINES. Is there any agreement about taking testimony?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. McEWAN. Will the gentleman on the committee yield for a moment in order that I may make a motion to recommit?

Mr. RIDGELY. You say the railroad company came before the committee claiming that they had a contract?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. Did they ever present to the committee a copy of the contract?

Mr. McEWAN. Will my colleague yield to me for the purpose of making a motion to recommit?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] does not object to that.

Mr. LOUD. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that if the gentleman asked unanimous consent to recommit this bill I should not object. That is as far as I have gone. The matter is in the possession of the House.

Mr. McEWAN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. McEWAN. I make a motion to that effect, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COONEY] has the floor.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me as if the committee had investigated this claim simply upon one side. They have taken the side of the claimant in this matter, and the testimony of the claimant solely, and have searched no further. Now, that might be the proper course for the committee to take in an ordinary case sent to the Court of Claims; but this is not an ordinary case, because the statute of limitations comes between the claimant and the adjudication of this claim before the Court of Claims.

The statute of limitations lies in the way. It seems to me that the committee, in undertaking to set aside the statute of limitations in order to allow a claim to be examined by this court, ought not to take simply the one-sided statement of the claimant alone, but should investigate both sides to find out if there is equity and justice in the claim.

They have failed to do that. The gentleman from California presents his evidence here, and it is an ample argument against submitting it to the Court of Claims. It is no new evidence. It is evidence that ought to have been incorporated in the report of the committee. It is presumed that the report covers the same subjects that are covered by this new evidence complained of by gentlemen of the committee. I am therefore going to vote for the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRUMM. I simply want to say my friend is in error in two things that I can not permit to go uncorrected. He says the committee appears for the claimant. They do not appear for the claimant; on the contrary, we sit as a court, and having rendered our judgment, we are here sustaining our judgment. Besides that, I want to say that we have not only taken the testimony of the claimant, but we have many other matters—letters from two succeeding Postmasters-General recommending that this be sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOUD. Where are they?

Mr. BRUMM. I have them here.

Mr. RIDGELY. In deference to the recommendation of the committee, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. COONEY. I renew it.

Mr. McEWAN. I move that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in some doubt as to whether that motion is in order, pending the motion made by the gentleman from California. The gentleman from California moves that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table. Now, that motion would take precedence of the motion made by the gentleman from New Jersey and the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to postpone for a couple of weeks. The Chair thinks that the vote, in any event, would be first on the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman made no motion.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman must not misstate my position. I said I would not object to its being done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARDY. Is it not parliamentary, would it not be in order, for the gentleman who has taken his seat to make the motion as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from California to refer this back to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that that is germane.

Mr. CLARDY. Can not he make a motion as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it germane to the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. EVANS. What was the motion made by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offered a motion that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOUD. You might make a motion to allow your bill to go to the House in its present shape, the previous question not being ordered, and we could take it up there.

Mr. EVANS. We can vote down one motion and vote up the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the bill be reported back to the House——

Mr. BRUMM. A point of order. If the Chair rules that the substitute offered by my colleague on the committee is not in order, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from California is not in order, because the original motion that I made was that the bill be reported with a favorable recommendation, and that motion is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from California made his motion, and subsequently the gentleman from Pennsylvania moved that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be postponed for two weeks. That was the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUMM. No, Mr. Chairman; the motion that was made at the last meeting would be the pending motion, as shown by the RECORD. That is the pending motion, and at that time it was laid over by unanimous consent. That motion, however, is still pending. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Even then a motion to lay on the table would have precedence. If the bill was in the House and the question was on the passage of the bill, a motion to lay on the table would be in order.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, would it not be a good idea to do something with this bill? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee and the Chair are doing their best to do something. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. BRUMM. Another parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from California is the pending motion, would not my motion be in order, to wit, that this matter lie over for two weeks?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks a motion to lay on the table takes precedence. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRUMM. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 16.

So the bill was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

SAMUEL M'KEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Samuel McKee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718, for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the Clerk to read the report in my time. It is very short, and I would like gentlemen to hear it, as it states the facts in the case.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1288) to pay to Hon. Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718 for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress, from the Ninth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Your committee find that said McKee's right to a seat in the Fortieth Congress was contested by Hon. J. D. Young; that issues were joined, evidence was taken, and a hearing was had before the Elections Committee of the House, and that the seat was awarded to said McKee.

The committee further find, from the proofs in the case, that the said McKee in his said contest incurred, necessarily, expenses amounting to the sum of $1,718, as appears from the itemized account of the said McKee duly verified.

It further appears that no part of said sum has ever been paid.

The committee also find that Hon. John D. Young has been paid the sum of $2,509 for his expenses incurred in said contest.

This claim was before the Committee on Elections of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress and was favorably acted upon by said committee, but no action was had by the House.

Your committee would therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. EVANS. The report might have gone very much further and said that the bill was before almost every Congress since the Fortieth Congress, and the committee of every one of them had reported in favor of the passage of this bill; but when it got upon the Calendar it slept until adjournment.

A MEMBER. Was this a contestant or a contestee?

Mr. EVANS. A contestant. He was seated, but he did not get his expenses. The contestee lost and did get his. Now, there is no doubt about the propriety of paying this claim.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Why has not the claim been paid before?

Mr. EVANS. I have just stated, if the gentleman from Indiana had listened.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. There was so much confusion that I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. EVANS. This claim has been presented to almost every Congress since the Fortieth Congress, and it has been reported favorably time and again, and when it got on the Calendar of the House it slept there.

Mr. TALBERT. Was it reported during the Fortieth Congress?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know. It was reported in the Fifty-fourth Congress by my friend from Tennessee, Mr. COX.

Mr. OTEY. Has the contestant been paid anything at all?

Mr. EVANS. Never a dollar.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky why did not the Fortieth Congress pay the expenses of the contestant?

Mr. EVANS. The Fortieth Congress was guilty of some delinquency; I do not know the reason.

Mr. CANNON. Why were not the contestant's expenses paid when the expenses of the contestee were paid?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know, but I do know that $2,509 was paid to the contestee. The committee reports explicitly that nothing has ever been paid the contestant.

Mr. OTEY. Did he file any claim in the Fortieth Congress?

Mr. CANNON. He was seated in the Fortieth Congress; that is to say, in the Fortieth Congress McKee contested the seat of Young and was seated. Young received his election expenses in the Fortieth Congress, but they did not pay McKee his expenses of contesting the seat. I do not know why. Ordinarily, Congress pays the expenses of the contestant. Now, in the Fortieth Congress—that was before the present statute was passed—there was no limitation on the amount. Under the law adopted in 1878 no contestant can get over $2,000, or contestee either; but there was no limitation in the Fortieth Congress.

I know nothing about the matter, but it is exceedingly strange that a successful contestant seated in the Fortieth Congress did not get his expenses.

Mr. EVANS. It is strange. I do not know enough about the matter to state why he did not get them then; but I know that committee after committee have investigated the facts of this case and have said that these expenses were incurred and not a dollar of them have been paid.

Mr. DOCKERY. When was the first claim presented?

Mr. EVANS. The Forty-eighth Congress. I think, perhaps, it was presented before, but I can not tell you certain.

Mr. COLSON. The claim was presented before that. I think it was presented in 1881.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. How long has this custom been in vogue of paying the expenses upon both sides?

Mr. EVANS. It was always the custom, but now it is limited to $2,000 on each side.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. EVANS. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, because he has investigated this case personally.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, it has been some time since I went through this claim, but I think members will find upon examination that this is the state of facts: The contest arose, and this party was not paid his expenses in contesting his claim for a seat. He presented his claim—I would not say promptly—but I think that grew out of a misapprehension of what the law was in regard to the matter. Now, from the time he presented it up to this time it has been pressed forward with all the energy that you can press one of these claims.

In the examination I gave it when I reported the claim I remember distinctly what was the conclusion of my mind—that the fault was a most serious one, an error or oversight in the pressing of the claim, and I could not find any reason why the other party should be paid and this man not be paid. I do not think anybody else can find any reason. There may have been a little negligence about the matter, and it does throw suspicion to a certain extent on these matters and ought to be considered properly, but I had no doubt about the justice of this claim at that time, and I have none now.

Mr. LOUD. What investigation was made toward ascertaining whether this man had been paid his expenses or not?

Mr. COX. There is no evidence on earth that a dollar of it was ever paid to him.

Mr. LOUD. Was there any evidence before our committee—we both went over this matter several years ago——

Mr. COX. Certainly we did; and after several years I want to be cautious about stating matters of memory; but there is no contention that this contestant ever got his money. Before I passed upon this claim I required it to be itemized, and it was itemized and kept within the limits of $2,000, although the statute does not apply to this claim. I was rather inclined at the time to be against it, but I was not able to find a single substantial reason why the claim should not be paid.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. It has been stated here that the custom has always been to pay the claims of both parties in contested-election cases.

Mr. COX. There is no question about that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman tell us whether there are any claims of this character except this one that have not yet been paid?

Mr. COX. I think there are quite a number, although I am obliged to speak from memory.

Mr. RIDGELY. I mean claims of ancient date—old cases like this one—not recent cases?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes; I think there are quite a number.

Mr. LOUD. In a former Congress, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and I were members of this committee, there were four or five claims of this kind pending before us. I do not remember whether any of those have since been paid.

Mr. COX. And I do not remember, either. But I may be permitted to say that as a member of the committee I would not report any claims of any character until I was satisfied about their correctness. I did not take previous reports as my guide. Of course I considered them as far as they went, but still I made an independent examination. In this case I was unable to find any single reason why the other party should have been paid and Mr. McKee not paid; and I do not believe any member of the committee can assign a solitary reason why one claim should not be paid as well as the other.

Mr. CLARDY. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY] allow me to say that a few days ago the House passed by unanimous consent a bill to pay the estate of Mr. McKenzie for expenses incurred in a contested election just about the close of the war.

Mr. EVANS. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] for his statement of this matter, because he is more familiar with the facts than I am. Mr. McKee, the claimant in this case, is a lawyer living in my city. I know him well; and I do not believe he would urge this claim if there had been any payment of these expenses. I think this committee and the House will agree that there has been no payment, because I think none of the many committees that have found in favor of the claim would have been so careless as not to have made due investigation on that point.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has any examination been made at the Treasury Department?

Mr. EVANS. I think so; but I can not speak definitely.

Mr. DOCKERY. The files of the Treasury Department would disclose whether or not this claim had been paid.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; it can not have been paid.

Mr. LOUD. In justice to this claim, which was considered by the Committee on Claims when the gentleman from Tennessee and I were members of that committee, I wish to say that we never considered a case without sending to the Department to obtain the latest information regarding the matter, notwithstanding the fact that inquiry had been made at the Treasury Department before.

Mr. COX. That is true. Therefore I undertake to say, in response to the question which has been asked here, that my friend from California and myself would not have fallen into such a "hole" as to have reported in favor of a claim which had already been paid. I do not think we would have made that kind of a mistake.

Mr. CARMACK. When this claim was before the Committee on Claims, it was discussed pretty thoroughly, and I think it was shown very clearly that none of these expenses had ever been paid. There was only one objection in the mind of the committee to paying this claim, and that was a rather serious one with a good many of us, a conviction on our part that this practice of prosecuting election contests should be discouraged as much as possible. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I am with the gentleman on that.

Mr. CARMACK. Yet in spite of that fact we made a unanimous report in favor of the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William H. Crook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent, the amount being the same as was formerly paid for such service.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that I recognize this claim. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. An old and familiar friend.

Mr. DOCKERY. Quite an old and very familiar friend; and I think, unless the committee that reported the bill will consent to recommit it, we had better have some discussion upon it.

Mr. DALZELL. Would it not be a good idea that the committee now rise?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] may not be here when the bill comes up again.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think this claim ought not to pass. The beneficiary is a most excellent gentleman and a very accomplished officer; but if the claim has any element of merit at all, I have never been able to discover it.

Mr. MINOR. With the understanding that this bill will go over, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had directed him to report back, with a recommendation that it lie on the table, the bill (H. R. 706) for the relief of the Erie Railroad Company; also to report back favorably the bill (S. 1133) to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas and the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Samuel McKee; also that it had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William H. Crook, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE ERIE RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 706) for the relief of the Erie Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported with the recommendation that it do lie on the table. The question is on the adoption of the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move that this bill be recommitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lie on the table, however, comes first.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If that motion prevails to lie on the table, would a motion to recommit be in order?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the motion is defeated.

The question was taken; and the recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BRUMM. If in order now, Mr. Speaker, I would move to recommit that bill to the committee.

The SPEAKER. But the bill has been laid upon the table. The Chair explained that unless the motion was defeated the motion to recommit would not be in order; but the motion was successful, to lie on the table, and therefore the motion to recommit the bill would not be in order and could not be entertained.

Mr. BRUMM. I misunderstood the Chair.

RICHMOND LOCOMOTIVE AND MACHINE WORKS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 1133) to pay to the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, I move the bill pass, and upon that motion call for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad, as there is no quorum present, to let this bill go over until next Friday. A gentleman in whose judgment I have very great confidence informs me that he has been reading the report, and that he is satisfied, from the contract, that this claim ought not to be paid. He does not think there is a just claim presented; and while I did not anticipate, myself, taking up further the time of the House to-day upon this question, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that he let it go over until next Friday—private-bill day—and then he can make his demand for the previous question.

Mr. YOST. But the gentleman from Illinois himself proposed some two weeks ago to let the bill go over, and said he would look into the report carefully.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I did in a sort of "hop-skip-and-jump way;" but the gentleman knows that there is so much of our time taken up here with other matters that it is impossible to give special consideration to cases of this kind.

Mr. YOST. In view of the lateness of the hour and the small number of members present, I will withdraw the motion for the previous question, and consent that the bill may go over until the next private-bill day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman consents that the bill may go over.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

SAMUEL M'KEE.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Samuel McKee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7536. An act granting a pension to Jane A. Wilkinson;
H. R. 90. An act granting a pension to Eunice Taylor;
H. R. 92. An act granting a pension to Auguste Whitmer;
H. R. 2015. An act granting a pension to Elisabeth Lane;
H. R. 1322. An act granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland;
H. R. 4548. An act granting a pension to Mathew B. Nale;
H. R. 7943. An act to make Knoxville, Tenn., a port of delivery and to create the office of surveyor of customs;

H. R. 2426. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen Larned;
H. R. 1246. An act for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co.;
H. R. 4206. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob G. Frick;
H. R. 368. An act for the relief of Charlotte A. Walker;
H. R. 4247. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Landram;
H. R. 4300. An act to increase the pension of John C. Wagoner;
H. R. 239. An act granting a pension to Rosa Karger;
H. R. 298. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles McAllister;
H. R. 2074. An act granting a pension to Jane H. Sandborn;
H. R. 4314. An act to increase the pension of Moritz Tshoepe; and
H. R. 777. An act to increase the pension of David N. Thompson.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STRAIT indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 148. Joint resolution for the printing of House document No. 396, relating to the beet-sugar industry in the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the House now take the usual Friday evening recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the recess, the Chair will designate the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LACEY, to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the evening session.

And then (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. LACEY as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule under which this session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, under subdivision 2 of Rule XXVI, with Mr. MOODY in the chair.

WILLIAM HENRY JOHNSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2668) for the relief of William Henry Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Henry Johnson, of Ceresco, Saunders County, Nebr., who served under the name of Henry Johnson, of Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry (Fifty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry), transferred to Company H, First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge to date April 30, 1865.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Add at the end of the bill the words:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2668) for the relief of William Henry Johnson, having had the same under consideration, recommend that the same do pass, with the following amendment: After the word "sixty-five," in line 11, add the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

It is shown by the records of the War Department that Henry Johnson was enrolled and mustered into service October 29, 1861, at Philadelphia, Pa., as a private in Company A, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, to serve three years, and reenlisted as a veteran volunteer February 6, 1864.

He appears to have served faithfully until April 30, 1865, when he deserted, never returning to his command. The Second Pennsylvania Cavalry was consolidated with the Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry June 17, 1865, to form the First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry, and the name of the soldier appears on the muster-out roll of Company H of the latter regiment with the remark: "Deserted April 30, 1865;" but his transfer to Company H, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, was not consummated, he never having joined that company, and it has therefore been canceled. He is regarded by the War Department as a deserter from Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, from April 30, 1865.

Applying for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge, William Henry Johnson, a resident of Ceresco, Saunders County, Nebr., stated in an affidavit dated February 6, 1893, that he served faithfully in Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, until April 30, 1865, when he shipped on the monitor Montauk with the understanding that he had been transferred from the Army to the Navy, and that he served faithfully on that vessel eighteen months, until discharged at Hog Island Navy-Yard, near San Francisco, Cal. In another affidavit, dated June 21, 1893, the applicant stated that he joined the Navy as a midshipman and that he was discharged from the monitor Montauk in June, 1866.

It was ascertained by the Record and Pension Office, War Department, upon inquiry at the Navy Department, that no man named William H. (or Henry) Johnson served on the monitor Montauk, and that that vessel went out of commission July 7, 1865, at Washington, D. C. The application for relief was denied by the War Department October 24, 1893, holding that the case was not embraced within the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, the soldier having deserted prior to May 1, 1865, and not having been prevented from completing his term of enlistment by physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

Your committee submit that under the act of March 2, 1889, if the soldier had not deserted until May 1, 1865, and after prior service of six months or more, and by reason of absence from his command at the time the same was mustered out he failed to be mustered out and to receive an honorable discharge, upon proof of such facts the charge of desertion would, under such act, be removed from his record. Waiving the benefits of the service in the Navy, as claimed by the soldier, and although the War Department may, under its strict construction, have determined that unless the soldier was borne on the company's rolls as present or properly accounted for as of May 1, 1865, his application for removal of charge of desertion should be denied, yet your committee believe that a soldier serving until the 30th day of April, 1865, under a fair construction of the act of March 2, 1889, comes within its purview, and that therefore the relief applied for in this case should be granted.

It appears further, from affidavits of those acquainted with him prior to and since his enlistment in 1861, that he was rather weak-minded and vacillating, and was wanting in that steady purpose of mind which would justify holding him strictly accountable for every act or deviation from correct conduct. Others testify that he is still afflicted with a form of dementia, and consequently hardly able to take care of himself; that he lives in what is called a dugout, and is about 65 years of age; that he is being helped by charity, and for the past three years has been assisted from the county funds.

Your committee has no doubt, from the proofs submitted in this case, that William Henry Johnson is the same Henry Johnson who served in Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that as the result of talks which I have had with a number of members here who have some meritorious cases on the Calendar, I have stated to them that I would not ask unanimous consent to pass over these bills to-night for the removal of charges of desertion. They have assured me that the cases are meritorious and that the charges ought to be removed. If they have the usual amendment providing that no pay or emoluments shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act, I shall not oppose them. At least I shall not oppose this bill, but I ask to have read an editorial which appears in the Washington Post, which reflects my sentiments in regard to the removal of charges of desertion. I make no opposition to the passage of this bill, which seems to be a meritorious one. I have been assured by my friend here [Mr. STARK] that this is a meritorious one.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATION FOR DESERTERS.

Is not it about time for Congress to put a final period to legislation for the benefit of deserters? The introduction of bills for the removal of the charge of desertion from men who enlisted in the armies of the Union in our great war, and who failed to put in an appearance when their commands were mustered out, has been going on for a third of a century. It is the general opinion of honorably discharged soldiers that this thing has gone far enough. They assert, and they know something about the matter, that most of these deserters are men who enlisted for bounties and got out at the first opportunity.

Of course there were mistakes on the muster rolls that needed correction by act of Congress. Men who did not actually desert were made to appear as having deserted. It was entirely right to introduce and pass such bills in those cases. But it is a fair assumption that all records which needed correction were attended to long ago. Everybody who knows anything about the conduct of the war knows that bounty jumping came to be a great industry soon after local bounties began to be offered. Thousands upon thousands of men went into that infamous business.

The lenient policy of the Government spared their villainous lives, but there is no reason why the charge of desertion should be removed. The Omaha Bee, speaking of these cases, says: "There is no excuse for Congress to legislate them into the roll of honor as patriotic and loyal soldiers entitled to pensions. To continue to do so is simply putting a premium on desertion and pulling the brave and loyal soldier down to the level of the bounty jumper and cowardly deserter."

That is the truth. There is no shorter or surer way to insult and degrade "the brave and loyal soldier," than to go on passing these bills till the last of the bounty jumpers is whitewashed.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, I will ask the gentleman to make a statement as to whether he knows if this man was a bounty jumper or not? If he was not, I will make no further remarks upon the bill.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, the record discloses that Mr. Johnson enlisted October 29, 1861. He served three years faithfully, reenlisted as a veteran volunteer, and on April 30, 1865, he went away from his command.

It seems that they created a provisional cavalry corps in Pennsylvania as a home guard. This man is not altogether right in his head. He regarded that as being against his courage as a soldier, and so he went and served in the Navy. The act of 1889 would have let him in if he had stayed one day longer. I ask for this man the rule of favor that is always extended to those who have infirmities of mind. He never jumped any bounty or anything of the sort. The bill is amended so as to provide that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act. Everything is correct.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL D. HUBBARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 774) for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of the War Department in the case of Samuel D. Hubbard, late captain of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, so as to grant him an honorable discharge.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Insert at the end of the bill: "Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE and Mr. SULLIVAN asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if the gentleman who introduced this bill is present?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will say that I introduced this bill, and I am present.

Mr. TALBERT. I thought that if there was no one present to advocate the bill, it would be better to pass it over. If members are not willing to come here to advocate their claims, I do not think they ought to be passed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. If all the gentleman desired to know was whether I was present or not, I will say that I am present.

Mr. TALBERT. And it is your bill?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that any gentleman desires to hear the report read?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Let us hear the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk began the reading of the report (by Mr. MCDONALD), and read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 774) entitled "A bill for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard," submit the following report thereon:

It appears from the records of the War Department that Samuel D. Hubbard was mustered into service as captain of Company F, Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, October 25, 1862, to serve three years, and was dismissed the service by sentence of general court-martial promulgated in general court-martial orders April 21, 1864.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the consideration of this bill that it does not come under the rule.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. It does not yet appear what the charge was.

Mr. BISHOP. This is a court-martial case.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It comes under the rule if it removes a charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP] that, while the bill itself does not disclose whether its purpose is to remove a charge of desertion or not, the report apparently discloses that it is to correct the record of a court-martial, removing a charge which resulted in dismissal from the service, and to grant an honorable discharge. Has the gentleman from Michigan any suggestion to make?

Mr. BISHOP. If it is simply for the purpose of correcting a military record, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Let us understand the charge on which he was court-martialed. If it was a charge of desertion the bill is in order. If it is something else it would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the second page of the report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARGE I.—Disobedience of orders.

Specification.—That Captain Hubbard, having been regularly detailed to take charge of a body of recruits going to the field, did fail to take charge of them as ordered, on or about the 11th day of March, 1864.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that is sufficient to show that it is not a charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a second charge.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Exactly; but it would hardly be competent to consider a bill which did not relate exclusively to a charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. This charge of gross neglect of duty does not alter the aspect of the case; and unless some gentleman desires to be heard against the point of order, the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, if the point of order is insisted on the bill can not be considered under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over.

JACOB SHELA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4651) for the relief of Jacob Shela, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend and correct the military record of Jacob Shela, of Portsmouth, Scioto County, Ohio, late a private soldier in Company B, Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as to remove the charges of desertion, and to show that said Shela was captured by the enemy on June 25, 1862, and paroled on June 28, 1862, and permitted by Major-General Grant, commanding the district, to pass from Memphis, Tenn., to his home in Ohio, to remain until notified of his exchange or otherwise ordered; and duly exchanged by General Orders, No. 10, War Department, January 10, 1863, and ordered to return to his command; and absent without leave until March 5, 1863, when he enlisted in the Navy of the United States for two years, served faithfully, and was honorably discharged at the expiration of his service: Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due by reason of this act.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I call for the reading of the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. FENTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4651) for the relief of Jacob Shela, of Portsmouth, Ohio, having examined the same, report the bill back to the House, and recommend its passage.

This soldier was enlisted for three years from November 13, 1861, and served faithfully until June 26, 1862, when he was captured by the enemy while escorting a railroad train. He was paroled June 28, 1862; reported at Camp Chase, Ohio, August 6, 1862, and is reported to have deserted on or before October 10, 1862. He was declared exchanged January 10, 1863, in orders from the War Department.

The records of the Navy Department show, however, that he enlisted in the United States Navy March 5, 1863, and served until March 3, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. His absence from a command was for four months and twenty-three days, but for three months of this period he was still a paroled prisoner.

It is evident that this soldier did not intend to desert the service of his country, since he would have been entitled to a discharge November 13, 1864, but he served until March 11, 1865; almost four months longer than his original enlistment would have required.

The records show that he received no bonus or bounty on account of enlistment in the Navy.

The following is the report received from the War Department:

It is shown by the records that Jacob Shela was enrolled October 1, and mustered into service November 13, 1861, as a private in Company B, Fifty-sixth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. He appears to have been present with his company until June 28, 1862, when he was captured by the enemy. He was paroled the same day and sent to a parole camp in Ohio, from which he deserted on or before October 12, 1862. He does not appear to have returned to the military service subsequent to that date, although he was notified of his exchange and ordered to rejoin his regiment, and although he owed service until November 13, 1864. He is reported as having entered the United States Navy, date not of record.

The application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge has been denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that, accepting his own statement that he enlisted in the United States Navy March 5, 1863, the period of his absence in desertion from the Fifty-sixth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, prior to his enlistment in the Navy, exceeded four months, and because the case does not come within any of the other provisions of the act approved March 2, 1889, which is the only law now in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, February 23, 1898.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1898.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 3d instant to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, requesting a record of service of Jacob Shela, I have the honor to state that one Jacob Shela enlisted in the Navy at Cincinnati, Ohio, March 5, 1863, as seaman for two years, served on board of the Grampus, Little Rebel, and Black Hawk, and was discharged March 3, 1865.

Respectfully,

A. S. CROWNINSHIELD,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. L. J. FENTON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the member in charge of the bill is present.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from South Carolina that this bill was introduced by Mr. FENTON of Ohio. He has been called home on urgent and important business, and asked me to look after it. It is an exceedingly meritorious case, and I think ought to be passed.

Mr. TALBERT. I would just like to state that upon the reading of the report it appears that he really was a deserter, although he claims himself that he joined the Navy after he deserted. There is no other evidence but the report.

Mr. GIBSON. The naval record shows that he was discharged.

Mr. BROWNLOW. The records of the Department show that he was discharged from the Navy.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB M. HAMBURGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1607) to remove the charge of desertion against Jacob M. Hamburger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove charge of desertion standing against the name of Jacob M. Hamburger, late musician in Company G, First Battalion, Twelfth United States Infantry, and issue him an honorable discharge.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out of line 5 the initial "M" and insert "N;" also add after the word "discharge," in line 7, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH GRAHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3056) to correct the military record of Joseph Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the military record of Joseph Graham, late a private in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3056) for the relief of Joseph Graham, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report as follows:

The records of the War Department show that Joseph Graham enlisted as a private and was mustered into Company B, Seventeenth United States Infantry, on the 8th day of February, 1864, to serve three years. The records further show that he gave his age as 20½ years, while the testimony in the case shows him to have been but 16 years of age at the time of enlistment. There is also strong reason for believing that the boy was deceived by the recruiting officer as to the character of the service in which he was enlisting; that he was led to believe he was enlisting in the volunteer service for three years, or during the war, whereas he was enlisted to serve three years in the Regular Army and was assigned to Company B, Seventeenth United States Infantry.

He is credited with faithful service until August 2, 1866, when he is charged with desertion.

The facts as gathered from the testimony appear to be that the claimant was seriously injured by the explosion of a mine in front of Petersburg, called the battle of the crater, or by too close proximity to shot or shell, or was overcome by heat. The diagnosis given in the hospital was "sunstroke." He was moved from one hospital to another until the spring of 1865, when he was sent to Harts Island, New York Harbor, at which place the regiment was recruiting. From there he was detailed to Capt. J. J. Emerson, at Springfield, Mass., at a recruiting station. Before the regiment was filled the war was over and he was sent back to Harts Island. From there his company was sent to Texas, and he endeavored to go with the company, but, being a sergeant in one of the new companies, he was detained at Harts Island.

In July, 1866, a disease resembling cholera broke out on the island, causing a great many deaths, and the officers and surgeons soon became either sick or tired out and the men were left to themselves. Graham had several attacks of the disease, and became so sick that food would not remain on his stomach, and he was kept alive by the use of brandy. While in that condition he asked Lieutenant Lancaster for a pass and received it, the lieutenant evidently believing that if he remained at the island he would soon be beyond the reach of a pass. He took the pass, went to New York City, and then began to think of returning home. He secured and drank some brandy, and then got on a train for Illinois, and was assisted through to Lamoille by the kindly aid of passengers on the train. Having no father or mother living, he went to the home of Richard Ough, who testifies to the fact of his coming; that he wore his uniform, that no effort at concealment was made, and that his wife, since deceased, nursed him through a long spell of typhoid fever, which disabled him from performing any sort of military service for at least eight or nine months, and until some months after his term of enlistment had expired.

Your committee submit that the facts as presented are entitled to fair consideration, and that they show an entire absence of any intention to desert his command, and the constant presence of a determination to do his duty on the part of the soldier, in spite of the deception by which he found himself in the Regular instead of the Volunteer Army, until, as the result of severe sickness at Harts Island, he believed himself in a dying condition and longed to reach his friends before death should occur.

In view of all these facts and the high character and standing of Graham as a citizen, which is abundantly testified to, your committee report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to inquire who introduced that bill and whether the member who introduced it is present?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] introduced the bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask if he is present in the House? I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BROWNLOW. I reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do you know anything of the facts in the case?

Mr. BROWNLOW. Nothing but what appears in the evidence.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I had a conversation with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] about this very bill, and from what he assured me there is some merit in it, and I am not disposed to oppose the bill, although he is not present.

Mr. BROWNLOW. There is no question but what this young man enlisted at the age of 16, under the impression that he was enlisting in the volunteer service for the war, and that he only separated himself from the service in 1866, a year after the war was over, by reason of disability.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is this the first application for release from this charge that he has made now?

Mr. BROWNLOW. Oh, no; the bill has been pending.

Mr. TALBERT. I am satisfied from the conversation I had with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the author of the bill, that this is a meritorious case.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Some thirty years after the occurrence, this application is made.

Mr. BROWNLOW. You will find, my dear sir, that in these cases there are some more meritorious even than a great many soldiers who had an honorable discharge; and yet they have slumbered in the War Department by reason of the extraordinary care of the Department and the absence of a proper law to vindicate these people. If you will read these reports you will find nothing but exceedingly meritorious cases have been reported.

Mr. TALBERT. Is the usual amendment attached?

Mr. BROWNLOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Oh, it is there.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent, and I hope it will be granted, that when we come to a bill to remove the charge of desertion, unless the member representing the bill is here to make a statement, that we pass it over for to-night, so that we may reach bills in which members interested are present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from South Carolina that this bill has not been disposed of. The amendment alone has been agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when a bill for the removal of a charge of desertion is reached, and the gentleman who introduced it is not present, that it shall be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TALBERT. So that those present who have bills can have them considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. GRIFFIN. There is a bill introduced by Mr. Simpkins that I think will be reached to-night, and gentlemen will remember that Mr. Simpkins is deceased.

Mr. TALBERT. Let that go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GEORGE ALCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1794) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against George Alcott on the rolls of the War Department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records of the War Department the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls against George Alcott, late a private in Company C, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to bear date June 13, 1865.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that since the adoption of the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina, that when the bills to remove the charges of desertion be taken up the name of the gentleman who introduced it be stated by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman who introduced this bill is present. The Chair is informed that the Clerk will take notice of the rule, and read no bill unless the gentleman who introduced it is present.

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask if the gentleman who introduced this bill is present. I am informed by a member near me that he is present. If he is present, I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman wishes to have the report read, I think I can state the substance of it. That was a case where the soldier failed to get his discharge by no fault of his own. The facts briefly stated are as given in the report. It appears that on reporting to the proper authorities at Indianapolis, Ind., for the purpose of obtaining transportation to his regiment he was informed that, as the war was over, no transportation could be furnished. He was told that he should either remain in Indianapolis or return to his home, and that he would be notified when wanted. He was not notified, and was not present when his regiment was mustered out.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EDWARD C. PARSONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3646) for the relief of Edward C. Parsons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Edward

C. Parsons, who served in Company B, Twenty-seventh Michigan Infantry, during the late war, and grant him an honorable discharge to date April 9, 1863.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Chairman, there is a bill just ahead of that, for the relief of James Hicks, on the Calendar.

Mr. JETT. What is the objection to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. According to the rule just adopted by the committee, that bill was passed and the gentleman who introduced it is not present.

Mr. BROWNLOW. There were two bills, one introduced by Mr. LENTZ and one by Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would suggest that the bill now under consideration be disposed of, and then we return to this bill of James Hicks, if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES HICKS.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNLOW] refer to the bill H. R. 4239?

Mr. BROWNLOW. It is the bill to complete the military record of James Hicks. There were two bills identically the same. One was introduced by Mr. LENTZ and the other by Mr. BRUMM.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill on the calendar is reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], who is not present.

Mr. BROWNLOW. But the bills are identically the same.

Mr. BISHOP. It is really the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LENTZ.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will come literally within the prohibition of the rule just adopted by the committee. The Chair will suggest, however, that the gentleman from Tennessee might ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Then I will ask unanimous consent that we consider the bill (H. R. 4239) to complete the military record of James Hicks.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, so as to show him honorably discharged from the service of the United States to date November 4, 1865, the date of muster out of his company, and to issue to said officer's widow a certificate of honorable discharge accordingly.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, however, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY J. FLEMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3991) for the relief of Henry J. Fleming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry J. Fleming, who served in Company G, Eighty-first Illinois Infantry, during the late war, and grant him an honorable discharge to date April 1, 1862.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. JETT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3991) for the relief of Henry J. Fleming, beg leave to submit the following report:

The report of the War Department shows that said Henry J. Fleming was enrolled January 16, 1864; mustered into service April 8, 1864, as a private in the Eighty-first Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers to serve three years.

That he was afterwards admitted to the post hospital, Camp Yates, near Springfield, Ill., with measles and pneumonia, and was furloughed March 1, 1864, and is reported as having deserted April 10, 1864. That he was arrested as a deserter May 23, 1864, at Jefferson City, Ill., by the provost-marshal, thirteenth district, Illinois, and delivered May 23, 1864.

At the regimental post, Cairo, Ill., record further shows that he was released May 31, 1864. The records of the War Department fail to disclose any reason or grounds for his release on the 31st of May, 1864.

Your committee, after carefully investigating this case, have arrived at the conclusion that the said Henry J. Fleming was not a deserter, but that after having been sent home on a furlough, as the records of the War Department show, he was then and there unable to, and remained unable to, return to the company and regiment.

At the time he was released, May 31, 1864, he was still unable to enter the service on account of the severe illness that he had contracted after having entered the service, viz, measles and pneumonia, and remained unable—in fact, in such physical condition that it was impossible for him to return and enter the service.

Being satisfied that the said Henry J. Fleming was not a deserter, the committee recommend that the bill do pass, giving to the said Henry J. Fleming an honorable discharge, with the following amendment:

Change the word "sixty-two," in line 8, to "sixty-four," making the bill read, after the enacting clause:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry J. Fleming, who served in Company G, Eighty-first Illinois Infantry, during the late war, and grant him an honorable discharge, to date August 1, 1864."

The testimony of witnesses shows conclusively that the said Henry J. Fleming was unable to return to his company and enter the service at any time after having contracted measles and pneumonia in February, 1864.

Applicant testified as follows:

"In 1864, about the latter part of January, he contracted the measles and was sent to the hospital at Camp Yates, Ill., and, being better, was granted a furlough for twenty days. After the expiration of said time he returned to his regiment, Company G, Eighty-first Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at Memphis, Tenn., and sustained a relapse of heavy fever, the result of said measles, and was ordered to Camp Butler, Ill. While in said camp he got worse and weaker, and was ordered by Captain Lamb, in charge of said camp, to go home.

"One Joe Addison, of Company G, Ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry, whose time had expired and who was at that time at said Camp Butler, Ill., was told by Captain Lamb to take charge of him and see that he got home. After returning home he contracted lung disease on account of said measles and was in such bad state of health that he could hardly walk, and was unable, therefore, to return to his regiment; that he was first treated from August, 1864, to June, 1865, by Dr. Sharp, living in Jefferson County, Ill., and who died a few years after the above-stated period. He was afterwards treated by Dr. John S. Hillis, of Hillsboro, Ill., who died in 1882. After this he was treated by Dr. Davenport, of Walshville, Ill., who died April 12, 1891.

"Affiant also states that he was also treated by Dr. Bennet, residing at Litchfield, Ill., for the period of twenty-two years, and also by Dr. S. H. McLean, residing in Hillsboro, Ill., for twenty years, for said lung disease, and that for the last six years he was treated by his family physician, Dr. William A. Allen, of Donnellson, Ill., for said lung disease.

"Affiant also states that he has, since August, 1864, to present date, suffered severely from lung disease, and is still so affected as to be unable to do manual labor."

John Neagle, a resident of Hillsboro, Ill., testified as follows:

"That he has known Henry J. Fleming for the period of thirty-two years; that he met the said Fleming at the office of the late Dr. John S. Hillis, who treated him for relapse of some disease, measles or lung troubles; that the said Fleming was at that time hardly able to walk and has ever since been a physical wreck. Affiant also states that during the conversation with said Fleming at that time the said Fleming informed him that said diseases were contracted while in the United States service in above organization, and that he has every reason to believe, from his intercourse during above stated period, to wit, thirty-two years, more or less, the statement of said Fleming is truthful."

Tabitha Bogard, a resident of Donnellson, Ill., testified as follows:

"I have been acquainted with Henry J. Fleming ever since he was a small boy. I knew him when he went into the United States Army in January, A. D. 1864, and I saw him when he was sent back home sick, and I thought he would die. His sickness was effect of measles. This was in August, 1864; and he has never been an able-bodied man since that time; it would have been impossible for him to have returned to the Army before the close of the war in 1865."

John R. Brown, a resident of Donnellson, Ill., testified as follows:

"That he has known H. J. Fleming for the period of forty years, and that he knows from his own knowledge that H. J. Fleming was a good, sound, healthy man before entering into the United States service; that he returned home in 1864 with a furlough, suffering from the measles and a very bad cough, and was treated by Dr. Sharp, of Jefferson County, Ill., and returned to the Army. He afterwards came home again in August, 1864, suffering from a very bad attack of measles and fever, and was in such a condition that he was bedfast to 1866, and was not able to return to the Army. Affiant also states that he saw said Fleming from 1864 to present date, with the exception of the year 1872, but was informed nearly every week during the year 1872 of his condition, and that said Fleming is and has been a sufferer during each week and each month since 1864 from said diseases.

"Affiant also states in a former affidavit given before William Young that he was not asked or informed of points and facts establishing the innocence of said Fleming of being a deserter, and that he therefore gives from his own will and free from any pregnancy of interest this statement, knowing from his knowledge, knowing that he was at the bedside of said Fleming, that he was not able to return to the Army."

James G. Hansen, a resident of Centralia, Ill., testified as follows:

"That he has known Henry J. Fleming from his boyhood; that he knows that the said Henry J. Fleming was a good sound man and free from any disease before entering into the United States Army in January, 1864; that he returned from the Army on a furlough in a very bad physical condition, coughing and spitting to such a degree that he became a skeleton, and was treated by Dr. Sharp, of Jefferson City, Jefferson County, Ill., and that at the expiration of his furlough he returned to the Army and was sent back again in company of one Joe Addison, of Company G, Ninth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, by the direction and order of Captain Lamb, commanding Camp Butler, Ill.; said Fleming was then in a worse physical condition than before, coughing and spitting, reducing him to helplessness, and that such condition kept him to his bed up to 1866, and that he was not able to return to the Army.

"Affiant also states that the arrest of said Fleming, by one John Gill, instigated by one Cash Harvey, was a brutal act of inhumanity, as said Fleming was a helpless man and could not return to the Army, as he is now and was in a very bad condition.

"Affiant also states that said Fleming was treated by Dr. Sharp on his second return from the Army, and that said Dr. Sharp was a refugee from the State of Missouri, and whose residence was Lebanon, Mo., returned to said State and died there nearly twenty years ago."

William R. Henson, a resident of Centralia, Ill., testified as follows:

"That he has known Henry J. Fleming for the period of forty-five years, and that said Fleming was a good, sound, and healthy man before entering into the United States Army in January, 1864; that he returned from the Army on a furlough in a very bad condition, coughing and spitting to such a degree that he became a skeleton, and was treated by Dr. Sharp, of Jefferson City, Jefferson County, Ill., and that at the expiration of his furlough he returned to the Army and was sent back again in a still worse physical condition than before, accompanied by one Joe Addison, of Company G, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, by the direction and order of Captain Lamb, at the time commanding Camp Butler, Ill.

"Affiant also states that he perused the furlough given to the said Fleming, and that after his second return he was a total physical wreck, and this condition kept him to his bed up to 1866.

"Affiant also states that he was present and saw one John Gill taking Fleming from his bed, carrying and pushing said Fleming, who was helpless on account of above-stated physical condition, and that said arrest was a brutal act of inhumanity."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand a great number of people who are applying to be relieved from the charge of desertion submit ex parte testimony, merely affidavits on their side.

There is absolutely no investigation, no proof, no examination; the Government is not represented; it is purely ex parte. We are here voting case after case without knowing anything about it except what we glean from ex parte statements, and putting these men in the attitude and position where a little later they will be claiming to be put on the pension rolls. It appears to me there ought to be something more than that, something to show whether these statements are true or untrue.

This is a remarkable proceeding. Our pension roll is continually growing. Under our general law provision is made for the granting of pensions to those who have earned them by military service, yet here every Friday night we are engaged in the task of putting numbers of additional persons in a position to go upon the pension roll. I should like to hear some explanation from the gentleman who represents this claim as to why this man ought to be put in an attitude to draw a pension from the Government.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly expected, I suppose, by my friend from Mississippi, or any other gentleman on this floor, that the applicant himself, in a case of this kind, should be compelled to come here and testify before the committee to which his bill is referred. But I will say for the satisfaction of my friend from Mississippi, that no bill is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs to relieve any person from the charge of desertion unless the testimony shows with absolute clearness that the applicant was not a deserter.

In this particular case I happen myself to know all the facts. I know Henry J. Fleming almost as well as I know any of my associates on this floor. I know his physical condition. I know that the affidavits of the various witnesses in this case are entitled to be received as evidence in support of this claim. Of course these affidavits constitute what the gentleman from Mississippi calls ex parte evidence. But that is all that we can expect in a case of this kind, for it would be a matter of impossibility for the applicants to bring the witnesses from various sections of the country to testify in their behalf before the committee. But I do know that the parties making these affidavits are men above reproach and had knowledge of the facts to which they have testified. I know that every one of these witnesses who testified as to the physical condition of Henry J. Fleming is a man of the best standing in the community in which he resides.

I can say further that no bill of this character has been or will be reported from the Committee on Military Affairs unless it can successfully withstand the severest scrutiny and investigation. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that there is proposed in the report of the committee an amendment which does not appear on the face of the bill, and which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Change the word "sixty-two," in line 8, to "sixty-four," making the bill read, after the enacting clause:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military records of Henry J. Fleming, who served in Company G, Eighty-first Illinois Infantry, during the late war, and grant him an honorable discharge to date April 1, 1864."

Mr. JETT. The date 1864 in the amendment just read is a mistake. It should be 1865. I move to amend the amendment in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was adopted.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I wish to inquire whether the bill as it now stands embraces the usual provision that the bill shall not have the effect of securing to the applicant any additional pay or allowances?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Then I move that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That no pay or allowance shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. JETT. I assent to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

W. L. FAXON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 116) granting a pension to W. L. Faxon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of W. L. Faxon, of Middleboro, Mass., late a surgeon, Thirty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and that he receive a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GIBSON. I can make a statement which will obviate the necessity of reading the report. This man was an assistant army surgeon from the beginning to the end of the war, and was mustered out as a surgeon. Properly he would be entitled to $25 a month, which is the statutory amount. This is a Senate bill, and it only calls for $12 a month, and we did not recommend any change in it.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES HOFFMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4691) to increase the pension of Charles Hoffman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Charles Hoffman, of Saxonburg, Butler County, Pa., a soldier of the Mexican war, Company K, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; also lieutenant Company E, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the late rebellion, from $12 a month to $50 a month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out "increase the pension" and insert in lieu thereof "place the name."

In line 5 strike out "of Saxonburg, Butler County, Pa."

In line 8 strike out the word "from," and strike out all of line 9, and insert in lieu thereof "on the pension roll and pay him a pension of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BETSEY B. OLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 497) granting an increase of pension to Betsey B. Olin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Betsey B. Olin, widow of Charles Olin, late a private of Company I, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and grant her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving, said pension to be payable to her legally constituted guardian.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ITEWAYAKA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1541) granting a pension to Itewayaka, or "One-armed Jim."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of "Itewayaka," or "One-armed Jim," late a scout of the military district of Minnesota, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA L. ROBERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6785) restoring Julia L. Roberts, late Julia L. Doty, to the pension roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to and place upon the pension roll the name of Julia L. Roberts, widow of John M. Doty, who was a contract surgeon in the service of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month from and after the passage of this act, the number of her pension certificate being 128793.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the word "act," in line 8.

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting a pension to Julia L. Roberts."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that in all these cases granting pensions, where the members who introduced the bills are not present, they be passed over just as the other class of cases were.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If there is some one here who can explain the bill, that is sufficient.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If there was good reason why the rule should be adopted with reference to the other class of cases, there is reason for doing the same thing in these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that his motion is not in order.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me explain to the gentleman and I think he will not ask that. In nine cases out of ten the member who introduces the bill can not explain the case at all. Members introduce these bills at the request of constituents. They come before our committee and file lists of names of cases that they want us to examine into. We send for the papers and look over the records in the Pension Office and the additional evidence.

We give the case a careful examination and it is written up.

Then it is submitted to a subcommittee, and they investigate and report it back to the full committee. Then we draw the report and send it in. We do not consult with the member who introduces the bill unless there is some difficulty in his case.

If there is, then we call his attention to it and ask for further evidence. I have been here every night and have carefully examined every case, so that I am personally familiar with the facts in each case. I make it a point to be here to take care of these bills for the members, so it would be unfair to introduce the rule which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] suggests.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is not the same state of facts true of the bills removing charges of desertion also?

Mr. RAY of New York. That I do not know. They do not come from my committee at all. They come from the Committee on Military Affairs; but there is always some one here to explain these pension bills, and I know that I understand the cases ten times as well as the members who introduced them, except now and then a case where a member does give some personal attention to the details and examines the evidence in the case. But that is very rare. You know that in almost every one of these cases we have a volume of evidence to examine from as thick as my two hands up to 6 or 8 inches thick.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And the evidence from the Pension Office.

Mr. RAY of New York. The evidence from the Pension Office. The request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] would be unfair to members, because they have all understood heretofore that the chairman of the committee would be here to explain their bills.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The Chairman has ruled it out of order, anyway.

Mr. RAY of New York. I wanted to explain to my friend, so that he would not blame members for not being here. I have taken care of all bills on the Democratic side with the same faithfulness that I have on our own side.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true. I will bear testimony to that.

Mr. TALBERT. What is the Calendar number of the bill that is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no bill now pending before the committee. The last bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

J. R. MATHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6388) granting a pension to J. R. Mathers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of J. R. Mathers, late a private of Company A, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him a pension of $25 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, strike out the words "to grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

In line 7, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-four."

After the word "month," in line 7, insert the words "in lieu of the pension he now receives."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Mathers."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will not an explanation do just as well? The report, however, is not very long. Let the Clerk read the report.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say right here that I have endeavored to get the reports of the committee on these bills and I have failed to do it. I know numbers of others have no reports before them, and I do not think we should be in any indecent haste here to pass these measures. It does seem to me that the report of the committee in every case ought to be read, so that we will know how to vote intelligently upon these claims.

I recollect that to-day, after the previous question had been ordered on the bills passed at the last night session for pensions, I failed to get the report read in the case of the pension granted to General McMillan. Now, if we go on and pass these bills through the committee and know nothing about them when we get into the House we shall have no information about them, and when we ask for the reading of the reports we shall be told, "You can not do that, because the previous question has been ordered."

I do think these reports ought to be read here and that the committee ought to be put in possession of the facts before members are required to stand up and vote blindly for pensions about which they know nothing. I demand that these reports be read, so that the committee be put in possession of the facts.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to ask my friend where he applied for the report in these cases?

Mr. TALBERT. I did it to-day in the case of a pension to General McMillan.

Mr. RAY of New York. You asked to have the report read in the House?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I thought you made the statement that you tried to get copies of the report, but could not do it.

Mr. TALBERT. I knew, of course, that I could not have the report read to-day, because the previous question had been ordered. I did it to show that there was a necessity of having the report read in the Committee of the Whole. I do not ask for the reading of these reports for the purpose of killing time, but I ask for the reading of the reports so that I may get information upon the bills which I am called on to vote upon.

I do think, in justice to members who come here night after night, that we should have the reports read. As a matter of course, these empty chairs care nothing at all about it, because they can not legislate and can not vote; but I think respect enough ought to be shown to the men who come here night after night to let them know what they are called on to vote upon.

I do not think it is right and proper for members to hollo out "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!" upon everything here in indecent haste. We are legislating, and I think we ought not to do it in too big a hurry, especially when we have only a few who are willing to come here night after night and stand up for the old soldier.

The hypocrite will stand up in the daytime and make speeches, but when he is wanted to be here in the House at night he is in his downy couch snoring in dreamland. [Laughter.] I think there ought not to be a refusal to have the report read, so that we may vote intelligently while these upper tens are snoring away their time on their downy couches. When they go home they will state what they have done, how they have fought, bled, and died for the old soldier, and they have not done anything. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from South Carolina to say that he had tried to get the reports in these cases, but he was unable to do so.

Mr. TALBERT. Not here.

Mr. RAY of New York. You do not mean to say you could not find the printed report?

Mr. TALBERT. No; I said I had failed to get them when they were called up. I failed to find them in my files, and I thought we ought to have them read. I wish to say I never stand here and demand the reading of a report for the purpose of killing time, because I am a friend of the old soldier.

Mr. RAY of New York. I am only seeking to know what the gentleman meant when he said he could not get the report.

Mr. TALBERT. I wanted to find out these people—the hypocrites—and I intend that the people shall know it, if I can get it into the RECORD.

Mr. RAY of New York. I very much regret that I requested an opportunity to make a statement instead of having the report read, because a great deal more time has been consumed than would have been by the reading of the report.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Perhaps it is not improper for me to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has asked to have the report read in his time.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is it the gentleman would like to say?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I was going to say it is impossible for anybody to understand these cases. Only a few gentlemen in the committee meeting consider these claims.

Mr. GIBSON. The full committee of fifteen.

Mr. SULLIVAN. And it is impossible for us to understand them without explanation. Well, grant, for the sake of the argument, that the full committee of fifteen consider these cases. That is a very small proportion of this House; and yet we are expected to come here and read simply the title of the bill and then vote upon it blindly, without knowing anything on earth about the case or about the merits of the controversy. Bill after bill passes that way; and even in the reading of a little report over half the time the buzz and confusion is so great we can not hear it read; but having heard it read you merely get a glimpse at the merits of the case. Before passing bills I think we ought at least to have that much done. There is not another——

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, let us have it read.

Mr. SULLIVAN. There is not another committee of the House that make reports that get their bills passed in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6388) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Mathers, have examined the same and the evidence, and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $6 to $24 per month the pension of Joseph R. Mathers, of Buckhannon, W. Va., who served from June 25, 1861, to July 6, 1864, as private, Company A, Third West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, when honorably discharged.

The records show him to have been treated while in service for "hemorrhoids," paronychia, inflammation of lungs, rheumatism, and bronchitis.

He filed and established a claim for partial loss of right thumb, and was pensioned therefor at $2 from date of discharge, and was increased to $4 from October 22, 1885, and to $6 from March 25, 1891.

He claimed pension for disease of heart, but said he first noticed it about 1877, and the claim was rejected on that ground.

At an examination by a board of United States surgeons July 20, 1892, he was rated six-eighteenths for thumb, four-eighteenths for heart, and four-eighteenths for catarrh. At another examination, August 15, 1894, the board said:

"We find loss of distal joint of right thumb. No disease of heart. No nasal catarrh. Is not well nourished. Muscles atrophied and flabby. Palms normal. General appearance denotes anæmia. Has the old man's pace or shuffle, and is very much debilitated. Articulates with difficulty. Complains of numbness of left arm, side, and leg. Has fallen several times while walking on the street. His movements are feeble and he is easily fatigued. Coordination of movements in walking is impaired and exaggerated in the dark or with eyes closed.

"This claimant up to five years ago was an active, muscular man. About that time he became very dissipated and continued in this condition up to about one year ago, since which time he has abstained entirely from intoxicants, and during the last year has lost all of his activity and muscular power and is now a physical wreck."

Mr. TALBERT. I move to dispense with the further reading of the report. I believe they ought to put in $100 for the funeral expenses. [Laughter.]

Mr. DORR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "25" and insert "50." This soldier and his wife are both invalids. The person they have to take care of the family is a little girl about 20 years of age, and she does the work. It is a deserving case.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask if he has a good position anywhere?

Mr. DORR. He has nothing. He is lying on his bed and his wife is lying on her bed.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the committee has increased this man's pension from $6 to $24 a month simply on account of his disabled condition, and that is an amount he could not get at the Pension Bureau. We are giving it to him, and that is all the committee ought to do, and it is going a great way in doing that. The bill when introduced by the gentleman only asked $25, and it was put at $24 so as to be consistent with the rating given in cases of this kind.

Mr. DORR. At that time I did not know the condition of the soldier.

Mr. RAY of New York. We have given him all that his condition warrants. The case was very carefully investigated.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to inquire whether this increase is to be dated from the passage of this act?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. From the passage of the act?

Mr. DORR. From the passage of the act.

Mr. SULLIVAN. This is the case in which the reading was dispensed with?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; you have just heard the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "twenty-four" and insert the word "fifty;" so as to read, "$50 a month."

Mr. SIMS. Are we now asked to increase the pension from $24 to $50?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is the proposition of the gentleman who introduced the bill. We have given the soldier all he is entitled to.

Mr. SIMS. The committee amendment is $24. I hope you will stick to that, or at least not go higher than that.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES C. KINKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6242) to restore the name of Dr. James C. Kinkle to the pension rolls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Dr. James C. Kinkle again on the pension roll of the United States and to pay said Dr. James C. Kinkle a pension at the rate of $12 per month, from the date of the order striking his name from the pension roll of the United States, and to continue payment of the pension at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MIERS of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6242) granting a pension to James C. Kinkle, have examined the same and the evidence and report:

This bill as amended proposes to restore to the pension roll, at $12 per month, James C. Kinkle, of St. Paul, Minn., who served as an acting assistant or contract surgeon, United States Army, from September 27, 1864, to August 19, 1865, when his service was honorably terminated. He filed and established a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, and was pensioned thereunder at $12 per month from October 9, 1890, until January, 1895, when his name was dropped from the rolls, under the decision in the Andrew J. Shannon case, on the ground that his was not a pensionable service.

When examined in 1891 he was rated six-eighteenths for varicose veins, eight-eighteenths for piles, and eight-eighteenths for rheumatism. That was more than six years ago, and he is now over 71 years of age and his disabilities, of course, greater than they were at that time.

This committee has frequently declared that in its opinion service as acting assistant or contract surgeon is pensionable under the act of June 27, 1890, the decision of the Secretary to the contrary notwithstanding, and in that opinion has been sustained by the House.

This bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "Doctor."

In line 5 strike out the word "again;" also the words "of the United States" and the word "to."

In line 6 strike out the words "Dr. James C. Kinkle" and insert in lieu thereof the word "him."

Strike out all after the word "month" in line 7.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James C. Kinkle."

Mr. TALBERT. Is there anything to show, Mr. Chairman, that he was ever mustered into the service?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, there is; he was on the pension roll.

Mr. TALBERT. There were a good many on the pension rolls who never were mustered into the service.

Mr. RAY of New York. Your question was whether or not he was ever mustered into the service.

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. He was.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE F. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1773) to amend the military record of George F. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of George F. Miller, who enlisted under the name of George F. Young on the 10th day of May, 1861, in Company G, Seventy-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and that an honorable discharge be granted: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1773) to amend the military record of George F. Miller, having had the same under consideration, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is hereby adopted and made a part of this report.

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1773) to amend the military record of George F. Miller, after careful consideration report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

"It appears from the records of the War Department that this soldier, under the name of George F. Young, jr., enlisted at the age of 14, on the 9th day of May, 1861, as a private in Company G, Second Regiment Excelsior Brigade, subsequently designated Company G, Seventy-first New York Infantry Volunteers, and was mustered into service June 28, 1861, to serve three years.

"It appeared that he served faithfully until March 18, 1862, when he is reported deserted. From the evidence of comrades corroborating the statement, under oath of the applicant, it further appears that the said George F. Miller, while stationed with his regiment at Sandy Point, Maryland, in March, 1862, was placed on the sick list because of an injury or sprain to his ankle received while at drill in the line of duty, and so remained until May 2, 1862, when his regiment was ordered to the peninsula of Virginia. The said Miller was then sent home as unfit for duty, where he remained until the close of the war.

"The soldier further states that his furlough and discharge were to follow on his return home, but this never occurred. The testimony further shows that Miller was never fit for duty again at any time prior to the expiration of his term of enlistment; that, indeed, he has always been a sufferer more or less from the injury received, and is still at times forced to use a crutch or cane.

The committee believe that there is nothing in this soldier's record to show that he intended to desert, but that he was prevented from completing his term of enlistment by reason of disability contracted in the service. The extreme youth of the soldier alone, being a mere child of 14 years when he entered the military service, ought of itself to relieve him of the stigma resting on his name. His present reputation as a citizen is excellent.

The committee, in view of all the facts of this case, recommend the passage of the bill for his relief.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is the gentleman who introduced this bill present?

Mr. BROWNLOW. It is a Senate bill and comes to the House, having been passed by the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. Is there a provision that no pay, bounty, or allowance shall become payable—the usual provision?

Mr. BROWNLOW. There is.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN PHELON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6616) to remove the charge of desertion against John Phelon, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing in the records against John Phelon, deceased, late a member of Company C, Third

Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and of Company F, Second Battalion of the Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, and to issue an honorable discharge from the last-named service.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6616) to correct the military record of John Phelon, deceased, submit the following report:

It is shown by the records of the War Department that John Phelon was enrolled September 18, 1862, and mustered into the service September 25, 1862, as a private in Company C, Third Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers, to serve nine months. He appears to have served faithfully to June 20, 1863, when he was mustered out with his company and honorably discharged the service. It is further shown that he reenlisted in Company F, Second Battalion, Fifteenth United States Infantry, August 2, 1863, and deserted August 31, 1866, at Vicksburg, Miss., and never returned to his command.

So far as it appears, this soldier's service was entirely honorable and faithful in the last-named organization until August 31, 1866, a period of over three years.

The affidavit of Mary A. Phelon shows that the soldier was granted a furlough in June, 1866, and that when he returned home he was sick with fever and ague and disease of the heart, and physically unable to return to his command.

John Connors, on March 11, 1898, testified as follows:

"That he was well and personally acquainted with the above-named John Phelon; he remembers well when the said soldier returned home on furlough in June, 1866; he was suffering from malarial fever and disease of the heart, and was a constant sufferer for over three years; he was confined to his bed for weeks at a time and unable to dress himself; if it had not been for good nursing and good care he would not have lived as long as he did; he can truthfully say that the said soldier was not able to return to his command, and was unfit to perform the duties of a soldier; he was a constant sufferer from the above-named disabilities from 1866 to the day of his death."

Catherine F. McDermott, on March 11, 1898, testified as follows:

"That the above-named soldier, John Phelon, returned home on furlough in June, 1866; he was troubled with malarial fever and disease of the heart; he was troubled with the same over three years after his return on said furlough; he was unable to return to his command, and unfit to perform the duties of a soldier; he was troubled with the above-named disabilities from June, 1866, to the time of his death."

Mary A. Phelon, on March 11, 1898, testified as follows:

"That she is the widow of the late John Phelon, who died in April, 1880. She is unable to furnish the testimony of the physician who treated her late husband, for the reason that he is dead."

This case seems to be one of very decided and exceptional merit. The records show faithful service for a period of nearly four years, covering the greater part of the war of the rebellion, and for a period of a year and three months after the close of the war. The alleged desertion, therefore, occurred after the hostilities had ceased, and as the evidence indicates that the absence of the soldier from his command and failure to return were due to serious disabilities from which he was suffering when granted a furlough, and which must have been contracted in service, and which condition continued until after the expiration of his term of enlistment, the committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN WILLOUGHBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3790) to remove the charge of desertion against John Willoughby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing on the records of the War Department against John Willoughby, of Washington, Kans., late of Company C, Eighteenth United States Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge in said company as of date of the end of his term of enlistment therein.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, it may save reading the report if I state a few facts in relation to this case. This man entered the Army in 1861, when he was only 17 years of age, and served faithfully for four or five years. The evidence shows clearly that he was taken sick while his regiment was on the march and he was unable to reach his regiment until after he was put down on the records as a deserter.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM P. BRASSINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7561) to correct the military record of William P. Brassington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William P. Brassington, late private in Company I, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES A. STODDARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of James A. Stoddard, late corporal in Company B, Eighth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, by removing the charge of desertion therefrom and granting him an honorable discharge.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard, have carefully considered the same and beg leave to report as follows:

James A. Stoddard was enlisted June 1, 1861, and mustered into service October 11, 1861, as a private in Company B, Eighth Wisconsin Infantry, to serve three years. He reenlisted January 2, 1864, as a veteran, to serve three years, and appears to have served faithfully until February 3, 1865, when he is reported to have deserted.

The circumstances of his alleged desertion, as given by the testimony of some five of his comrades, and which circumstances are practically confirmed by the report from the War Department, are as follows: While his regiment was at Iuka, Miss., about February 1, 1865, he was detailed for duty with a foraging party, and at the request of members of his mess he "captured" some knives and forks from a citizen.

Complaint being made to the commanding general, that officer ordered an investigation, at the same time remarking that he "would make an example" of the guilty man if he could be found. This threat of the general being construed by Stoddard into a fear of being shot, he ran away in an effort, as he believed, to save his life. When the President's proclamation of March 11, 1865, regarding deserters was issued he was at home, sick in bed, and so continued until the war was over.

The testimony of Stoddard's comrades on file shows him to have been a most brave and gallant soldier, who had participated in every battle in which his regiment was engaged, and that up to the time of committing this petty misdemeanor he had never been under arrest. There is also the testimony of citizens and neighbors that since the war Mr. Stoddard has been a most excellent citizen, having filled many positions of honor and trust by the choice of his fellow-men.

Your committee therefore very much regret that this brave soldier and excellent citizen should for so many years have been compelled to rest under this stigma upon his excellent military and civil record, and therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the gentleman who introduced this bill is present?

Mr. KNOWLES. He is; I introduced it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to hear some explanation about it.

Mr. KNOWLES. About everything to be stated in regard to this bill is stated in the report. This is one of those cases that is not supported by ex parte testimony, but the records of the War Department show just what is given in this testimony. It is true that this man enlisted when he was a mere boy; that he served faithfully three years, and reenlisted as a veteran and served nearly another year; that he was one of the bravest men in the regiment and participated in every battle. It is true he did on a foraging expedition capture some knives and forks——

Mr. TALBERT. Did he capture them or just steal them or appropriate them?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; he appropriated them.

Mr. COLSON. Does anything about spoons or knives and forks appear in the report of the committee?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is precisely what was read in the report just now.

Mr. CLARDY. Were they silver spoons?

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the report show that this soldier took the spoons back?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; it does not. But it says that complaint was made, and that the officer in command said that he would make an example of this young soldier, who, being afraid that he was going to be shot, ran away in an effort, as he believed, to save his own life.

Mr. SULLIVAN. He ran away rather than restore the knives and forks.

Mr. KELLEY. Is the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KNOWLES] personally acquainted with the beneficiary in this case?

Mr. KNOWLES. I am.

Mr. RIDGELY. There is nothing in the report to show that he took the spoons back?

Mr. KNOWLES. No, sir.

Mr. COLSON. Will the gentleman who represents this bill say what metal these spoons were made of?

Mr. TALBERT. What was the age of this young soldier?

A MEMBER. You mean the age of the spoons?

Mr. TALBERT. No; the age of the soldier.

Mr. KNOWLES. I understand he was only 16 years old when he enlisted.

Mr. TALBERT. If he had taken a turkey or a chicken or a goose or a hog to satisfy his hunger, he would have been more excusable. But it seems to me he was scarcely pardonable in going out and taking forks and spoons—I do not believe he took any spoons, did he?—I believe it was knives and forks. But although his action seems to me to be hardly excusable, I am willing to take into consideration his extreme youth and his tremendous appetite. And so I have nothing more to say.

Mr. BROWNLOW. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] complains of the fact that this soldier stole knives and forks, and did not steal chickens or hogs.

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose the gentleman from Tennessee would have taken a hog or two or a mule or two.

Mr. BROWNLOW. But I want to say that while this soldier stole the knives and forks, it is to be presumed that his comrades took the hogs and the chickens.

Mr. SULLIVAN. As I understand, the reason this soldier deserted was that his superior officer had threatened to require him to take back the knives and forks——

Mr. KNOWLES. No, sir; that is not true.

Mr. SULLIVAN. And rather than do that, he ran away.

Mr. KNOWLES. The officer threatened to shoot him.

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; the gentleman said a while ago, not that the superior officer threatened to shoot the soldier, but that the soldier imagined something of that kind would follow.

Mr. KNOWLES. The exact words of the officer to the soldier were that he "would make an example of him," which the soldier construed into a threat that he would be shot.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The officer did not threaten to shoot him, but was going to punish him in some way for taking or capturing or stealing (whatever you call it) the knives and forks; and on account of that threat the soldier ran away. And these being the circumstances of the case, his military record is to be amended so that he may be placed on the "roll of honor"—the pension roll, of which members are so proud.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LAWRENCE P. RESSLER.

Mr. COX. The Clerk has passed over one bill—Calendar No., 578. It is a bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] who is not now present; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNLOW] who reported the bill and is perfectly familiar with the facts is here. I understand the circumstances which called the gentleman from Pennsylvania away, and as a matter of kindness to him I would like to have the bill considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole shall consider, notwithstanding the rule heretofore adopted, House bill No. 5046.

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 5046) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence P. Ressler was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence P. Ressler, formerly of Company C, One hundred and ninety-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, later a soldier in Company D of the Two hundred and thirtieth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to said Ressler an honorable discharge from said last service.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the letter "P," occurring as the initial of the middle name in title of the bill and in line 5 of section 1 of said bill, and the letter "C," denoting the company, in line 6, and substitute the letter "I."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirtieth" and substitute the word "thirteenth."

At the end of line 10 insert the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence Ressler."

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5046) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence P. Ressler, Company C, One hundred and ninety-six Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company D, Two hundred and thirtieth Pennsylvania Infantry, recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

Strike out the letter "P," occurring as the initial of the middle name in title of the bill and in line 5 of section 1 of said bill, and the letter "C," denoting the company, in line 6, and substitute the letter "I."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirtieth" and substitute the word "thirteenth."

At the end of line 10 insert the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The records show that Lawrence Ressler was enrolled July 6, 1864, and mustered into service July 20, 1864, as a private in Company I, One hundred and ninety-sixth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, to serve one hundred days. He served faithfully until November 17, 1864, when he was mustered out with his company and honorably discharged.

February 22 he was enrolled, and mustered into service February 25, 1865, as a private in Company D, Two hundred and thirteenth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, to serve for one year. He appears to have served faithfully until August 12, 1865, when it appears he left Camp Parole, Annapolis, Md., and was reported as a deserter. An unconditional pardon for desertion was granted him by the President April 22, 1879.

Ressler was born August 10, 1848; was consequently only 16 years of age at the time of first enrollment, and barely 17 years of age when he left the company of his second enlistment, in August, 1865, the war having ended the previous April.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move that that bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with an unfavorable recommendation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I should hate very much to put the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] in that position, for I was trying to do him an act of kindness only, and I am sure that if the gentleman from South Carolina will hear the explanation of my colleague [Mr. BROWNLOW] he will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. TALBERT. Did not this man desert twice?

Mr. BROWNLOW. No; he had one honorable service.

Mr. TALBERT. These gentlemen around me were talking so much I could not hear.

Mr. BROWNLOW. This is a good case.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISAAC ALGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4332) to correct the miltary record of Isaac Alger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Isaac Alger, late a private in Company L, Tenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date November 30, 1864.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Add at the end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4332) to correct the military record of Isaac Alger, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report thereon:

It appears by the War Department record that the soldier was enrolled August 11, 1862, to serve three years; deserted December 20, 1862; arrested April 15, 1863, and was restored to duty from this desertion by competent authority without trial, upon condition of making good the time lost and reimbursing to the Government the expenses incurred in his apprehension. He served faithfully thereafter until November 30, 1864, when he deserted from hospital furlough, and it does not appear that he ever came under military control subsequent to that date.

In applying for removal of the charge of desertion and an honorable discharge he declared, June, 1889, that he received a sick furlough from hospital in the fall of 1864 and was unable to return before his company was mustered out of service; that his attorney was informed on July 29, 1889, of the evidence required under the law, but the testimony called for has not been received at the War Department, and in its absence the Department is unable to determine whether or not the desired relief can be afforded under existing law.

The testimony presented to your committee shows that the soldier died on the 8th day of March, 1892. It appears from the affidavit of John Patton, of the town of Luddington, Eau Claire County, Wis., made September 29, 1897, that he was a member of Company C, Tenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, in which regiment the said Alger also served. Said Patton was well acquainted with said Alger prior to enlistment, and that said Alger was a well and rugged boy at the time of his enlistment.

Patton and Alger were together in Lincoln Hospital, near Washington, and were both furloughed home in October, 1864, and that said Alger went with Patton to the latter's home in Jefferson County, N. Y. Patton remained at home thirty days, being fifteen days after expiration of his furlough, and Alger did not return with him because he was not able to start, and remained in that condition at Patton's home until the latter was discharged from and with his regiment some time in June, 1865. Said Patton also states that when he reached home in June, 1865, he found Alger still at his home, and in a sickly and partly helpless condition and unable to hardly get around, and was being taken care of by said Patton's wife.

It appears from another affidavit, made on the same day by said Patton and his wife, Polly C. Patton, that they had been acquainted with said Alger from the time he was 9 years old up to the date of his death; he came home to their residence during the month of October, 1864; he was then an invalid on furlough from the United States service; he made his home at their place during the ten years following, and for the two years following his coming home on furlough (from 1864 until 1866) he was an invalid, and was treated and nursed by Mrs. Patton for more than a year; he was at no time able to return to his regiment from October, 1864, until 1866, on account of being sick with diarrhea and kidney troubles; he was treated by Mrs. Patton with roots and herbs from October, 1864, until the fall of 1866, and more or less after that; one Dr. Smith, who is now dead, also treated Alger for bleeding at his lungs and pain in his side; they were witnesses to Alger's bleeding at his lungs, and he was more or less troubled with bleeding of his lungs up to the date of his death.

The affidavits of E. L. Brockway, of Jackson County, Wis., made May 14, 1897; Joseph Popham, of Black River Falls, Wis., made June 1, 1897, and Dr. S. F. Wason, of the same place, made June 7, 1897, show that said Brockway and Popham became acquainted with said Alger in the year 1875, and that said Wason had known him for twenty-five years. These several affiants testify that during their acquaintance with said Alger he was an invalid and in poor health, and said Popham states, under oath, that Alger was a continuous sufferer from some malady of long standing which, in affiant's opinion, finally caused his death; Alger worked for affiant, and that he was often obliged to leave his work and go home to his bed; affiant knew a great deal about Alger's health on account of his working for him whenever he was able to do so during their acquaintance, and said Alger living in affiant's house at the time of and for years before his death in 1892.

The witness (Wason) also testifies that the soldier was in very poor health each and every year of witness's acquaintance with him; that the soldier was unable to stand exposure or to endure labor to any great extent, and that said Alger continued to suffer from disease and was finally a physical wreck at the date of his death.

Your committee, upon due consideration of the testimony presented in this case, is of the opinion that the failure of the soldier to return to his regiment and serve out the full term of his enlistment was due to disability occasioned by ill health, and that the charge of desertion should consequently be removed from his record, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment by adding, at the end of line 8, the following:

"Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should like to know whether the member who introduced this bill is present?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the gentleman, I will say that I introduced that bill, and that I am here. The report, stating all the facts in the case, has been read, and I think it amply justifies favorable action.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM E. ANDERSON.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 1329) granting an increase of pension to James H. Kile.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the last bill acted upon, as I understand, was the one to correct the military record of Isaac Alger. The next bill on the Calendar is for the relief of William E. Anderson.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that that comes within the prohibition of the rule which the committee have adopted.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand exactly what the rule is, but that is a case——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee was not present at the time of the adoption of the rule, as the Chair understands. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] asked unanimous consent of the committee that all bills relating to charges of desertion should be passed over without prejudice, in case the introducers of the bills were not present.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to infringe upon any rule, but whenever I report a bill here to this House I propose to attend to it until it goes through. Now, here are the facts about this case: This is an old man who belonged to our service in the Mexican war. I do not know a thing on earth about him except that he looks like a good, clever old man. He does not live in my country, and I do not know in whose district he belongs. I do not care anything about that. I examined his case——

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up, notwithstanding the rule.

Mr. COX. I am attending to the case as a matter of kindness.

A MEMBER. Where does this man live?

Mr. COX. I do not know where he lives. I never asked him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7673) be considered by the committee, notwithstanding the provision of the rule adopted heretofore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. To save reading the report I will give a history of this old man.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the bill has not yet been read. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 7673) for the relief of William E. Anderson was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend the military history of William E. Anderson, Company H, Third United States Artillery, as to show him honorably discharged, to date June 18, 1847.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Add at the end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman, by permission of the committee, I can state all there is in this case. This old man went into our service in the Mexican war and went to Vera Cruz. It seems that he understood the Spanish language, and he was detailed in a printing office to assist in the Government printing of whatever they needed in that line.

While working there in that capacity his regiment was ordered on to the City of Mexico. After he got through with his detail work, he started to join his regiment, and in the effort to do so he was captured by the Mexican forces, put in prison, and kept for a considerable time. When he was discharged, he went to the City of Mexico to join his regiment, but found that while he had been detained his regiment had been discharged and sent home, because the war was over. That is the whole case.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES H. KILE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1829) granting an increase of pension to James H. Kile.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James H. Kile, late first lieutenant Battery D, First Tennessee Light Artillery Volunteers, $24 per month, in lieu of $17 he is now receiving.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 4, strike out "pay," and insert in lieu thereof "place the name of."

In line 5, after "Volunteers," insert "on the pension roll and pay him a pension of."

In line 6, strike out "$17," and insert in lieu thereof the word "that."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I will make a statement which will obviate the necessity of reading the report. The Pension Office has given this man $17 per month. We think, in view of his condition, that that amount is not sufficient, and we give him $24. At his medical examination he was found to be in the following condition:

General appearance feeble, complexion sallow, tongue red and fissured. Lungs normal, liver tender and enlarged. * * * Kidney tender. Rheumatism shown by anchylosis of right wrist, motion extremely limited, discoloration of skin at knees and on legs. Crepitation at kneejoints, ankles, elbows, and shoulders. Muscles atrophied, tendons contracted, back stiff. Hernia, left inguinal (complete) oblique. No evidence of venereal or vicious habits.

The report shows that he is totally incapacitated for manual labor. He can hardly do a thing. He is an old man, and we think in view of his condition that he is entitled to $24, instead of the $17, which they gave him at the Pension Office. Does not the gentleman think that with all these diseases he is entitled to it, his record being a good one?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is his condition the result of disease or injuries contracted in the service?

Mr. RAY of New York. Disease contracted in the service.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVER P. SILVEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 637) granting an increase of pension to OliverP. Silvey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Oliver P. Silvey, late of Company D, Forty-eighth Indiana Infantry, at the rate of $30 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the following: "and pay him a pension."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bills (S. 637 and H. R. 3069) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Silvey, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $30 per month the pension of Oliver P. Silvey, of Stevensville, Mont.

The Senate report (No. 254) states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 637) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Silvey, have examined the same, and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed the Senate, and was reported favorably by the House.

"The Senate report was as follows, which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"'The claimant was a musician in Company D, Forty-eighth Indiana Volunteers. He is at the present time drawing a pension at the rate of $12 per month for disease of the lungs, resulting from exposure at the siege of Vicksburg, June 13, 1863. An application for increase on account of aggravated condition of the lung trouble, for which pension was originally granted, and also rheumatism and disease of the left leg resulting from the service, was subsequently rejected by the Pension Bureau.

"'The record in the case discloses the fact that the claimant is in very bad physical condition. Affidavits on file with the committee, signed by six prominent citizens of Stevensville, Mont., who have known the claimant for five years or more, show conclusively that the claimant is not physically able to perform manual labor.

"'Under the circumstances, your committee believe that a pension of $30 per month will be commensurate with his disabilities, and accordingly recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment as follows:

"'Amend by striking out the word "twenty-four," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty."'"

As the claimant is so disabled by reason of army service that he can not do anything to support himself and is needy, your committee report the Senate bill with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the following: "and pay him a pension."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL MAHONEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9642) granting an increase of pension to Michael Mahoney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Mahoney, late private, Company E, Twenty-second New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of fifty dollars per month in lieu of the pension he now receives.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, since we reported that bill the beneficiary, Mr. Mahoney, has died. I therefore move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LOUISE M. RICE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1476) granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise M. Rice, widow of Brig. Gen. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension of $30 per month she is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 7, after the word "Rice," insert "and pay her a pension."

Amend the title so it will read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The report (by Mr. RAY of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill S. 1476, and also the bill H. R. 2650, have examined the same and all the evidence, and respectfully report the Senate bill.

This bill proposes to increase, from $30 to $50 per month, the pension of Louise M. Rice, of Oskaloosa, Iowa.

This claimant is the widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, who was mustered into the service as colonel Thirty-third Iowa Volunteer Infantry October 1, 1862. He commanded brigades and divisions, participated in many important engagements, showed great capacity and bravery, and was wounded in battle April 30, 1864, from the direct effect of which wounds he died July 6, 1864. He was recommended for the brevet rank of major-general because of his meritorious services.

He was the only general officer from the State of Iowa whose death was directly caused by wounds received in battle.

His widow is now 67 years of age, in necessitous circumstances, in very poor health, and has no income except her pension of $30 per month, which she draws under the general law.

The case is most meritorious and as worthy as the cases of the widows of General Leggett and Commander Cushing, already reported from this committee and approved by the House.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Rice," insert "and pay her a pension."

Amend the title so it will read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, that bill proposes to increase the pension of this widow from $30 to $50 per month, and no reason is given except that she is in needy circumstances. Throughout this land there are plenty of widows and other people who need money, so far as that is concerned.

The $30 a month that is given there is certainly ample for one to live upon under ordinary circumstances. There is no claim that more than that is actually needed. The effort is now to raise the amount from thirty to fifty dollars. She is already upon the pension roll at the rate of $30 per month. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the passage of such a bill as that. As far as I am concerned, I shall oppose it.

Mr. LACEY. I only want to say in behalf of this bill that General Rice was mortally wounded on April 30, 1864. He was brevetted major-general after his death. He was one of the most distinguished soldiers in the late war. The reason why this bill comes up in this form is this: He having been killed in battle, his widow was pensioned at the rate of $30 per month, which is the rate for a lieutenant-colonel or an officer of higher rank.

Every major-general or brigadier-general's widow almost has been uniformly pensioned at the rate of $50 per month by special acts until substantially, I think, every brigadier-general's widow from that State has been so pensioned excepting this woman. She is the only widow from that State whose husband being a general, was actually killed in battle. So that in fact an exception is made against her. She is 67 years of age, and has absolutely nothing to live on excepting this pension.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman state that $30 a month is not ample to live upon?

Mr. LACEY. I think not; but so far as that is concerned——

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is there anything here to disclose that that is not ample and that she is not amply provided for? Is there anything to show that those whose duty it would be to take care of her were not amply able to take care of her outside of her pension?

Mr. LACEY. Well, the understanding was simply this: That if other general officers' widows are pensioned at $50, especially where their husbands did not contract disease in the Army or were not killed in battle, this lady is really placed in a condition where she is discriminated against. And so far as this question of rank is concerned, that is one that has always been considered.

Now, the widow of Major-General Corse has been pensioned at the rate of $75 a month, the widow of General Trumbull at $50 a month, the widow of General Tuttle at $50 a month, and various widows in that way, under the rule that seems to have been adopted, and that has been laid down in this committee, that where the death was from army service a brigadier-general's widow should be pensioned at $50 a month, there being no rank above that of lieutenant-colonel recognized in the general law.

In this particular instance, while I have not favored these large pensions, I hesitated to introduce this bill until I felt that I should do so in justice to her. I was adjutant-general upon his staff, and took him from the battlefield; and I say that no braver or more distinguished soldier ever went from any State in the Union, and certainly not from Iowa. This is the anniversary of the day on which he was in a battle, the 15th of April, and the 30th day of April is the anniversary of his death wound.

My friend from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] was on the other side in the engagement in which he was killed. General Clark, formerly from Missouri and for years Clerk of this House, was also engaged on the other side in the same battle; and it certainly would be a recognition of this old lady in her declining years, when she has almost reached three score years and ten, to put her upon the same grade with other general officers' widows in the same position as she.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is not the point. The point I made is that it does not appear that $30 a month, which this widow is now getting, under the general law, is not amply sufficient for her support. It does not anywhere appear that she needs an increased amount. We are dealing with matters that should address our sound judgment and common sense, and not be decided by any sentiment; and we should not grant an increased pension unless there is some good reason for it—a better reason than that somebody else is getting more than they ought to have. That is no reason for such action.

Mr. FARIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly.

Mr. FARIS. Does not the gentleman think that inasmuch as this widow's husband was killed in battle she should be accorded the same rate of pension that the widows of other generals have been given who were not killed in battle or from wounds received or diseases contracted in the service, from which they died?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I answer that question just this way. If the widows of other generals have received that which they were not properly entitled to receive it is no reason that this lady should receive more than the proper rate for her. If $30 a month is sufficient for her proper maintenance, then she should receive no more. The fact that we have been giving too much to others is no reason why we should give too much to this woman.

Mr. FARIS. Do you not think that to refuse it in this case would be a reflection on this general's widow?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not presume it would be a reflection upon this lady not to grant her this rate. When we are called upon to act upon questions of this kind our duty is to look at the particular facts, and there does not appear in this case to be any facts that justify raising the pension in this case from $30 to $50 a month; and the mere fanciful idea that she should receive more because others receive a greater amount does not weigh one single scintilla with me.

Mr. FARIS. Do you not think that when this widow is not receiving a rating equal to the widows of other generals of the same class whose husbands were not killed in battle we are discriminating against this widow who lost her husband in battle?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not think we are responsible for what others have done; and when the general law gives her $30 a month, I do not see that we are discriminating against her in not giving her $50 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I investigated this case most thoroughly, and held it in my hands for months. When the session first opened the gentleman from Iowa brought it to my attention, and grew very anxious because I did not report it earlier; but I held it until I had thoroughly investigated to see whether it was a case where we ought to grant an increase. The gentleman knows that I have fought here against granting extravagant pensions to widows of men of rank. He has heard that. I have had three or four battles, and I have won a good many curses because I took that position.

Heretofore it has been customary for this House to give pensions of $75, $100, or $150 a month, and sometimes more than that, to the widows of general officers who died because of disease contracted or wounds received in the service. I set my face, and the committee sustained me in it, that the committee would not give more than $50 in the case of a widow whose husband was killed in battle; and we would not give above $30 where the husbands did not lose their lives on account of disease contracted or wounds received in the service; and in that the House has sustained us.

Now, we made another proposition, by which we strictly abided, which was that we would not grant a pension to any widow unless she needed it, and then the limit of the fifty-dollar rule was graded by their necessities. So in this case we insisted that evidence should be presented to us showing that this woman was in necessitous circumstances and needed this $50 per month.

When affidavits and letters came showing that by reason of her age, her physical infirmity, and necessitous circumstances—that covers age, weakness, and inability to do anything for herself—and her surroundings that she needed $50 a month, we then consented to report this bill. When I say necessitous circumstances, we mean that. Her physical condition is such that she needs a pension, that she needs care—she has no property of her own and that it takes $50 to give her not an extravagant living, but to give her a decent living. Now, that is what we say and what we mean, and it is what the proof shows.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman who just now asked the question did not put it on that ground, but he put it on the ground of necessity and on the ground of equalizing her with others; that there were other widows getting the same. There was nothing in the report except the general language, nothing to indicate that this sum was necessary, and I took it there was nothing there to show that this amount was necessary to her comfortable living. Then, again, if it is right to put all these people on a $50 basis, why do you not enact a general law and not bring them up here one by one?

I undertake to say that there are many people, many widows, as well as those of officers, equally deserving, and you are discriminating against them. You are giving the widows of officers a large sum and the others a small sum. It costs one just as much to live as the other; one has to be as comfortable as the other. The one would be satisfied certainly with $30 who is now only getting $15, and you keep on raising these up to $50. There is nothing to show that the difference between $30 and $50 is necessary.

Mr. RAY of New York. We have stated the necessitous circumstances and that this pensioner needs it. We do not put into the report everything about her surroundings. You take a widow in the country—on the farm that has been her place of residence—and she does not need so large a pension as the woman who lives in a large city or town, and so we make a difference. For instance, a woman brought up in a city and living there is entitled to live there.

We could not say, "You must move out into the country on a farm," where another widow, the wife of a farmer, lives. Neither do we say to the widow of a farmer, "You may move into the city and we will give you an increase that will enable you to live there." They are entitled to be cared for in the mode and manner in which they have been accustomed to live among their friends.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words with reference to this case. It looks to me as if a good many of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] are pertinent. I do not blame the gentleman from Iowa for insisting on this bill, but what reason does he give for it? That every other widow of a brigadier-general in Iowa gets the same. He does not want any widows of brigadier-generals in Iowa discriminated against.

I appreciate that. I believe he said in his statement that some of them had been pensioned at $75 and some at $100. Now, then, on the same ground you ought to vote to increase from $50 all of those up to $100; bring them all up to the maximum rate. It seems to me this ought to be remedied by a general law if the Pension Committee makes it a rule to give to the widows of brigadier-generals $50. There ought not to be a special act in each case. Why not have a general law?

Mr. RAY of New York. We do not do it.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to make that statement.

Mr. LACEY. This committee has endeavored to proceed upon that line and fix $50 as the maximum rate where death was from disease or wound contracted in the service. They have adopted that as a rule, and this case comes up to the rule adopted by this committee.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I understood—that the committee had made such a rule.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me tell you that with this committee no widow of a general officer can get an increase of her pension above the maximum rate fixed by the general law unless she shows that she is in necessitous circumstances and needs that increase.

The fact that she is the widow of a general officer does not entitle her with the committee to any increase, and she does not get it unless there is proof that she is in necessitous circumstances and needs the increase of pension. We have bills of that character that have been laid one side. When they get old and become poor and in necessitous circumstances, so that it would take $50 to give them a comfortable living, then we give it to them, but not before.

Mr. SIMS. If this widow were the widow of a captain, would you insist on giving her a pension of $50?

Mr. RAY of New York. No. Under some circumstances, if the death of her husband had occurred in the service, we might increase her pension to $30 or $35, the maximum for a captain being $20, if her condition and surroundings, her physical condition and financial condition, were such that it required $30 or $35 a month to give her a decent and respectable support.

Mr. SIMS. Then I understand the gentleman to imply that the necessities of a widow depend somewhat on the rank of her husband in the service?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly that is the logical deduction from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. RAY of New York. To some extent that is the fact, because the widow's surroundings and mode of living are to be taken into consideration. Usually, not always, the widow of an officer of any considerable rank resides in a large town or city, where it costs more to live than out in the country. And we take that fact into consideration.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understood the gentleman to say that this widow had been living in the country.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; I did not say that. We take into consideration the widow's actual physical and financial condition and necessities in determining the amount that will afford her a comfortable and respectable support.

Mr. SIMS. Now, let me put to the gentleman, seriously, this question: If a distinction is to be made in favor of widows who live in towns or cities, will not that fact encourage widows living in the country to emigrate into the towns or cities?

Mr. RAY of New York. If a widow emigrates for such a purpose, she will not get any increase.

Mr. SIMS. What is the difference whether a widow already resides in town or whether she goes there from the country?

Mr. RAY of New York. A widow has no business to go from the country to the town and then ask an increase in view of the additional expense of living.

Mr. SIMS. We can not question the motive which may prompt the change of residence. According to the gentleman's logic, a town widow is entitled to a larger pension than a country widow, because of the greater cost of living.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all. I say that when the widow of a soldier has been accustomed to live in a city—when her friends and acquaintances are all there—the committee would regard that as an element in fixing the increase that should be allowed her. In other words, we would not deny to a widow residing in a town or city an increase of pension because she could go out upon a farm somewhere, away from her friends, and live upon the pension she was already receiving. Is not my argument clear to the gentleman?

Mr. SIMS. I see the gentleman's point, but I differ with him for this reason: I think the patriotism and honorable service of the soldier to the Government should count for as much in favor of the country widow as the town widow, and I can not conscientiously vote to make any distinction between such cases.

Mr. RAY of New York. But the necessities of the widow in the two cases may not be the same. In order to bring this matter home to the gentleman, let me suppose that he has a sister, the widow of a general officer; that she has always lived in a city; that her friends and acquaintances and relatives are all there. We will suppose that she is old and poor and sick and bedridden; we will suppose that her friends or relatives are not able to take care of her; we will suppose that to care for her properly would require $50 a month, if she is to continue her previous residence.

At the same time it may be that if she would remove to a farmhouse in the country, away from her friends and acquaintances, $30 a month might suffice to support her. Will it be said that the committee should not allow her $50 a month that she may continue to live in town with her friends because by removing 50 miles into the country, away from her friends, she might live on $30 a month?

Mr. SIMS. Personally my feeling for my sister might prompt me to make a distinction in her favor. But when acting as a member on this floor, voting taxes, and paying pensions, I have no right to make a distinction in favor of a widow who wants to live in a city and walk on a pavement as against another widow of an officer of like rank who lives in the country and is obliged to walk in the mud.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to follow the Committee on Invalid Pensions during this session, and I must say that the distinguished chairman of that committee has exercised a great deal of care and energy in the preparation of the bills which have come before us. But it seems to me that, being of a fine disposition and a kind nature, he has in some of these cases been overpersuaded, has been induced to overleap the mark, and is beginning now to bring in bills which seem to be a little extravagant.

For instance, at the last night pension session we had up a pension of $50 per month for General Bingham, a man who was only in a certain kind of service for seven months, as judge-advocate-general, sitting as a judge in courts-martial, and at the same time a member of this House, drawing $5,000 a year and yet performing no service. About all he did was to hang Mrs. Surratt. Yet an attempt was made to give him a pension of $50 per month for it. I was constrained to oppose that measure.

Mr. LACEY. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. The bill before the committee now is one that we personally investigated in the last Congress, as you will no doubt remember, and earnestly favored at that time, but it was not reached on the Calendar.

Mr. TALBERT. We will come to that. I was opposed to General Bingham having anything, because I did not think he deserved it; but after failing to have the bill laid upon the table I moved to reduce the pension to $25 a month, and that was carried. I stood by that and made no further objection. Then the same night a pension bill was discussed here and passed, giving to General McMillan an increase of pension from $30 to $50 a month, when it appeared in the report that he was drawing $1,800 a year in the Pension Department. Yet he was not satisfied.

I think that was wrong and that that ought not to have been done. I was willing to leave him his $30 a month and to let him still continue to draw his salary of $1,800. Beyond that I thought we should not go. Then we pensioned here the widow of General Leggett and the widow of General Stevenson and several others at $30 a month. I recollect a few nights ago there was considerable discussion and an attempt to raise one of the other of those to $50 a month. That was finally voted down.

Now, here comes another pension for the widow of a brigadier-general, asking that she be given $50 a month or that she be given $20 per month in addition to what she is now getting. What are the reasons given why this increase of pension should be made? Simply because her husband wore the epaulets, because he was a general, because he was a big dog. For that reason his widow must be granted more than anybody else. That is one of the reasons given.

Another reason was because she wanted to live in the city; and some gentleman, I believe the chairman of the committee, said that one living in the country, on a farm, the widow of a farmer who was a soldier, could live on less, but that, living in the city, the pension of this woman ought to be run up to $50 a month.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not true that if the same luxuries be provided they will cost more in the country than in the city?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, yes; because they will have to send in for them. Then the only reason that I can see that this widow must have $50 a month is because she is a widow of an officer and lives in the city. Therefore the taxpayers must pay her $50 a month, while the widow of a poor private, a true soldier who stood in the forefront of battle for four long years, who went into the red blaze of conflict every time he was commanded to go, and who finally fell and left his widow with nothing in the world except her labor—she must be content with eight or twelve dollars a month, and be discriminated against, while the officers, who were in bomb-proof positions possibly, or behind trees, saying, "Go ahead, boys," to these true-blue soldiers, are allowed $50.

I submit that it is not right. It is a wrong principle to actuate the minds of any of the members of this Congress. The whole tendency of this Government is against the interest of labor and the poor man and in the interest of the rich, in the interest of the aristocratic, in the interest of the officeholder, in the interest of the big dogs.

I think the time has come when the tide should turn and when the yeomanry of the country, the hoi polloi, as you may call them, the great mass of the people who bear the heat and burden of the day, should be taken into consideration as well as the élite of this country.

I am opposed to the passage of this bill and shall vote against it becoming a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee.

The question was taken and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULLIVAN demanded a division.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman is going to do that, I will move that the committee rise and report the bills that have been laid aside, with a favorable recommendation, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. LACEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MOODY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9642) granting an increase of pension to Michael Mahoney, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table; also, that they had had under consideration the bill (S. 1476) granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Samuel A. Rice, and had come to no conclusion thereon; also, that they had had under consideration the following bills:

H. R. 4651. For the relief of Jacob Shela, of Portsmouth, Ohio;

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 16, 1898.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

JOHN P. THOMAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 164) granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. KENNEY were appointed.

A bill (H. R. 8680) granting an increase of pension to William Tompkins; and A bill (H. R. 9043) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 149.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 149) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. TELLER. I think we ought to have a quorum of the Senate present, and I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested by the Senator from Colorado, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Deboe,	Mallory,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	Mantle,	Rawlins,
Berry,	Foraker,	Mason,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Gear,	Money,	Teller,
Cannon,	Hale,	Nelson,	Turley,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Turner,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Turpie,
Clay,	Kenney,	Pettus,	White.
Cullom,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.
Davis,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to state that my colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that it does not yet appear that there is not a quorum present. There has been no announcement of the result.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought there had been an announcement made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. The motion of the Senator from Arkansas is in order. Is there any objection to it? The Chair hears none, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is so directed.

Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. QUAY, Mr. PETTIGREW, and Mr. ROACH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is now present.

Mr. BACON. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am for peace, for a holy peace, for an everlasting peace, for peace with Spain, and peace with all the world. And the surest road to that peace is through the brazen gate of war. There is but one other road by which it can be honorably reached by the United States, and if only one other way by which it can be honorably attained, only one possible road which the American people will traverse to reach it, and that is by the absolute recession of the Spanish monarchy from all its claims of sovereignty over the Island of Cuba.

Mr. President, I had intended to discuss the question of intervention and the particular form which it should take, but in the brief moments which under the agreement we are allowed I shall be able only to say that I am for a declaration of intervention so decisive and so direct, so removed from all possibility of Executive change, so removed from all possibility of doubt in the mind of Spain as to what the American people mean when they declare that the war in Cuba must stop, that if Spain shall commit a further act of aggression after the American Congress has spoken in the name of 75,000,000 of freemen, the end inevitably will be war.

Mr. President, it will be a fatal error if at this time we shall repeat the mistake of two years ago and one year ago. Every declaration by the United States officially made has been accepted by Spain and has been complied with. Our prudence has been carried into the domain of folly. We have not asked enough nor in time. I agree with those Senators who have spoken, I agree with the committee, I agree with the fact and with the sentiment of all the people of the United States in appreciation of that fact, that had we spoken two years ago, had we spoken one year ago, in recognition of the belligerency of Cuba, our women would not now be wailing for their dead, sunk in Havana Harbor. If we shall fail now to do the courageous thing, the outspoken thing, God knows what result may flow to us and the world.

It is not my purpose to criticise the President of the United States. It is far less from my purpose to defend him here. Passionate rhetoric has been expended in answering the indictment which he himself helped to bring. It has three counts in it. One is made by the Committee on Foreign Relations, in which it says that had belligerent rights been accorded to the Cubans, the trouble would have been settled without intervention by the United States, and that means without the loss of our battle ship and our sailors and without the danger of war. The two other counts are made by the President himself in his message, one in which he declares that "The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained," while at the same time he declares against the recognition of the Republic of Cuba, which has destroyed all hope of the attainment of Spain's cruel purpose. The other count is in the declaration that intervention "involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest, as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement." No matter what accusation or innuendo may be directed against the President, no matter how much of the time of the Senate and the country may be consumed in defending him against a charge too well laid or it would not have needed such resentment, the case will go down to history and the people will judge whether the President of the United States in the year which has elapsed since his inauguration has been vacillating, without a purpose, without a policy, one thing to-day and another thing to-morrow, or whether he has been a man who throughout all the year was looking straight into the eye of infinite wisdom and gathering there strength for a course as resistless as the movement of the stars.

Mr. President, I am for the recognition of the existing government in Cuba because I believe in the logic of the report made by the committee. Every argument of that report is either in favor of the recognition of the existing republic or it is against any recognition of the Cuban people.

When we go to war to recognize the people of Cuba, when we go to war upon an issue which Spain has made before the world, we go to war to make Cuba free or we go to war for conquest. I care not how much the question may be obscured by long and adroit arguments upon international law, this fact remains. It is plain to every man who judges solely by the dictates of common sense. If we take possession of that island, no matter how holy our present intention to establish a stable government there, when we come as conquerors and after some time at least, Heaven alone knows now how long a time, the manipulators of political events in the world alone will then decree how long a time, we must hold possession of the island until some satisfactory government shall be established.

Mr. President, it has taken us three long years to come to the verge of recognition of a republic already there, a republic which has made the name of Gomez glorious throughout the world, a republic whose soldiers in the field have turned back the power of Spain. How long will it take us to recognize the next republic which will be established there? We who have had every vital interest, we who have had a commerce amounting to $100,000,000 a year with Cuba, we who have sympathy with the republic and with the aspiration for liberty, have failed to recognize that government in three years of warfare maintained heroically. How long will it take the governments of Europe to recognize the republic which we shall establish, when every vital interest which they have is against such recognition?

The President asks that we shall make a government capable of maintaining its international obligations. Judged by the record of the past three years, it would take a generation to make a republic there which could have international relations and obligations with Europe.

We have had one war of conquest, and only one, and the nation was sorely punished soon after. The historian may trace some connection between the war with Mexico and the war between the States, the most tremendous struggle recorded by history. Let us not make another.

Mr. President, the sensitiveness entertained here with regard to the prerogative of the Executive is, to my mind, misapplied and unnecessary. The Senate has by a majority vote on two occasions declared that recognition is a legislative right. It is a strange thing to me that always when we will to do a thing we can do it lawfully, with holy purpose, without intrusion into other rights, and when we will not to do it the argument is made so magnificently as to almost convince disbelievers that it is wrong. If we had the right to pass the belligerency resolutions which the Senate itself sent to the other body, then we have the right to pass the resolutions of the majority of the committee with the addition of the resolution of the minority of the committee.

It will be observed that the argument is now exactly the argument of two years ago and one year ago, an invocation of international law to restrain the people of the United States. It has been inquired here that if we should recognize the existing Republic of Cuba by what right would we enter Cuba? Upon whose invitation? Mr. President, upon whose invitation are we entering Cuba now? Upon the invitation of Spain, which, according to our own admission, is the lawful government? No; against the protest of Spain. Can we not enter Cuba against the protest, if it should be offered, of the insurgent government by the same right which dictates us now? It is above commercial interest, it is above partisanship, it is above international law. It is more than an invitation; it is a command. It was uttered from the Mount, "Blessed are the peacemakers;" and the United States, in obedience to that command, will enter Cuba against the protests of all the governments of the earth and make peace there forever.

Mr. President, let no man deceive himself with the thought that the contest is unworthy of our courage and our splendor. We enter war, if at all, with Spain, the jackal of nations, feasting upon a battlefield on the bodies of the dead slain there in heroic combat, and sending her midnight cry to the lion and the eagle of Europe to join her. We will emerge from that war after a contest Heaven knows of what length, and with foes. Every throne in Europe trembles at the breath of warfare. And that which drives Spain to external combat to avert internecine strife may possibly be sufficient to induce other nations to join her. Spain asks an alliance with Germany, with Austria-Hungary, with Russia, and also with England and France. Eliminating the two latter countries from consideration, the allied forces of Spain, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia are now on a peace footing of more than 2,000,000 men, with a navy of nearly 700 vessels, backed by a population, outside of the colonies, of 235,000,000.

Some men who do not favor these resolutions have expressed a fear of the consequences to us from armed intervention or mediation by European countries, and other men who do not favor these resolutions have expressed a fear of it lest the United States shall be written coward for destroying Spain. If we keep our motive pure and our purpose high, we will be sustained by Providence. We will vindicate ourselves to our consciences, to the wisdom and honor of the world, and to the day of judgment; and when the war shall have ended the United States will be able, I trust, to write a story of the deed in this one sentence: "The hand of God moved this country to destroy in Cuba the divine right of kings and establish there the diviner right of the people."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would not consume the time of the Senate this morning but for the fact that I think it highly important to direct attention to one or two matters that have been thus far overlooked. I am glad to see this hour come. I have been looking forward confidently for the last two years and a half to the time when the United States, in its majesty and its power, would declare that Spain must retire from this continent. But on the 7th of this month there took place in this capital city a scene that was never witnessed in the United States before, and I trust will never be witnessed again. On that day the minister of Austria, the ambassador of France, the ambassador of Germany, the ambassador of Great Britain, the chargé d'affaires of Italy, and the chargé d'affaires of Russia entered the White House, representing their respective Governments, without protest, and there presented to the people of the United States, through the President, this remarkable document:

The undersigned, representatives of Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Great Britain, Italy, and Russia, duly authorized in that behalf, address, in the name of their respective governments, a pressing appeal to the feelings of humanity and moderation of the President and of the American people in their existing differences with Spain. They earnestly hope that further negotiations will lead to an agreement which, while securing the maintenance of peace, will afford all necessary guaranties for the reestablishment of order in Cuba.

The powers do not doubt that the humanitarian and purely disinterested character of this representation will be fully recognised and appreciated by the American nation.

To that the President responded in a short address, as follows:

The Government of the United States recognizes the good will which has prompted the friendly communication of the representatives of Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Great Britain, Italy, and Russia, as set forth in the address of your excellencies, and shares the hope therein expressed that the outcome of the situation in Cuba may be the maintenance of peace between the United States and Spain by affording the necessary guaranties for the reestablishment of order in the island, so terminating the chronic condition of disturbance there which so deeply injures the interests and menaces the tranquillity of the American nation by the character and consequences of the struggle thus kept at our doors, besides shocking its sentiment of humanity.

The Government of the United States appreciates the humanitarian and disinterested character of the communication now made on behalf of the powers named, and for its part is confident that equal appreciation will be shown for its own earnest and unselfish endeavors to fulfill a duty to humanity by ending a situation the indefinite prolongation of which has become insufferable.

Mr. President, this was most remarkable. I have not been able to find its similitude or parallel in the history of this country, and I am informed by Senators who have served for many years that they have never known of an instance of the kind before.

I want to register my protest against the so-called powers of Europe entering the White House of the United States and telling the American people what they shall do respecting a policy to be pursued on this hemisphere. I can not understand, when the papers were alive with the story that this was to take place, why the President of the United States or some other person in authority did not indicate to the powers that the presentation of a paper of that kind would be a violation of the traditions and the doctrines of this country. They know we do not tolerate foreign interference in our affairs.

But, Mr. President, this was the first step taken, evidently with the consent of the Administration, looking to the breaking down entirely of the policy of this nation and of the Monroe doctrine. We are capable of caring for ourselves. We are not enjoying our liberty to-day because Europe or the powers desire us to enjoy it. They would destroy a republican form of government this moment if they had the power to do so. While I will not inveigh against them at this or at any other time, I want it to be distinctly understood, so far as my voice in the Senate is concerned, and so far as my influence as a citizen may go, I will be found registering an unalterable protest against the recurrence of such a scene; and we are informed further since this note was received that the powers are mustering themselves for another assault on the White House; they are to go again to register, in more emphatic language than is here contained, their protest against our course respecting the Island of Cuba. So much for that matter.

Then, Mr. President, we have had a great variety of international law quoted and referred to in this Chamber during this discussion. I am not much of an international lawyer—and, anticipating what some one may think, I will say that I am not much of a lawyer of any kind—but I would not believe a man who had all the wisdom of Solomon if he would declare to me on his solemn oath that a revolutionary government in Cuba, among her own people, that would overthrow the reigning dynasty there, and recognized by us, would not destroy every obligation of that island, so far as the world is concerned, of the territory occupied by it. Sir, when a people through revolution destroy the reigning government and set up one of their own different in form, they take their title to the territory they control free from the obligations of the preceding sovereignty. So it is that when one sovereignty invades the territory of another and overthrows the reigning government and itself sets up a sovereignty, it assumes and is liable for the obligations of the sovereignty overthrown.

There is the keynote to the situation in this discussion. If the resolution of the minority shall prevail, it will be impossible to make this Government responsible for the Spanish-Cuban debt. If we intervene without recognizing the existence of the Cuban Republic, it will not be twenty-four months until Europe will be inviting us to an international arbitration to determine the liability of the United States for the Spanish-Cuban indebtedness.

Mr. President, it is important that we should bear these distinctions in mind. If we adopt the majority resolution, let us not go to the people a year or two from now and say, "Well, we did not understand the force of the resolution." When the men who are hovering over this Capitol, as vultures over a carrion, come here to beseech Congress to assume responsibility for the Spanish-Cuban indebtedness, now amounting to $519,000,000, let us not say we were not aware of our liability. It is because we are liable, it is because the law of nations will hold us liable, that we find this fierce contest waged against the proposed amendment recognizing the existence of the present Republic of Cuba.

Mr. President, without consuming time, I ask to print as a part of my remarks an editorial from the New York Commercial of the 4th of this month, stating in detail an account of the Cuban indebtedness, its different forms and amounts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

[New York Commercial, Monday, April 4, 1898.]

SPAIN'S CUBAN DEBT.

The possibility that the indebtedness contracted by Spain in its administration of Cuba may play a part in the ultimate outcome of the Cuban question renders a succinct statement of what the debt consists of, how it was contracted, and where it is held of more than ordinary interest at this juncture. It may be mentioned at the outset that for bookkeeping purposes the Cuban treasury has been kept separate from that of the peninsula. This is, of course, a mere fiction, since Cuba, in spite of the severe taxation imposed upon it, has long been unable to meet the heavy charges for interest and sinking funds, and even before the present revolution in the island began the guaranty of the Spanish treasury and of portions of the peninsula revenues were all that gave any value to the several issues of Spanish-Cuban bonds.

These borrowings on the part of Spain for the account of Cuba consist of three distinct loans and the floating debt of the insular treasury. The first loan was made in 1886, and was nominally for $124,000,000 at 6 per cent. There are $117,970,000 of the bonds outstanding, and the interest and sinking-fund charges per annum are $7,888,200. In 1890 a new 5 per cent Cuban loan, with the usual Spanish guaranty, was created, nominally to refund the old 6 per cent loan and pay off the floating debt, which consisted of advances from the Spanish treasury. The refunding part of the operation was never completed, and when the present war on the island broke out, the bonds thus reserved were, of course, used to defray Spain's war expenses. At present there are about $171,000,000 of the loan of 1890 outstanding, involving interest and sinking-fund charges of $9,700,000 per annum. Both the loan of 1886 and that of 1890 are payable, principal and interest, in gold.

The next Cuban loan was created in 1896, and as the insular revenues were exhausted, the guaranty of the imperial treasury had to be supplemented by a positive lien upon the Spanish customs receipts. This loan, it is also to be noted, is payable not in gold, but in silver pesetas. It consists of $160,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds, which have been issued from time to time during the past three years, mainly by the method of obtaining advances upon them from the Bank of Spain, which institution, to use a colloquial phrase, has carried the bag through the whole of Spain's desperate effort to obtain possession of its revolted colony. The charges upon the loan of 1896-1898, which was to be redeemed or refunded in eight years, amount to $26,000,000 per annum. Besides this, the latest returns from Madrid on the condition of the Cuban treasury places its floating indebtedness, consisting in the main of overdue salaries, pay of troops, and other expenses, at some $70,000,000.

Thus the entire Spanish-Cuban debt is composed of the two gold loans, amounting to $289,000,000, and carrying annual charges of $17,500,000 gold, the silver loan of $160,000,000, with annual charges of $26,000,000, and the floating debt of $70,000,000. The total of the debt of $519,000,000, to which may be added the heavy expenditures made by the Spanish treasury since the beginning of the insurrection. Contrary to the general opinion, the bulk of the three Cuban loans are held in Spain, and not in Paris or London. It would, therefore, seem that the anxiety which the Paris market is said to feel, and which it has been suggested might lead to intervention by the French, is not wholly on account of French ownership of the Spanish-Cuban debt, but probably anxiety as to the effect of the conflict with Cuba and the further possible results of interference by the United States on the position of Spain itself and the solvency of its peninsular treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. That account shows that the total indebtedness, as I said, is, in round numbers, $519,000,000. Seventy million dollars of that is floating debt; the remainder is bonded indebtedness. The bonded indebtedness issued during hostilities is something like $175,000,000, diverted refunding bonds, and the remainder was issued long before hostilities began. The Spanish treasury keeps a distinct and separate account with the Island of Cuba.

Mr. President, these are all the propositions to which I desire to direct attention at this time. I want the people of the United States to know that Congress understands very distinctly and very well that, if we intervene in the affairs of Cuba without recognizing the political existence of the present republic or some hostile government there, we do so with the full knowledge that we will be called upon hereafter to pay the Spanish-Cuban debt; and I may be uncharitable enough—making no reference to what has been said in this Chamber—to believe that that is the fixed and settled policy in some quarters in this city.

So far as the course of the President of the United States is concerned, I want to say I have the utmost confidence in his good faith and good intentions. I would not suffer myself to question his patriotism. I do not agree with his message; I do not agree with the policy thus far manifested by him of shirking responsibility. I do not think he has the wisest advisers in the world, nor do I think that all his advisers are patriotic men, looking alone to the glory and the interest of the country in what they do.

But, Mr. President, much as I differ from the President respecting great national problems—and the time will never come in his life and mine when we will agree—if he will look this great question resolutely in the face from now on, turning neither to the right nor to the left, having constantly the glory and the honor of his country in view and refraining from a policy of procrastination, drive Spain from this continent, I will forget for the time being my partisanship and I will do all I can to support him in a patriotic and conscientious spirit. I will strengthen his arms. But, Mr. President, we want resolution, determination, at the head of the Government. When the President puts his hand to the plow he must not turn back, and I will be found at his side until the contest is at an end.

Some Senators on the other side of the Chamber have pictured to us the consequences of war. There are a few of us who know what war means. There are over twenty gentlemen in this Chamber who know what war means. Some of us, Mr. President, know what war means, and to carry a musket in the ranks as a private soldier, where the fighting is done and where the suffering takes place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret it, Mr. President.

Mr. MORGAN. We all do.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, it is very difficult to compress an hour's argument into fifteen minutes, and therefore I ask leave of the Senate to insert in my remarks some references that I desire to make without reading them.

Mr. FRYE. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. BURROWS. To insert in my remarks some references which I desire to make without reading them.

Mr. FRYE. I understood it to be a request to insert a speech in the RECORD without delivering it.

Mr. BURROWS. No; I wish I could do that and relieve the Senator from Maine of the annoyance of listening to me.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Michigan only desires to submit certain quotations and citations to be printed in his remarks without reading.

Mr. CHANDLER. Simply to insert some references without reading them.

Mr. BURROWS. That is all.

Mr. FRYE. I simply misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to the request of the Senator, and I also suggest that his time shall not begin to run until he commences to speak.

Mr. BURROWS. I simply wish to insert some quotations from authors without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, after a half century of peace with all the nations of the world, we stand to-day at the threshold of a foreign war. The President of the United States, with exalted patriotism and unquestioned endeavor, has sought by every honorable means at his command to avert so dire a calamity. War with Spain, however, seems inevitable. The land and naval forces of the two nations are already marshaling for the conflict.

At such an hour we owe it to ourselves, to posterity, and to mankind to make known the reasons which force us to this final arbitrament of the sword. For what we do at this hour will be finally tried not in the hot heat of the passions of to-day, but in the cooler judgment of to-morrow.

Why, then, this war? The President in his message of April 11 has made answer so clear and comprehensive that it will stand in history as an indictment against Spain, for which she is justly called to the bar of public judgment.

By every principle of international law, to which all nations must yield implicit obedience or forfeit the considerate regard of the great family of civilized nations, the Kingdom of Spain was bound so long as she exercises sovereignty over the Island of Cuba and her people to so administer the affairs of government therein as not to jeopardize the interests or violate the rights of other states, nor, in the language of a great writer on international law, "permit an excess of injustice and cruelty which deeply wounds our customs and our civilization." Spain has failed to discharge her obligations in this regard.

In the language of the President—

> The present revolution is but the successor of other similar insurrections which have occurred in Cuba against the dominion of Spain, extending over a period of nearly half a century, each of which during its progress has subjected the United States to great effort and expense in enforcing its neutrality laws, caused great losses to American trade and commerce, produced irritation and annoyance and disturbance among our citizens, and by the exercise of cruel, barbarous, and uncivilized practices of warfare shocked the sensibilities and offended the humane sympathies of our people.

Epitomizing this indictment, the Island of Cuba, under Spanish domination, has been "ravaged by fire and sword; a prosperous community reduced to want; its commerce paralyzed; its productiveness diminished; its fields laid waste; its mills in ruin, and its people perishing by tens of thousands from hunger and destitution." Under our neutrality laws, which we have sought in good faith to enforce in observance of our international obligations, we have been put to the enormous expense of "policing our own waters." "Our trade has suffered," "the capital invested by our citizens has been largely lost, and a spirit of unrest created among our own citizens, which has diverted the attention of our people from the peaceful pursuits of life."

The peasantry have been driven into the towns, provisions interdicted, fields laid waste, dwellings unroofed and fired, mills destroyed, and the land made desolate and unfit for human habitation, while untold thousands of woman and children have been starved to death as the effect of the order of reconcentration, which, in the language of the President, "worked its predestined results." Well does President McKinley say in this connection: "This is not civilized warfare; it is extermination, and the only peace it will beget is that of the wilderness and the grave." And last, though not least of the counts in this fearful indictment, a majestic battle ship of the Republic while moored in the harbor of Havana and entitled to the protection of the Spanish authorities was hurled to destruction with its human cargo, if not by the direction of the Spanish Government, at least, it is believed, with the consent and connivance of her officials.

Such, Mr. President, is the deplorable and unquestioned condition of affairs in the Island of Cuba. Is it any wonder that the President of the United States, in reviewing this frightful record of maladministration and crime, should exclaim in the fullness of his soul:

> In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests, which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

Since President McKinley assumed the duties of his great office he has sought by every honorable means in his power to bring about an amelioration of the condition of affairs in Cuba, restoring peace and order to that unhappy people, without resorting to the dire extremity of war. In this he has been unable to succeed, and while meeting with disappointments abroad he has been subjected to cruel, unjust criticism at home. I have no doubt that while carrying the great weight of responsibility in this awful crisis, knowing he had the fate of 75,000,000 people in his hands, he has felt much as Abraham Lincoln did when visited by a delegation criticising his course, he exclaimed:

Gentlemen, suppose all the property you were worth was in gold and you had put it in the hands of Blondin to carry across the Niagara River on a rope. Would you shake the cable or keep shouting out to him: "Blondin, stand up a little straighter; Blondin, stoop a little more; go a little faster; lean a little more to the north; lean a little more to the south?"

No, you would hold your breath as well as your tongue, and keep your hands off until he was safe over. The Government are carrying an immense weight. Untold treasures are in their hands. They are doing the very best they can. Don't badger them. Keep silence, and we'll get you safe across.

Gentlemen would do well to imitate the patriotism of Benjamin Harrison, who, when asked in regard to the present emergency and as to whether he had read the President's message, replied:

Yes, I have read it; but I do not care to express an opinion on it. When a pilot is hired to steer a ship through the rapids it does more harm than good for persons to begin yelling at him and telling him how to steer.

We can confidently trust the man, his courage and patriotism, who as a boy braved the storm of battle for four years, won advancement from private to major, and of whom his commander, General Hayes, said:

The night was never too dark; the weather was never too cold; there was no sleet, or storm, or hail, or snow, or rain that was in the way of his prompt and efficient performance of duty.

He will do his duty now. His name and fame will endure when his traducers are forgotten. History will say of him, as Canning said of Washington, "He had the courage to be wise; he dared to be unpopular."

We agree with the President that this war must stop. But how to stop it has become the sole issue and the only point of contention. Shall it be by intervention or independence, or both? If war must come, it is of the highest moment that we plant ourselves upon ground so high and impregnable as to be secure from the assaults of adverse criticism and command the supporting judgment of the civilized nations of the world. This the President of the United States invites us to do by recommending armed intervention in the Island of Cuba, and his reasons therefor are so potent and comprehensive that I beg to insert them in my remarks:

The forcible intervention of the United States as a neutral to stop the war, according to the large dictates of humanity and following many historical precedents where neighboring states have interfered to check the hopeless sacrifices of life by internecine conflicts beyond their borders, is justifiable on rational grounds. It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

WHY WE SHOULD ACT.

The grounds for such intervention may be briefly summarized as follows:

First. In the cause of humanity and to put an end to the barbarities, bloodshed, starvation, and horrible miseries now existing there, and which the parties to the conflict are either unable or unwilling to stop or mitigate. It is no answer to say this is all in another country, belonging to another nation, and is therefore none of our business. It is specially our duty, for it is right at our door.

Second. We owe it to our citizens in Cuba to afford them that protection and indemnity for life and property, which no government there can or will afford, and to that end to terminate the conditions that deprive them of legal protection.

Third. The right to intervene may be justified by the very serious injury to the commerce, trade, and business of our people, and by the wanton destruction of property and devastation of the island.

Fourth. And which is of the utmost importance. The present condition of affairs in Cuba is a constant menace to our peace, and entails upon this Government an enormous expense. With such a conflict waged for years in an island so near us, and with which our people have such trade and business relations—when the lives and liberty of our citizens are in constant danger and their property destroyed and themselves ruined—where our trading vessels are liable to seizure and are seized at our very door by warships of a foreign nation, the expeditions of filibustering that we are powerless to prevent altogether, and the irritating questions and entanglements thus arising—all these and others that I need not mention, with the resulting strained relations, are a constant menace to our peace, and compel us to keep on a semi-war footing with a nation with which we are at peace.

The House of Representatives, if I may be permitted to speak of the coordinate branch of the Congress, has already approved of the remedy suggested by the President, with but 19 dissenting votes, and as far as the right of intervention is concerned, there is scarcely a dissenting voice in this Chamber, but there are those who hold to the belief that independence and intervention should go hand in hand.

Of course a bare declaration of independence, unaccompanied by any act on the part of the United States to enforce and secure such independence, would be an idle ceremony; hence those who advocate the recognition of the Cuban Republic as a sovereignty couple with it the armed intervention of the United States in the support of such sovereignty.

While I will go as "far as who goes farthest" to secure the independence of Cuba, yet I am anxious to avoid a declaration of policy which I am sure will not stand the test of reason or find support in the established precedents of nations. To recognize the Cuban insurgents as a sovereign and independent nationality requires a status which they do not, in my judgment, possess, and to give such recognition when unwarranted will weaken our cause in the public judgment.

I desire to quote from Mr. Pomeroy, a recognized authority on international law, in support of this contention.

After noting the various stages of a revolt from the parent state from the initial moment to the consummation of independence and the law applicable to each of such conditions, and that recognition is, after all, but a declaration or acknowledgment of an established fact, the author proceeds to note the several kinds of recognition applicable to the various stages of a revolution. He says:

Applying these principles, which are self-evident, we find that the international law adopts and describes three grades of recognition, as follows:

First. Recognition of belligerency, or mere recognition of the revolted people, as an aggregate of persons, who are carrying on a proper war, and are, therefore, in fact, clothed with belligerent rights and duties.

Second. Virtual or de facto recognition, which amounts to such an admission of the existence of the revolted community as a de facto state as is implied by the recognition of its commercial flag and the appointment of consuls in its commercial ports.

Third. Formal or absolute recognition, which, of course, implies a complete admission of the existence of a new state as one of the family of nations, entitled to send and receive ambassadors, enter into treaties, and the like.

The author then proceeds to discuss at length the conditions that would warrant the recognition of belligerency and also a "virtual recognition," and finally to lay down the law governing cases of recognition of the independence of a new sovereignty. As the pending resolution proposes to accord to the people of Cuba the character of a republic, and so recognize them as absolutely separated from and independent of the sovereignty of Spain, I will be pardoned for quoting at some length, not only from this author but also from other recognized authorities, for the purpose of showing the proposed action has no warrant in international law or the practice of nations.

Under the heading "Formal, absolute recognition of independence and sovereignty," Mr. Pomeroy says:

This is the final act which admits a community as an equal into the family of nations, with all the international rights which flow from the law. Of course this highest grade includes all the others and swallows them up by conferring all the special rights and privileges which they do.

When the parent state has itself ceased its attempts at coercion, and has recognized the independence and sovereignty of its revolted subjects, of course there is no difficulty as to the course of other powers. The country most interested having taken the final step, and having admitted the existence of the new state, having conceded to its former subjects not only de facto but de jure separate national existence, there is nothing left for other powers but to follow the example. At least such is the uniform practice of all states which profess to be guided by the rules of international law.

The important, delicate, and often difficult question will arise when the parent state has refused to recognize the independence of its revolted subjects and still asserts its de jure authority over them. Under such circumstances many other nations, disregarding the attitude of the parent state, take the final step and make a formal, absolute recognition of the independence, sovereignty, and equality of the new society, thus treating it, so far as they are concerned, as de jure as well as de facto a state. All writers upon international law answer this question in the affirmative, and assert that such recognition, when properly made, gives no just cause of offense to the parent state. The universal practice of civilized nations is in perfect accordance with these doctrines of the publicists.

Under what circumstances, then, is such a formal recognition justifiable? As we have seen, all grades of recognition are merely public admissions of the existence of a fact without any inquiry as to whether that fact ought to have existed. Thus, one grade admits a community existing capable of carrying on war; the second admits a community existing having commercial relations and capable of maintaining them for the time being; the third admits a society as existing which is, in fact, independent and sovereign. When this fact is patent, the recognition is not only justifiable, but should be given. On the contrary, until the independence has become actual, the recognition of it would be the mere assertion of an untruth and a grave moral injury to the parent state—a grave breach of international comity, at least.

This grade of recognition necessarily implies that, in the opinion of the nation recognizing, the revolted community has completely succeeded in establishing its actual independence and the parent state has completely failed in its attempt at coercion, and that all further attempts will be equally unsuccessful. There must, therefore, be a very different state of circumstances to warrant this grade of recognition than is sufficient to justify either of the lesser grades. The revolted province must have been able to maintain its integrity, its government, its exclusive control, over a definite country. It must have entirely repelled all attempts of the parent state to recover that country or to exercise jurisdiction therein. Further still, the parent state must have either virtually ceased to make any organized attempts to recover its hold and reassert its dominion, or it must be evident that these attempts will be fruitless. * * *

The effect of such recognition is to admit the new state into the family of nations and to clothe it with all international rights. As a consequence, its national and commercial flag will be recognized; treaties will be made with it; ambassadors sent to and by it; it would be able to wage proper war, etc.

The author then quotes the opinion of recognized authorities on international law in support of his views, and among them Phillimore, who, in summing up the discussion, says:

Speaking generally, two facts should occur before this grave step be taken:

First. The practical cessation of hostilities on the part of the old state, which may long precede the theoretical renunciation of her rights over the revolted member of her former dominions.

Second. There should occur the consolidation of the new state, so far, at least, as to be in a condition of maintaining international relations with other countries—an absolute, bona fide possession of independence as a separte kingdom, not the enjoyment of perfect and undisturbed internal tranquillity, a test too severe for many of the oldest kingdoms; but there should be the existence of a government acknowledged by the people over whom it is set, and ready and able to prove its responsibility for their conduct when they come in contact with foreign nations.

The author then cites approvingly the views of Mr. Dana, as follows:

But with reference to a final recognition by a general treaty, or by the establishing of full diplomatic intercourse, a more positive rule can be laid down. The only test required is that the new state shall be in fact what the recognizing state assumes it to be. * * * It is not necessary that the parent state or the deposed dynasty should have ceased from all efforts to regain its power. On the other hand, it is necessary that the contest should have been virtually decided.

The author then closes his admirable lecture on the subject with the following reference to our own history and his view of the law applicable thereto:

This subject will be concluded by another reference to our late history. Would a formal recognition by a foreign power of the independence of the Confederate States have been in accordance with the rules of the international law as indicated by the practice of nations? I answer, most decidedly no. At any period of the contest, had a third country acknowledged the seceding States as independent, it would have done an act entirely without precedent in the history of the world.

The mere length of the contest may be unimportant; independence may be practically won in a short, decisive struggle of a few months, or it may be fought for through years of varying success; but all authorities are agreed that the independence must be virtually won. There was no time during our late war when the United States intermitted their efforts, no time when the Government and the people were not fully determined to press forward in their endeavors. Had a foreign power recognized the independence of the Confederacy, our Government would have had ample ground for breaking off at once all diplomatic intercourse with that power, even if the act would not have warranted graver measures of redress.

While all writers on international law recognize the right and duty of established nations to recognize a new sovereignty, I think the conditions upon which such recognition can take place and be justified were never more clearly and forcefully stated than by General Grant in 1875, when in a message to Congress he gave reasons for not recognizing the independence of the then insurgent forces in Cuba. Let me quote from that message:

INDEPENDENCE.

In contests of this nature, where a considerable body of people who have attempted to free themselves of the control of the superior government have reached such point in occupation of territory, in power, and in general organization as to constitute in fact a body politic, having a government in substance as well as in name, possessed of the elements of stability, and equipped with the machinery for the administration of internal policy and the execution of its laws, prepared and able to administer justice at home, as well as in its dealings with other powers, it is within the province of those other powers to recognize its existence as a new and independent nation. In such cases other nations simply deal with an actually existing condition of things and recognize as one of the powers of the earth that body politic which, possessing the necessary elements, has in fact become a new power. In a word, the creation of a new state is a fact.

To establish the condition of things essential to the recognition of this fact there must be a people occupying a known territory, united under some known and defined form of government, acknowledged by those subject thereto, in which the functions of government are administered by usual methods, competent to mete out justice to citizens and strangers, to afford remedies for public and for private wrongs, and able to assume the correlative international obligations, and capable of performing the corresponding international duties resulting from its acquisition of the rights of sovereignty. A power should exist complete in its organization, ready to take and able to maintain its place among the nations of the earth.

While conscious that the insurrection in Cuba has shown a strength and endurance which make it at least doubtful whether it be in the power of Spain to subdue it, it seems unquestionable that no such civil organization exists which may be recognized as an independent government capable of performing its international obligations and entitled to be treated as one of the powers of the earth. A recognition under such circumstances would be inconsistent with the facts, and would compel the power granting it soon to support by force the government to which it had really given its only claim of existence. In my judgment, the United States should adhere to the policy and the principles which have heretofore been its sure and safe guides in like contests between revolting colonies and their mother country, and, acting only upon the clearest evidence, should avoid any possibility of suspicion or of imputation.

In the light of this statement, which I believe to be the crystallization of the law on this subject, it remains only to inquire whether the present insurrection in Cuba has reached a condition of government which entitles it to assume a place among the nations of the earth as a new sovereignty. The Senator from Ohio says they have a president, a vice-president, and secretaries of state, a capital, and a constitution. Grant it; yet this does not constitute a sovereignty.

There must be something more than designated officials; there must be an active, living organism, capable of administrating justice at home, discharging the obligations of international life. Have the insurgents such a government? I have sought for information upon this subject outside the parties immediately interested to find, if possible, the exact status of what the insurgents are pleased to call their government. The last official information upon this subject I find in the report of Secretary Olney, of December 7, 1896, a little over a year ago. I beg to quote:

No prominent seaport has been attacked by the insurgents or even menaced beyond occasional raids upon the outskirts. A large part of the 2,200 miles of the irregular coast line of Cuba, comprising the comparatively unsettled stretches of its western extremity and the inhospitable mountain shores of its eastern part, is practically in the hands of the revolutionists.

The character of these shores, filled to the westward with shallow indentations inaccessible to any but light vessels of small tonnage, and to the eastward with rocky nooks dangerous to approach by night and affording insecure anchorage for larger craft, lends itself peculiarly to the guerrilla warfare of the interior, so that the insurgents, being relieved of the need of maintaining and garrisoning points upon the coast, are effectively able to utilize a considerable part of it as occasion offers to communicate with the outside world and to receive clandestine supplies of men, arms, and ammunition.

So far as our information shows, there is not only no effective local government by the insurgents in the territories they overrun, but there is not even a tangible pretense to established administration anywhere. Their organization, confined to the shifting exigencies of the military operations of the hour, is nomadic, without definite centers and lacking the most elementary features of municipal government. There nowhere appears the nucleus of statehood. The machinery for exercising the legitimate rights and powers of sovereignty and responding to the obligations which de facto sovereignty entails in the face of equal rights of other states, is conspicuously lacking. It is not possible to discern a homogeneous political entity, possessing and exercising the functions of administration and capable, if left to itself, of maintaining orderly government in its own territory and sustaining normal relations with the external family of governments.

To illustrate these conditions, the insurgent chiefs assert the military power to compel peaceable citizens of the United States within their reach to desist from planting or grinding cane, under the decreed penalty of death and of destruction of their crops and mills; but the measure is one of sheer force, without justification under public law. The wrongs so committed against the citizens of a foreign State are without an international forum of redress to which the Government of the United States may have recourse as regards its relation to the perpetrators. The acts are those of anarchy, and in default of the responsibilities of de facto statehood in the case, there remains only the territorial accountability of the titular sovereign within the limits of its competency to repress the wrongs complained of.

In opposition to the nomadic control of the interior and the undefended coast by the insurgents, the Spanish authority continues in the capital cities and the seaports. Its garrisons are there established; from them its naval operations are directed and executed. Most of its functions proceed as in time of peace. Its customs and municipal revenues are regularly collected, and with exception of the temporary restraints, alleged to be due to the admitted existence of a state of hostilities, foreign commerce with the island is kept up, although largely diminished by the natural contraction of the Cuban market of supply and demand. As to those parts of the island with which this country and its citizens maintain legitimately normal intercourse, the Spanish power is supreme, although often exercised in a vexatious and arbitrary way, calling for just remonstrance.

* * * * * * *

And on the other a nomadic association without the insignia of orderly government and strong only to wage harassing warfare in the interior.

* * * * * * *

The insurgent authority, as has been seen, finds no regular administrative expression; it is asserted only by the sporadic and irresponsible force of arms.

But why multiply authorities? The insurgents themselves in their constitution adopted only last October, but six months ago, acknowledge they were not in possession of a government, but that a free republic was only in anticipation.

I quote from that constitution:

We, the representatives of the Cuban people, freely meeting in constituent assembly, convoked by virtue of the mandate contained in the constitution of the 16th of September, 1895, ratify our firm and unshakable resolve of obtaining the absolute and immediate independence of the island, in order to establish in it a Democratic republic, and inspiring ourselves in the present necessities of the revolution; we decree the following:

CONSTITUTION OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA.

TITLE I.—Of the territory and of citizenship.

ARTICLE 1. The Republic of Cuba will embrace all the territory occupied by the Island of Cuba and the adjacent islands and keys. A law will determine the division of the territory.

Do we propose to declare that an established fact which the insurgents themselves in their fundamental law affirm to be only a hope yet to be realized?

Mr. President, I can not bring myself to believe, much as I would be delighted so to do, that the status of the insurgents in the Island of Cuba is such as would justify us, in the light of authority and precedent, in recognizing their independence, and I am apprehensive that to do so would weaken our cause among the nations of the earth and perhaps involve us in unforeseen complications. If we recognize the independence of the insurgents in Cuba before their independence is established as a matter of fact, may not the other nations of the earth having possessions in the Western Hemisphere see in this step a menace to their own colonial sovereignty and as a matter of self-protection ally themselves, in sympathy at least, with the Kingdom of Spain? If such should be the case, it would be most unfortunate. How much better, wiser, and safer to take a beaten track, illumined with the light of precedent and practice, than to enter upon any uncertain way beset with unseen danger and terminating, possibly, in disaster.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Senate will kindly give me one minute more, I shall conclude.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may be permitted to finish his speech.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall not occupy probably more than a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. I am for intervention, therefore, and I agree with the President in his recommendation, because I believe that to be a step sanctioned by precedent and the practice of nations, and will bring to us the approving judgment of all the nations of Christendom. More than that, I believe in it because it is sure to accomplish independence for the people of Cuba—the great end desired by all—and establish for them a free and stable government.

Intervention, too, is a peaceful instrumentality. Its very name "intervention," "to come between," is the essence of peace. Such a step is not a hostile act, unless one of the parties to the contest shall see fit to so regard it. It is proposed to enter the Island of Cuba with the armed forces of the United States for the purpose of restoring order on the one hand, while ministering with the other the necessities of life to her starving people. If Spain should resist our efforts in this regard she herself would become the aggressor, and in such a conflict she would lose the sympathy and support of the Christian world.

It would, therefore, in case of intervention, be peace or war, as she might prefer. That she would resist our efforts is undoubtedly true, and the issue would then be made up between Spain and the United States and the military forces of the United States would be compelled, in the interest of peace, good government, and humanity, to prosecute the contest until Spain should yield her sovereignty in that island. This much accomplished, is it not plain that the way to independence for the Cuban people would be speedily opened.

Having expelled from the island one of the contending parties and restored peace, so far as that party is concerned, there would be nothing remaining for the United States to do but to say to the insurgents and the inhabitants of Cuba: "You, too, must keep the peace, restore order in this island, return to your farms, rebuild your homes under a government of your own choice," and when this shall be accomplished and the Republic of Cuba becomes a sovereignty in fact as well as in name, peace and order restored, the United States Government would withdraw her forces and welcome into the family of nations the Republic of Cuba.

We will have thus accomplished the desire of her people and escaped the criticism and secured the approving judgment of the world. With this end in view, I shall cheerfully vote for the recommendation of the President to be clothed with power to intervene in the Island of Cuba with the land and naval forces of the United States, to the end that a stable government may be formed within her borders by her own people, capable of establishing and maintaining peace at home and assuming the obligations of international life. To the consummation of this high purpose we ought to move with united effort. There should be no discordant notes.

As we opened our Treasury to feed the Cuban poor and without a dissenting vote expressed our confidence in the Executive by placing $50,000,000 in his hands to enable him to prepare for national defense, let us not now, when the supreme moment for action comes and we are ready, weaken our cause by divided council. Unity of action now is worth a hundred battle ships and unnumbered legions. Neither party spirit nor personal ambition should find a place in this high transaction. They belong to other times and other occasions. Let us sustain the Executive and the Army and Navy under his command as they move forward on land and sea to establish peace, order, and good government in the Island of Cuba and set her star in the galaxy of nations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I rise to a question of order. There was a unanimous-consent agreement last night that debate should be limited to fifteen minutes to each Senator. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] was cut off in the midst of a sentence, and there was no request made that he be permitted to finish it; and I shall object to any deviation from this rule for the balance of the day. Senators must cease at the end of the fifteen minutes, except in the case of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, what I have to say will be briefly said. The time for oratory and impassioned utterance has passed. The time has never been for hot words, for epithets, for intemperate speech. Oratory will not bombard Morro Castle. Stinging words, ungracious and unjust epithets may reach and wound the President of the United States, but they will not pierce the armor of Spanish battle ships.

I wish first to state my position and my conviction so clearly that I shall not be and can not be misinterpreted or misunderstood. I shall not pause to frame the indictment upon which we proceed to the arbitrament of war. The reasons why the present conditions in Cuba must cease are known to all mankind, and they are set forth clearly, forcibly, and patriotically in the message of the President of the United States. Those conditions have imperiled our peace, inflicted unbearable injuries upon us, are inconsistent with our commercial and national interests, outrage every sentiment of humanity, impede and make against civilization. They must end. With this conviction, and it is unalterable, I have hoped and until recently believed that the end might be accomplished without war, without the burdens and losses of war.

I believe to-day that what in common with all American citizens I thus desire might have been accomplished peacefully had it not been for the intemperate, inflammatory statements and misstatements of those who from the first have planned and desired to plunge this country into war. I have not been among those who desire war. I would, if possible, have averted it, never for a moment losing sight of the purposes to be accomplished; and I pray the All-wise and Almighty Disposer of events that there may be some way found to put an end to the conditions in Cuba without war. I have no apology to offer for this. When the hot blood of the present hour, when the unreasoning and unthinking sentiment for blood, shall have passed, the man who shall have sought peace with honor will find his indorsement in the hearts of the American people.

I have only unstinted praise to bestow upon and the heartiest thanks to give to the President of the United States that in the discharge of his great responsibility he has desired the attainment of the end in view through peace rather than through war. Mr. President, one who heard and regards what has been uttered in the Senate of the United States within the past few days might think that the desire to indict and discredit the President of the United States was as strong as the purpose to maintain the honor of the Government and to put an end to the conditions which exist in Cuba. I regret it. From the position taken by the President of the United States upon the failure of diplomatic negotiations to secure the emancipation of Cuba the United States can not recede and ought not to recede. In the language of the Executive—

> In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop—

And in that island there must be established—

> a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own.

The duty of putting an end to existing conditions is no more imperative and no higher than the duty of seeing that order shall be maintained there in the future and that a government shall be there established which shall give the United States and the world no more cause for complaint. If this, our determined purpose, results in war, it must come. We shall be false to ourselves, to humanity, and the world, recreant to duty, and cowardly if we hesitate or falter now.

But, Mr. President, there is conflict in the inauguration of this war, I am sorry to say. The President of the United States and the House of Representatives have declared our purpose in making war, if war it is to be. They have put that purpose on high and impregnable grounds. They have put it upon grounds which challenge the consent and admiration of mankind. They stand united as to the ground upon which this conflict shall commence. Against them in the Senate we are called upon to adopt another reason for the war. We are called to put it upon a lower ground, an infinitely lower ground, an untenable ground, upon a ground which the judgment of mankind can not and will not approve. That is the issue here. It is more than an issue of language, more than an issue of words, more than an issue of pride of opinion. It is an issue made in the Senate of the United States against the Executive and the House of Representatives. Mr. President, I regret it. It is unfortunate, it is deplorable, it is unpardonable.

The President of the United States says, and this language can not be too often repeated:

> In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

Those words are to become immortal in the history of the United States. The Committee on Foreign Relations, unanimous in its committee room, but divided in the Senate, says in effect, "in the name of Maximo Gomez, in the name of the Cuban junta in New York, Spain must withdraw from the Island of Cuba." There is the issue, clear and distinct. That can not be avoided.

I do not care whether the resolutions of the committee are adopted or the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] be added, they mean the same thing; they mean, and mean only, that the United States is to engage in this great conflict, with all its results, with all its losses, and with all its burdens, with all its demoralization, with all its unforeseen and far-reaching consequences, only to establish and set up the mythical government of the miscalled Republic of Cuba.

What sacredness so encircles that mythical government that the United States must forget its high and lofty mission of humanity and duty to enlist under the banner and take orders from the insurgents in Cuba? If those people are independent they have a government there, and it does not need the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to say so. I do not go into the argument to prove they have no right to recognition. No man may presume to tread again the ground so thoroughly gone over by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who has made it so clear that it scarcely can be contradicted or evaded that there is no condition of things in Cuba which justifies the United States in recognizing a government there.

Mr. President, to recognize that pretended government, which even Consul-General Lee does not believe to exist, except as a skeleton, would be to turn back upon every utterance of this country, upon every principle laid down by our Presidents and Secretaries of State in this country. Before we do that let us expunge the record. Let us blot out from our history what Monroe and Jackson and Grant and Hayes and Arthur and Harrison have written into it. Let us wipe out from our history what Adams and Seward and Evarts and Fish, our great Secretaries of State, have written into it. Let us eat our own words in the great contest of the civil war, when we claimed that the Confederate States were not entitled to recognition and our claim was acceded to. Nay, more, to do it we must give up the Monroe doctrine—the doctrine on which we planted ourselves, on which we stand to-day, on which, without bluster and rodomontade, we say we will defy the world. What was that doctrine? It is to be found in two sentences:

> With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

It consists of two propositions. One proposition is that we will not interfere with existing colonies or dependencies of any European power, and the other is that when we have acknowledged the independence of a colony upon the Western Hemisphere we will not tolerate foreign interference. Are we to abandon half of the doctrine, to discredit half of the doctrine, and say before a colony has maintained its independence we will interfere and enable it to secure that independence? If we discredit and abandon half of the doctrine, how can we ask European nations to accede to the remainder?

But why not stand with the President? Why not meet upon its own ground the House of Representatives? Why not go to Cuba to do what we say we go there for—to put an end to the conditions which have become insufferable and intolerable?

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] took occasion this morning to regret and to denounce the propositions which were made by the powers to our Government looking to the securing of peace. It has been the fashion in this debate, I am sorry to say, to peruse the message of the President of the United States with a magnifying glass of high power to see if some word can not be discovered in it from which the charge can be made that he is unpatriotic, vacillating, and dishonest in purpose. Oh, the shame of it, Mr. President; the shame of it for the present, and the insufferable shame of it for the future. It did not require a magnifying glass, if this whole interview had been read, to find the high, lofty, and unalterable purpose of the President of the United States. I will supply the omission. I will read the language in which he met the proposition of the great powers of the world:

> The Government of the United States appreciates the humanitarian and disinterested character of the communication now made on behalf of the powers named, and for its part is confident that equal appreciation will be shown for its own earnest and unselfish endeavors to fulfill a duty to humanity by ending a situation the indefinite prolongation of which has become insufferable.

I commend any man who still thinks it is his duty to attack, discredit, and malign the President to turn his magnifying glass upon those grand and noble words.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me? I did not criticise the language of the President of the United States. I criticised, and desired to criticise, simply the fact that the powers had the presumption to invade and the President not moral power enough to resist an invasion of the White House to submit the communication.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose, Mr. President, that if the people of the United States, in the exercise of their suffrages and their wisdom, should ever elect the honorable and distinguished Senator from Nebraska to the White House and the ambassadors of the nations of the earth came there for an interview he would direct the doorkeeper to turn them away.

Mr. ALLEN. They were refused by Mr. Seward thirty years ago.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no time to answer interruptions. I say that we can not, without turning our back on every sentence which has been uttered or written by the Presidents of the United States and the Secretaries of State of the United States, recognize an independent government in Cuba.

What if we do? What if we lower the banner; what if we abandon the high and noble, Christian-like ground which has been taken by the President of the United States, and come down to the level of the men who desire the recognition of a government which has no real existence as much or more than they do the triumph of our arms in Cuba? If we recognize it on this floor, we must recognize it on the soil of Cuba. If we say in the joint resolution, in this solemn act of Congress, that the people of Cuba are free and independent, we mean that they are free and independent in the sense in which we are free and independent, and when we go to the Island of Cuba we must treat that people as a free and independent people.

We must march under their banner, not ours, or if we march under ours it must be subordinated to the flag of the Republic of Cuba, so called. General Miles, the commander of our Army, and the President of the United States, if he takes the field as the Commander in Chief of our Army, must take their orders from Maximo Gomez. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] saw the pinch of this, and therefore he introduced a resolution that when we go there we shall go by agreement; that our Army shall march under the command of our own general.

When we are through, when the last Spanish soldier shall have been driven from that soil, what then? Accede to the demands of Maximo Gomez that we leave at the same time. There is no escape from this. We go there with high and holy purpose to discharge the imperative duty of seeing that the government which shall exist in Cuba after the Spaniards leave shall be a stable government, one which can secure peace to its citizens, protect our citizens, and maintain and discharge every international obligation. But General Gomez will say, "No; you recognized our government; our government will take care of this. Get out!" What an ignominious ending for the campaign!

Mr. President, we ought to pass resolutions here which we can justify. We ought not to give our consent to resolutions unjustifiable in their character, for the reason that we desire to accomplish the great purpose in view. When Abraham Lincoln put his name to that immortal document which struck the shackles from the limbs of 4,000,000 people, after having suffered abuse, vituperation, vilification which the abuse heaped upon President McKinley does not parallel, he wrote these magnificent words: "And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice warranted by the Constitution upon military necessity, I invoke the deliberate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God." Mr. President, I implore, I adjure the Senate to pass no resolutions upon which it may not write in spirit, if not in fact, the words, "And upon this act we invoke the deliberate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I request that the Chair will give me notice when I reach one minute of the expiration of my time.

I regret that within the limited time it will be necessary for me to speak rapidly, and that what I shall say must of necessity be somewhat disjointed and irregular. If I had, however, but one minute, I would wish to say this, to which I am moved particularly by what has fallen from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]: I think it is the greatest injustice on the part of Senators to attribute to unfriendliness and a hostile spirit everything which may be said by Senators not in accordance with what may be recommended by the President of the United States. I desire for myself to disclaim any such design or any such spirit. The President of the United States has his prerogatives, and we have ours; he has his duties, and we have ours; and each is responsible for the proper discharge of the same.

Mr. President, I have not been one of those who desired war. I think it is very greatly to be deplored. I know that it means death to many of the present generation, and that it means a grievous burden of debt to the next generation. Therefore I have entirely sympathized with the efforts of the President to avert war, and if he had not come to Congress and said that his efforts were at an end, I would be willing, if he desired it, to give him still further opportunity to avert war. It is apparent, however, that war must come, and it only remains to shape the issue properly.

But, Mr. President, that does not relieve me from the necessity of passing upon the grave questions which are submitted to-day, in view of my constitutional obligation to decide upon the question as a member of the Senate whether there shall be war; and if war, in what manner it shall be waged. Unfortunately, I differ from the President of the United States in his recommendations. The President of the United States asks that Congress shall clothe him with the power to wage war at his discretion. I think it would be unconstitutional to grant him that power, and consequently I can not agree with him. The resolutions passed by the House of Representatives, in my opinion, practically propose to confer upon him this power. Therefore, under no circumstances could I, in view of my constitutional obligations, vote for those resolutions. But that is not hostility to the President.

In the same way I regard the recognition of the independence of the Cubans as an essential in case of intervention. The President of the United States thinks it should not be accorded to them. That difference does not constitute hostility on my part or on the part of those who agree with me.

In addition to a great many other reasons which I can not stop to go over, I think the question as to whether recognition either accompanies or precedes the act of intervention will have a most material bearing upon the possibility, to put it no stronger, of this Government being made liable for a part of the Spanish-Cuban bonds in the future; and I only remind gentlemen who discuss the legal question involved that that is a question not to be decided in courts, but it mayhap be decided at the cannon's mouth.

My colleague [Mr. CLAY] has already spoken upon this subject and will probably not again have an opportunity to address the Senate upon it. Therefore I take occasion to say for him that as to these positions which would make it impossible for me to vote for the House resolutions he agrees with me.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] yesterday made a very long and elaborate and able argument on the subject as to where resides the prerogative of recognizing the independence of a nation. I would have been glad, and had intended, to submit some remarks in reply. It is a subject upon which I have bestowed much labor in its investigation, and upon which I have very fixed opinions. But it is manifestly now impossible for me to do so.

I desire simply to say one thing, which is that the assumption that it is exclusively an Executive prerogative implies necessarily that the power is lodged in one man to decide with what people of the world this country will maintain or will not maintain diplomatic relations. I say, not to go into the argument, that that is a position which is absolutely abhorrent to the genius of our institutions, and absolutely inconsistent with the letter and spirit of our Constitution, and that it can only find proper place in monarchical and absolute governments, where the voice of the people and of their representatives is neither heard nor heeded. But, Mr. President, I can not go into it. However, I desire to submit one further reflection in this connection.

There are two ways in which a declaration of independence may be regarded; one where there is no dispute about the fact of independence, the other where there is a dispute about the fact. In the one case recognition is a formality; in the other case it is the highest act of governmental power. An illustration of the latter case is to be had in the declaration of our own independence. When we say that a people are free and independent we do not necessarily mean that there is no dispute over it or that there is no contest over it. We mean to say that thereafter sovereignty shall rest there in the new nation, and that we dispute that it rests, or that it shall thereafter rest, where it formerly rested.

When the people of the Colonies decided in 1776 and proclaimed that they were free, they did not pretend that there was no further dispute about that fact, but they simply meant that thenceforth they repudiated and denied the sovereignty of the government which had theretofore been over them. When France three years thereafter recognized the Government of the United States as free and independent, it did not mean to say that all doubt as to whether that independence had been established was removed, but it simply meant to say that thereafter France recognized the sovereignty of this people, and denied that thereafter there was or that thereafter there should be, in the recognition of France, any sovereignty in the British Government over this territory. Therefore, when we say to-day that we recognize the independence of the Cuban people, we mean to say that we deny that thereafter there is or shall be, in our recognition, any sovereignty of Spain in that island.

Mr. President, one word more on the subject of the rules with reference to what shall justify a government in recognizing the independence of a new government. All the rules with reference to what shall justify a government in recognizing the independence of another nation are made for the benefit of the parent nation from which the new government is to be sundered. It is to prevent injustice to that parent government; and therefore the care and particularity with which it is laid down that so long as there is a possibility, if you please, that that government can restore its authority, independence of the new government shall not be acknowledged.

Mr. President, one-half of the argument of the learned Senator from Wisconsin yesterday was devoted to that question. While I would gladly reply in detail, I think it can all be disposed of with one single comment, and that is that, applying as it does only to the question of maintaining the rights due to the parent nation, to see that no injustice is done to the sovereignty of the parent nation, it has no place in a consideration where we avow at the same time our purpose to strike down the power and sovereignty of that nation in that connection.

Mr. President, I would be glad if I could elaborate this subject, but it is manifest that I can not do so. I want to say one thing more. There never was a man who sat in the Presidential chair more zealous of the Executive prerogative than Andrew Jackson, and here is what he said about it in his message to Congress about Texas. I can not read all of it, only a part of it:

> It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the Constitution, and most safe that it should be exercised, when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils must be furnished. Its submission to Congress, which represents in one of its branches the States of this Union and in the other the people of the United States, where there may be reasonable ground to apprehend so grave a consequence, would certainly afford the fullest satisfaction to our own country and a perfect guaranty to all other nations of the justice and prudence of the measures which might be adopted.

And thereafter he sent a message, the last message he ever sent to Congress, in which he said he recognized the Republic of Texas in response to the resolution which had been passed by Congress, recognizing it, as he said, as a decision of the question. Utterances to the same effect are found in other state papers, and the doctrine has been repeatedly asserted by Congress, and in one or the other House thereof.

Mr. President, aside from the suggestions which have been so strongly urged, that it is to our personal interest to recognize the independence of the Cubans, the merest justice requires that we should do so.

There has never been a more heroic struggle for liberty than has been made by that people. There have never been greater sacrifices made by a people to obtain their liberty than have been made by them. They have not made the ordinary sacrifices that other contestants for liberty have made. Many of us in this Chamber have known what it was to face the dangers of battle, but no one here has ever faced a danger of battle such as the Cuban patriots through long years have faced. No man here has ever entered battle knowing that if he escaped the bullet and became a captive he would meet with death by execution. Yet that has been the case of the Cubans in their ten years' war, as well as in the present war.

I read from the American Cyclopædia, Volume V, page 555, as to the execution of Cuban soldiers in five years between 1868 and 1872, inclusive. I have not the records for the succeeding years of that war, or of the present war.

> According to official reports forwarded from Madrid by the United States minister, 13,600 Cubans had been killed in battle up to August, 1872, besides 43,500 prisoners whom the Spanish minister admitted to have been put to death.

My God, Mr. President, can we turn our backs upon men who have shown such heroism and such heroic sacrifice! For one I will not, either by my voice or by my vote.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who has just taken his seat, sneers at Gomez. Mr. President, if there is a certain fact, that fact is the independence of Cuba, and as certain as is the independence of Cuba, so certain will it be that in the future the name of this man Gomez will be found on the list of those immortal names that were not born to die. It will go down in history with the names of Washington and Bolivar, the great liberators of men from the bondage of tyranny and oppression.

Mr. President, in the histories of peoples a time comes for sacrifice. Such a time seems now at hand. I doubt not that the North is equally ready to make sacrifice with the South, but in the condition of things the sacrifice to be made in this war must be more serious in the South than in the North. The great volume of money which is to be spent in carrying on this war will be spent at the North and West and will quicken their industries.

We have few or none of the factories at the South which will make the munitions of war necessary to furnish the clothing and supplies for the armies, nor are we the large producers of the food crops which will be needed to supply them. On the contrary, our enterprises will be largely paralyzed by war, and our great product of cotton is to be put to a price that will not only not be remunerative, but be an absolute disaster to the man who produces it.

If communication with Cuba, through those who come and go, brings the yellow fever to our shores, the South will be the principal sufferer from this cause. The first hostile gun that is fired will find its echoes in our hills and valleys. If disaster should by possibility come, the seaports of the South will be those to be ravaged.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, our people will not be laggards in the struggle. But we do ask this: If we are to make this sacrifice, let it not be a sacrifice in the interests of the holders of the Spanish bonds, but let it be a sacrifice in the interest of humanity. If this sacrifice has to be made, let it not be for the purpose of invasion and conquest, but let it be because the great clock of the world has struck the morning hour when there shall be born to independence and freedom a new and heroic people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has one minute left of his time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I utilize that moment by asking that there may be read from the desk what I desire to have placed in the permanent records as a piece of evidence relative to the question whether the Maine was blown up by torpedoes furnished by the Spanish Government. I desire to call attention simply to the fact that what is to be read by the Secretary are extracts from two Spanish newspapers published in Madrid. One of them is an interview with the former minister of marine under the ministry of Canovas, which, of course, preceded by several months the time of the explosion of the Maine. The other is the comment of the Imparcial upon the publication of that interview, and expressing regret for it for the reason that it might give rise to the very use which I now make of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MADRID, April 11, 1898.

El Heraldo De Madrid publishes an interview with Admiral Beranger, former minister of marine, in the course of which he expressed his confidence in the ability of the Spanish navy to win in the event of a war with the United States.

"There is no fear," said Admiral Beranger, of our Cuban ports being exposed to a night attack, inasmuch as Havana, Cienfuegos, Nuevitas, and Santiago de Cuba are defended by electric and automatic torpedoes with a large radius of action.

"The late Señor Canovas del Castillo, who paid attention to these matters, decided in accord with myself to send to Cuba 100 torpedoes, which must have been placed in those harbors. Chacon, the well-known torpedo expert, undertook to convey and place these engines.

"I have already said that by sea we shall be victorious. I will give you my reasons. The first is the excellent discipline maintained on our ships; the second is that on board the American vessels as soon as firing is opened, a panic will set in, since it is common knowledge that their crews comprise men of every nationality. Pitted ship against ship, we have nothing to fear."

El Imparcial, commenting on this interview, says:

IMPARCIAL REGRETS THE CONFESSION.

"That those torpedoes should be sent in case war should break out is very natural; but that as much should be admitted at this moment constitutes a twofold imprudence; in the first place, because it warns the enemy, and the enemy being warned, it will do its best to cripple those defenses; and secondly, because the jingoes, availing themselves of the evidence afforded by the minister of marine of the late Señor Canovas, will assert that one of the torpedoes he describes caused the Maine explosion."

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States will be called upon by its vote upon the resolutions which have been placed before us by the Committee on Foregn Relations to decide between peace and war—to decide whether we shall further rest under the white wings of peace and enjoy its privileges and advantages, or whether we shall let loose the dogs of war and accept all the evils they may bring. It is, in my humble judgment, a most important hour in the history of our country, and each Senator here has a duty to perform for which he is responsible to himself, his constituency, his country, and his God.

I advance to this duty with great hesitancy. When I came to the Senate and was first called upon to evidence my opinion upon the difficulties and differences then existing as between our country and Spain, I held that there was no occasion for interference and favored peace. Since then I have carefully considered the questions confronting us, and have been unable to convince myself that there is anything in the situation which demands war at the hands of the American people. I act upon this occasion as my conscience dictates and reason decides, and I have asked the indulgence of the Senate to give the cause of this action.

No man has a higher esteem or a greater regard for the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate; no man has a stronger admiration for the ability, the wisdom, and the statesmanship of the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. DAVIS].

I have listened with interest and have endeavored to be convinced against the judgment I had formed by the many most interesting and able addresses I have heard during this debate. I have listened with eager attention to the magnificent speech and have heard with gratification the noble sentiments expressed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I agree with the sentiment of his speech, but am sorry to say that from the sentiments there expressed I can not make the same deduction or reach the same result. To his mind war was inevitable and war seemed necessary. I have not been able to reach that conclusion.

I heard the eloquent and impassioned appeal of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], for whom and for whose judgment I have the highest regard also. I heard his forcible presentation of the case, but can not agree that either intervention by force of arms or recognition of the Cuban Republic is expedient or justifiable. Permit me to say here and now that if armed intervention there is to be, in my opinion there would be less of danger, difficulty, and disaster surrounding and attending it if you entered upon it by the recognition of the Cuban Republic. But, sir, I am opposed to intervention either with or without recognition. Either of these plans means war. I am in favor of peace, and shall cast my vote against the resolutions offered by the whole committee and those by the minority.

Mr. President, why do I do this? I do so because to my mind there is no justification for a declaration of war or any resolution which will inevitably lead to war between the American people and the Kingdom of Spain. War can not be justified at any time by any nation unless there shall have been exhausted every effort of peace, unless diplomatic negotiations have been resorted to in vain. In my humble judgment this condition has not been reached as between the American Government and the Spanish Kingdom. After a careful reading of the President's message I can not find that he expresses any such idea. I may be wrong, but until I am convinced of my error I will stand for peace, vote against war. I can not do otherwise.

As I see the contention between the two countries it may be divided into two parts—it is a double question. The one affects us not directly or indirectly; it concerns the Kingdom of Spain and its rebellious dependency, the Island of Cuba. The other does concern us directly, and though it is an occurrence that grew out of the first, it should be considered alone and apart from the other. I refer to the destruction of the American battle ship Maine and the sending into eternity of the officers and sailors of that fated vessel.

Mr. President, so far as the first part of this contention is concerned it extends over many years. The Island of Cuba has been under Spanish rule since its discovery more than four centuries ago. I do not stand here as an apologist for Spanish policies. I believe that the colonial policy of the Kingdom of Spain in this latter part of the nineteenth century of the Christian era is the same colonial policy that it had in the sixteenth century. It has not advanced, and the same spirit animates it now that imbued it then. I believe that it has borne down the people who have rested under its shadow of corruption and maladministration. Under its baneful influence one dependency after another has passed from her control.

I believe that the people of the Island of Cuba had every reason for rebellion against the Kingdom of Spain, and I can not, if I would, defend such a policy. But, sir, we stand apart from that. We are not within its circle. It is a quarrel with which in its origin we have nothing to do, and in which, according to the law of nations, we have no right to intervene. It is a revolt by the Cubans against the system of government under which they have been living, and after an examination of all its environments I am forced to the conclusion that it is not only a protest against Spanish government, but, with some of the insurgents at least, a rebellion against any and all authority. I agree that they were driven to it by centuries of misgovernment, and that the culmination was reached when the last outbreak occurred. Three years have passed since the Cubans again took up arms against the domination of Spain. Three years with various mutations and changeful fortunes of war have backward rolled since then, and during the passage of this time the sympathy of the American people has naturally gone out to the struggling and suffering insurgents. It has gone out to them as it would go out, and does go out, to every people upon the face of God's earth who struggle for liberty, freedom, and self-government.

But, sir, while Spain may be chargeable with culpability, and while to a certain degree she is responsible for the condition which has been evolved, and which now exists, she is not alone to blame. The insurgents have themselves been much at fault. As we view the beginning of this struggle we shall see that the insurgents began such a system of war as can not be justified by the Christian civilization of this era. They did not begin their battle for independence as did the American people when they severed the bonds which bound them to the British people. The American revolutionists armed themselves and marched to attack the British troops. They fought in the open field; they fought according to the principles of modern warfare. Not so the Cubans. They began, as would outlaws and bandits, a system of guerrilla warfare, a series of bushwacking attacks.

It may have been and may be the only system which they could adopt. It may have been necessary for their cause to make war in this fashion, but, sir, it is also the system of war which of necessity and perforce did bring about the condition that exists in that island. The insurgent bands, by their incursions upon neutral territory and cultivated zones of the island, began the burning of houses, the destruction of plantations, the plunder of villages, and murder of inhabitants. By their sweeping with rapid movement from their retreats to attack places where they were least expected they gained advantages, but did so at the expense of their own country. Angered by this mode of attack, made resentful by this fashion of battle, the Spanish Government naturally sought means to subdue this rebellion and to pacify the provinces in revolt.

Campos was unsuccessful, and therefore the home Government determined to send General Weyler to attempt the difficult task. He began the execution of a plan which, in its effect, completed the destruction begun by the insurgents. Between the operations of the two contending forces the productive districts of Cuba, in at least a portion of the island, were destroyed, and where there had been cultivated fields and prosperous homes there began to be, and there is now, a wilderness in which nature runs wild and rank weeds have taken the place of those products which give sustenance to man. Both parties in this contest have transgressed the laws of God and of nations in such measure as can not be condoned. As the months and years of this struggle accumulated and as time went on the sympathies of the American people for the insurgents, their cause, and their suffering grew stronger and deeper and gradually colored the policy of the Administration. This sympathy began to manifest itself by protests against Spanish rule, by efforts to relieve the needs of the Cuban people.

In a Republic like ours, the sympathies of the people gradually direct the nation's will, and the Government usually formulates a policy that is in consonance with it. The American Government began to make suggestions to the Spanish Government, and through diplomatic channels expressed its opposition to the methods and means pursued in the attempt to put down the rebellion. However these diplomatic negotiations may have been begun and agreed to, the fact remains that the first demand which seems to have been made upon the Spanish power was that as the Government of Spain had caused the war by improper administration and by the imposition of such burdens as could no longer be borne, they should correct this state of affairs, remove the cause of the rebellion, and by the introduction of a government for the Cubans in which they should themselves participate, thus remedy the matter. In response to these suggestions the liberal government of Sagasta determined to give autonomy to the island.

As I understand it, autonomy was given to the Cuban people because it was suggested by our Government and diplomatic negotiations had been conducted to that end. Now, sir, when we had suggested that the Spanish Government, by its Captain-General, should introduce autonomy, was it not our duty to give whatever moral influence we had in its favor and cause its acceptance by the Cubans?

Did the American people do that? In all fairness the answer must be, they did not. On the contrary they did, by their sympathy and by the action of the Senate of the United States in the passage of a resolution recognizing the belligerency of the insurgents, give encouragement to them to refuse autonomy, and this caused the failure of the movement.

The Spanish Government recalled General Weyler and in his stead sent the humane Blanco to introduce the new policy. When he arrived he began the difficult task but found opposition at every point. Part of the radical Spaniards stood sullenly aside. The insurgents refused submission, and in the meanwhile the condition of the reconcentrados became acute. The policy of General Weyler, in his attempt to subdue the insurgents, was to drive them to the necessity of open battle by depriving them of the means of subsistence, and in order to do this he removed the neutral people, those who had been engaged in production and cultivation and were still fortunate enough to exist, from their homes and habitations and concentrated them within the protection of the guns of the Spanish cities and there forced them to remain.

The people of the cities, themselves upon the verge of want, had little to give to the reconcentrados, and these defenseless people were rapidly brought to a state most pitiable, in which want and hunger brought starvation and every form of death. This order of concentration can not be justified. It was wrong when executed, and in the light of to-day, in the clear sunshine of the present, it seems a dread and terrible crime against humanity. But, sir, it was the logical result of the events begun by the insurgents, continued by the Spanish, and consummated by both.

We know that when war comes, even under the most favorable conditions, production is less and consumption grows more; but under the system of war existing in Cuba it was much worse than ordinarily. Production ceased almost entirely, agriculture was annihilated, and the cultivated districts reverted into natural disorder. The Captain-General sent to relieve Weyler found this condition. He saw the dread environments which surrounded these people. He attempted to give relief, and in this attempt was greatly aided by the charitable contributions of the American people.

But there was not enough, and at last the situation grew more dreadful and deplorable; and when the true state became known to our people, their outraged feeling against Spain caused a still further demand to be made upon that country. It was that the policy of concentration must be abrogated—the reconcentrados returned to their homes and maintained there until they could enter upon tilling the soil and producing the sustenance they required. To this demand the Spanish Government also acceded, and General Blanco received the order which he began to execute. In his endeavor to send back to their homes these unfortunate people there was also, in a great degree, a failure.

It is said that the Spanish Government was not intent upon carrying this policy into effect. It has been said in this, as in many other matters, that they were treacherous; but, sir, the failure is not chargeable as much to the Spaniard as it is to the fact that these people were so weak and helpless, composed of women, children, and old men emaciated by hunger, until they were in a starving condition and unable almost to travel, incapable of labor or of any effort of self-sustainment. Not only this, but when they arrived at their homes, or rather the place where their homes once were, they found nothing but ruin. They were shelterless and without food; but even in this condition, which could be relieved by American charity and Spanish aid, they were not allowed to rest in peace because of the attacks, not of the Spanish, but of the insurgent bands.

This is not a Spanish story, and I give it not upon my own authority, but refer you to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], when he told you of the mission of love and benevolence which induced a noble American woman to leave a home of comfort in Massachusetts and devote herself to these suffering people. Who can doubt the statement of Clara Barton, whose name and fame will be the one bright page in this dread story of murder, plunder, rapine, starvation, and death?

Americans and Spaniards together worked to bring about an amelioration of these conditions, but our people felt there was but one remedy which could be successfully applied. War must cease and the Spanish Government depart from the island. Therefore a further demand was made upon Spain. The President asked that an armistice be granted and continued, and that the Spanish troops be removed and the Cubans given self-government. In due time a cessation of hostilities came and the Spanish Government granted the armistice. It is said that this result was attained not by American diplomacy but was given in answer to a request from another source.

I do not know how this may be. I have not been initiated into the maze of these diplomatic negotiations, but I do know that an armistice was granted by the Kingdom of Spain, and that General Blanco, the commander of forces and Captain-General of Cuba, was instructed to carry it into effect.

It has been asserted that Spain was not in earnest; it has been said that she would treacherously forego the obligation and merely make pretension of an armistice to gain an advantage for herself. But, sir, to my mind the sending of General Blanco, a man of high honor, of humane motives, of great intelligence, and, above all, of a generous heart, a man whose ideas are much akin to our own, would indicate that the Spanish Government did wish to better the conditions prevailing in Cuba and bring about a state of peace.

But, sir, the armistice has not been successful. The armistice has been a failure as well as the home sending of the reconcentrados; and, sir, who is responsible for the failure of the armistice? Not the Spanish Government, but the insurgents themselves, incited to their action by the American people. Upon the very day that the order was issued and transmitted to Cuba the President's message reached the Congress of the United States; and, sir, instead of carefully considering that message and acting upon the suggestion, which if not plainly stated was at least distinctively intimated, the Congress has so construed it as to mean an appeal to rush into immediate and indefensible war.

We can not expect success either for autonomy or for any movement inaugurated by an armistice when the moral force and power, not to speak of the armed forces, of the United States are against Spain and favorable to the insurgents and a continuance of their war.

I have attempted in a brief manner to follow step by step the demands of this Government and the concessions of Spain. I have shown that every suggestion made by this Government has been agreed to by the Spanish ministry, and that the situation upon the morning of the reception of the President's message to Congress was such as to lead the fair-minded and impartial critic to believe that every desire of the American people would in the end be accomplished by peaceful means. But, sir, the resolution now before the Senate would destroy every hope of further diplomacy, prevent the President from making further effort for a peaceful solution of the question, by bringing the country into immediate armed intervention.

Sir, I appeal to the Senate to pause for a moment and calmly consider whether we have reached the point where negotiations must cease and active war begin. I can not think so. I appeal for peace. I do not believe that the President of the United States is of the opinion that diplomacy has been a failure and that we should at the present engage in war. I have read his message; I have carefully, nay prayerfully, considered it. It has been read here before, but I wish again to emphasize and call the attention of the Senate to the President's expression at the close of his message, and there I think is the concentrated thought and desire of the Chief Magistrate. He says:

> In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

Sir, I see in this appeal of the President nothing more nor less than this, that he calls upon Congress to so place him that if he finds in the end that all negotiations and every effort of diplomacy to secure the demands of this country in the Cuban case have been in vain, he may then stretch out the strong arm of the American people and strike down the power of Spain by the mailed hand of war. But I contend that the President has not yet contemplated that condition. I contend that the President in his heart feels, as every patriotic and peace-loving American citizen must feel, that there is no necessity for any war so long as we can accomplish by pacific methods all that is desired.

What is it that we desire in this contention? The aspiration of the American people is that there may be a free government in Cuba and that the people of that island may enjoy the right of liberty, even as we are privileged to enjoy it. If this can be accomplished in peace, where is the argument that will justify war? If war comes, it will open a veritable Pandora's box of ills. Our foreign commerce will be paralyzed, our trade crippled, industries come to a standstill, the arm of labor will be lamed, taxes will increase, values become unsettled, the currency deranged, and the public debt augmented. If war comes, the thunder of guns, the whirling of swords, and the noise of battle will bring death and disaster to our men, sorrow to our homes, contaminating diseases to our shores.

What will we gain by war? Victory may crown our endeavors. That we doubt not; but to win every battle and bring disaster upon the foe at every point will still find us losers in the fight. What can we gain by war? Glory? Nay; there can be no glory in defeating a nation than whom we are stronger as 5 to 1. Conquest? Nay; we desire no acquisition of territory by that means. Revenge? Are we certain that we have sustained such wrong as to crave the blood of the innocent ones even of Spain? Freedom for the Cubans? Are we certain that it will not come by diplomacy and tranquil achievement? Until we are certain, the voice of the Master should be heard and the angry waves of national passion should be stilled.

To what does the present situation point? Let me read once again the closing sentences of the President's message. He says:

> Yesterday, and since the preparation of the foregoing message, official information was received by me that the latest decree of the Queen Regent of Spain directs General Blanco, in order to prepare and facilitate peace, to proclaim a suspension of hostilities, the duration and details of which have not yet been communicated to me.

Now, Senators, let me impress upon you the last words of this message:

> This fact with every other pertinent consideration will, I am sure, have your just and careful attention in the solemn deliberation upon which you are about to enter. If this measure attains a successful result, then our aspirations as a Christian, peace-loving people will be realized. If it fails, it will be only another justification for our contemplated action.

The President here plainly indicates, though it may not be stated in direct language, that he yet believes negotiations will result in good, that he yet believes the issuance of this armistice will bring peace to Cuba. We have every reason to believe that it will bring peace and freedom to Cuba. For we have every reason to take for granted that the Spanish Government will be forced to withdraw its troops and independence for the Cuban people will eventually result.

There is a difficulty in the way of the Spanish Government agreeing to every point in the contention at the present moment. Senators here understand that the present Government of Spain stands upon precarious grounds. If the Spanish ministry were, without attempt at delay by diplomatic action, to consent to every demand made by the United States the Liberal Government would fall and we would be responsible for a reactionary movement by the rise and accession of the Carlists to power in Spain.

We talk of humanity. It is a splendid sentiment. But, sir, the march of humanity demands not only that Cuba shall have relief, her people be free and endowed with self-government, but it also demands that the Kingdom of Spain shall be thrown open to the spirit which pervades the American Republic, and that gradually there shall be a more liberal government, and perhaps after the passage of a short period of time there may be fraternal relations between the republic of Spain, which shall have arisen from the ashes of the ancient monarchy, and the United States of America. I pray to God that the day may come; but if you overthrow the present liberal Government and cause a reactionary movement you will place Spain in such a position that the movement of liberty may be retarded a hundred years.

Mr. President, I find I have spoken longer than I intended upon this branch of the subject. Now I wish to say a word or two upon the other.

Every Senator who has here spoken seems to have the sentiment, the idea, and the thought that the Spanish Government was responsible for the blowing up of our war ship. I can not think so. I have not seen in the report of the commission appointed to investigate that dread disaster, and I have not heard from any other source, anything that would lead me to that conclusion. If you would hold the Spanish Government liable for blowing up our vessel, then, sir, General Blanco, who commands in Havana, must be the responsible person. He is the representative of the Spanish Government, and from and through him responsibility must come.

What did Consul-General Lee say concerning that noble man? I speak of him as a noble man because, though he is a Spaniard, and though we have no great love for that nation, I say to you that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin;" and a noble man who attempts to do his duty to his Government and humanity, even though he be a Spaniard, deserves the plaudits of Americans. I have not seen any evidence that would hold General Blanco responsible for the destruction of the Maine. What was his condition when he heard of this most lamentable occurrence? Tears were in his eyes, and he tremblingly expressed sorrow and contrition that such an event should have taken place. It has been said, when our vessel had been blown up and the souls of our sailors were sweeping into eternity, that Spanish officers regaled themselves with champagne and were in glee and high spirits over it. It may have been so, but I remember also that other Spanish officers and other Spanish men at the very risk of their lives went out into Havana Harbor to save American sailors.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will it interrupt the Senator for me to read just one or two passages from the testimony of General Lee on this point?

Mr. WELLINGTON. If the Senator will not take too long.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; just a moment. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator. It appears that Senator FORAKER asked General Lee this question:

> Senator FORAKER. Have you any doubt but that it was put there by the Government?
>
> Consul-General LEE. I do not think it was put there by the Government. I think probably it was the act of four or five subordinate officers.
>
> Senator FORAKER. Spanish officers?
> Consul-General LEE. Spanish officers, who had knowledge of the location and probably were experts, and had that branch of the service to look after. I do not think General Blanco gave any order about it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I thank the Senator for reading that passage from the report of the commission, because it brings to my mind a thought that may be of value in this connection. It may be true that some Spanish officer was responsible for the blowing up of the battle ship Maine, though there is no direct proof even of the fact that the explosion came from without; but, sir, may there not be those who say we are responsible for the defeat of autonomy in Cuba and, by that defeat, indirectly the cause of this disaster? When the Spanish Liberal Government gave autonomy to the Cubans, it disgruntled and caused to fall away from her certain radical Spaniards then in authority.

Some of them may still be in power, and those are the people who, perhaps, were guilty of this most treacherous and horrible act. I can not for a moment imagine that the Spanish Government, represented by General Blanco in the harbor of Havana, would be so utterly lost to every feeling of humanity as to be guilty of this high crime against all civil law and terrible sin against the command of God. And, sir, so long as there is no proof that such was the case, and so long as that is not present with us, so long will we not be justified in holding Spain accountable.

I desire to assert here and now with all the emphasis of which I am capable that if it were clear to my mind that the Spanish Government by its chief officer had been guilty of this crime, I would say that it must be war, swift and sure, now and without a moment's hesitation, because that would place us in such a position as to be beyond further deliberation and beyond arbitration. No remedy save and alone that of war could be had. I may again be in error, but until I am convinced, until Spanish responsibility has been made clear to me, I for one can not give my consent to declare war on this proposition.

Sir, war may come, and from the present temper of the American Congress I fear it will come. So far as I am concerned, I say now, as I said at the beginning, I favor peace, and being for peace I will vote for peace. I will not contend for one thing and vote for another. I have a solemn, firm, and fixed conviction, arrived at after calm deliberation, not in the forum of passion but before the judgment seat of reason, that to precipitate the American people into war with Spain at this time would be a crime against Christian civilization, justice, and right. I believe that my people, the people of the Commonwealth of Maryland, whom I in part represent upon the floor of this Senate, the conservative and thinking people, stand as I do upon this question. I shall therefore vote against the resolution declaring for or eventuating in war.

Our people are conservative; but, sir, if the United States of America by its Congress shall say that war must come, we will bow to the will of the majority of our countrymen. That majority must accept the responsibilty, and when war is upon us, then, sir, we will not take the advice of my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and betake ourselves to the rear, but our people will be found in the very forefront of battle for the cause of the Union.

We are a conservative people; but, sir, Maryland has always been loyal and true to the best interests of the American Republic. When Massachusetts began the American Revolution and our militiamen for the first time met British regulars; when Concord and Lexington and Bunker Hill had been fought and the war which must end either in independence or submission of the Colonies had begun; when Massachusetts sent an appeal to her sister Colonies for aid in the great struggle that was upon her, the Colony of Maryland was the first to respond, and from my native mountains marched the first company of riflemen, who lingered not until they reached beleaguered Boston. Through the Revolutionary war Maryland troops more than once saved the day and snatched victory from defeat; more than once the Maryland line saved the American Army. In 1812, when English troops descended upon our coasts, razed our towns and cities, burned our houses, plundered our villages, not only Maryland men, but Maryland youths and children went out that they might defend the honor and integrity of the country.

In 1848, when American arms invaded Mexico, Marylanders performed deeds of valor. When the great civil war came, Maryland, though a Southern State, remained true to the Union. Sentiment was divided there. We were a narrow strip between the two great sections of our land. To the north of us was the one idea, to the south another, and the two great waves of opinion met upon the border land in contention. Our people were divided. Some of our men donned the gray and marched with their Southern brethren under the Confederate banner. Others put on the blue and stood for the flag of the Union, and at Gettysburg, the bloodiest spot upon that ensanguined field except one, perhaps (and that will be remembered by the Senator from Minnesota), Marylander met Marylander and the men in blue struggled and contended with those in gray for mastery.

We love our country; we love its institutions; we love its flag; we are proud of its history; we look upon it as the banner which floated over Washington in the darkest hour of the American Revolution, when he was surrounded by ragged Continentals at Valley Forge—barefooted and hatless, tattered and torn, hungry and cold. And the flag waved proudly again over Maryland troops in the midsummer of his glory, when Washington received the sword of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

It was carried by Maryland volunteers in the second war with England; it was placed upon the topmost rampart of Montezuma's tower in Mexico; it was dragged in the dust at Bull Run; it was glorified and had final victory at Appomattox, but it has a greater glory, not in war, but in peace. As its silent folds are floating in this hour, they stand as an emblem of a reunited, peaceful, liberty-loving people, having but one aspiration, and that is that liberty, freedom, and self-government shall go out and become the heritage of all the peoples of the world.

So, if war must be, then Maryland will be found with you; but in this hour which must decide for the future, in this fateful hour, the vote of one of her Senators, at least, will be registered for peace.

Mr. CAFFERY obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. CAFFERY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer a substitute for the Senate resolution, which I simply ask to have printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will ask that his amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and insert:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful Government of that island.

Second. That it is now apparent that Spain can not maintain her control of Cuba against the republican government of that island. The war now existing between the Government of Spain and the Republic of Cuba, as now conducted, is destructive of the interests of the people of Cuba and injurious to the interests of the United States, and has created a condition in that island that can no longer be endured.

The only hope of relief and repose from such a condition is the enforced pacification of Cuba by the withdrawal of the land and naval forces of Spain from that island; it is, therefore, the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters. If Spain fails or refuses to accede to such demand, it will be the duty of the Government of the United States in defense of its interests and in the interest of humanity to take such measures as shall put an immediate stop to the war in Cuba, hereby disclaiming any disposition or intention to exercise jurisdiction or control over said island except for the pacification thereof and a determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to the people thereof.

Resolved, That the President is hereby authorized and directed to take at once such steps as may be necessary to terminate hostilities in the Island of Cuba and to secure to the people of that island an independent republican government by the people thereof; and the President is authorized and directed to use, if necessary, the land and naval forces of the United States for the purpose of carrying this joint resolution into effect.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the substitute resolution which I have offered may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be printed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TURPIE. In my first report in behalf of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations I find that the RECORD says that the word "offered" was used by me, but to make it clear I now offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, in line 4, after the word "independent," the following:

And that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table subject to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, differing so radically with the majority of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber as to the questions involved in the pending resolution and amendments, I approach their discussion with a full sense of the fallibility of my own judgment and with deference to the contrary views of my colleagues. I have tried to view this question in every light that I could, so as to ascertain what position the United States could take that would be sustained by international law while being just and beneficial to both sides of the contestants now carrying on hostilities in the Island of Cuba. If my conclusions are wrong, it is my misfortune, not my fault.

Mr. President, I have stood once before on the brink of war. Though quite young, I counseled moderation and delay. I counseled due consideration of the disastrous consequences that might flow from war precipitately waged. My counsels were swept to the winds, and I was swept along with the balance of my people into the most colossal war that was ever waged between civilized nations. Sir, the hostile sections that engaged in that dreadful conflict were each a unit. It was North against South. If we, unhappily, must go to war with Spain, it will be waged on our part by a solid Union. There will be no North nor South nor East nor West. It will be the war of a great Republic with one of the oldest States of Christendom.

But, Mr. President, in emergencies of this sort, where popular passions become aroused, the motives of men not in entire accord with the enthusiastic populace seem to be questioned. Whoever dares to utter an opinion or give expression to a thought not in line with the prevailing current of popular opinion is gibbeted by a libelous press. I will send up to the desk and have read a clipping from the Washington Times of to-day's issue in regard to myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Times, April 16.]

A MARKED MAN.

The country has marked with surprise and indignation the extraordinary course pursued in the Senate for the last two days by a Southern Senator who appears anxious to constitute himself the head center of a small but compact body of persons whose effort is to help Spain as much as possible in the present crisis.

The underlying motive of such a service is somewhat problematical. It may be a desire to earn glory or it might be a political sin with a name not to be mentioned except upon the most damning evidence of its existence. But, be that as it may, the Senator in question needs careful watching. His gyrations yesterday suggest the propriety of observation if not of investigation. His former association with an institution of charity and learning known as the Louisiana State Lottery Company renders him all the more worthy to have the critical eyes of his colleagues and of all American patriots firmly fixed upon him.

Mr. CAFFERY. It is rarely that I ever notice newspaper articles, nor would I have seen this one but for the fact that a friend has just sent it in to me. There is nothing in the article about which I care to make any statement except the charge that I was ever an agent of the Louisiana State Lottery Company. The grotesqueness of the lie is the only thing that commends itself to my especial notice, for, Mr. President, if there is anything in my life for which I take pride it is in the efforts which I made to help break down the infamous institution of the Louisiana State Lottery Company.

I say this editorial applies to me, though I am not named, because I am the only Senator from Louisiana who took any part in the debate on the Cuban question during the last two days.

I point to the balance of that editorial as a commentary on the times. Sir, it is an epitome of the corruption of American journalism. It shows the extent and the depth to which libelous, corrupt newspapers will go in order to lash public men into following their arrogant dictation. Sir, when I can bring myself, as humble as I am, to take one line of action or one inspiration of thought from the libelous and slanderous journals that are now attempting to hound this country on to war, I hope that moment will be my last.

Mr. President, I differ, and I differ honestly, with the Committee on Foreign Relations in the view which it has taken of this matter. The joint resolution which it has reported is a declaration of war. Whatever action I favor, and I do favor intervention, is predicated upon it as a humane movement which may result in war, but which is justified under international law. If war comes of it, our hands are clean. If war does not come of it, then, conjointly with Spain and the insurgents, we will relieve Cuba of the terrible suffering and destitution and misery and death which now prevail there.

Intervention by a friendly power to put an end to hostilities that have culminated into barbarous cruelties, inhuman slaughter, more inhuman starvation, and universal ruin, waste, and destruction is justified by that code which prescribes the rule of conduct among civilized nations. Nearness to the scene of conflict is a controlling factor in prompting the intervention. Being justified by principle and practice among the nations, it can not be construed, necessarily, into an act of war. While nonintervention is the rule, intervention in such a case as that of Cuba forms a just exception. Spain has not been able to pacify the island nor subdue the insurgents. The work of death and destruction goes on with a fearfully increasing progress. Humanity stands aghast at the awful spectacle, and the President, following its noble dictates and sustained by the law of nations, which is likewise God's, asks of us the power to intervene to arrest carnage and death. I, Mr. President, stand ready to grant it.

Sir, the conflict in Cuba is but the culmination of a series of revolutions commencing fifty years ago. Last night the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] alluded to the insurrection headed by Lopez, in which the gallant Kentuckian, Crittenden, lost his life. The recollections of my earliest boyhood are associated with that insurrection, for from my native town went one of the most gallant men that God ever created and was slaughtered on Cuban soil for what he thought was Cuban liberty. From the expedition of Lopez till to-day there have been insurrections after insurrections to meet the same untimely fate, the same crushing disaster, as that of Lopez.

In vain has autonomy been offered by Spain. It has been rejected by the insurgents. In vain has an armistice been offered by Spain. It has likewise been rejected by the insurgents.

The fighting still goes on, and it must cease.

But the present revolution assumes a proportion and a scope of destructive power greater than any of the preceding ones. Its inevitable result is to make Cuba a charnel house of destruction and death. From the topographical condition of that country, from the character of the people who inhabit it, descended as they are from the Spaniards, a guerrilla war is the only war they would naturally fight. From the time that the Saracens invaded Spain and defeated the Spaniards at Gibraltar until the last Moor was driven out eight hundred years after there was a constant guerrilla hand-to-hand fight between the Spaniard and the Moor.

The guerrilla instinct has been inherited by all of Spanish blood from centuries of strife, and we see it developed in Cuba to the most extensive proportions. A handful of insurgents occupying the interior of the island bid defiance to the trained soldiery of Spain. The island is about 750 miles long and about 50 miles wide. It has a population of 1,600,000 people. The interior is occupied by mountains. The habitations are mostly upon the seaboard. The insurgents retire to the mountain fastnesses and from there they swoop down upon the Spanish soldiery.

Sir, it is manifest from the history of this revolution, the inability of 200,000 armed and equipped and disciplined Spanish troops to put down 30,000 insurgents, that the power of Spain is slowly dying in that island. It is manifest that the loss of her sovereignty is but a question of time. But it does not result, even if that island is a desert, that the roving bands of insurgents without a government of law, without the forces of a civilized government, are therefore a state; and we are called upon in the amendment to the resolution to recognize a state. What is recognition? It is merely certifying to the existence of a fact. It is perceiving the identity of some status and so declaring. You can not make it by words. You can not recognize a state which has no existence, and all the power of the great Congress of the United States can not create the smallest state in Christendom by statute or declaration.

Mr. President, how do civilized countries wage war or how do they recognize the existence of war? They wage war by state against state. It is not every individual of every state who is at war with every other individual of the opposing hostile state. Noncombatants are safe. That is one of the blessings—an unalloyed, a grand blessing—that the international code has bestowed upon civilization. In ancient times during war every man's hand was against his adversary. The Romans butchered and murdered and killed or enslaved every man whose state was hostile to Rome, whether with arms or whether without. The murder of prisoners was common. But modern civilization has erected another standard. War is carried on by state against state and with regularly drilled and equipped armies. It has become a science. It is the science of death, but still it is a science. It is not a pellmell, hurly-burly fight. So, therefore, when you recognize belligerency you must recognize a war which is carried on under the code of civilized nations.

It is immaterial to inquire, as to the existence of belligerency, whether the power of recognizing it belongs to the Executive or to the legislative branch of Government, or to both conjoined; but when you recognize belligerency you must perceive, identify, point out something which civilization calls, in the language of President Grant, the terrible and awful dignity of war; not roving, undisciplined bands, not men fighting here to-day and there to-morrow over a vast expanse of territory, which they do not hold permanently, or substantially so, but you must find an army. Is there such an army in Cuba as comes up to the requirements of the modern definition of "war?" Do you find such a government as comes up to the modern definition of a "government?" Has it exclusive power within any certain area of territory? Has it courts, and does it administer justice? All these questions must be answered in the affirmative, and answered not upon inference, not upon loose, disjointed facts, not upon a paper constitution and paper schoolhouses and levies of blackmail called taxes, but you must have your established government, your equipped institutions capable of exercising all the functions of civil government, and regular armies, carrying on war under civilized methods, and then you have belligerence.

Belligerence is nothing more, upon an investigation of the authorities, which I do not care to read to any extent, than temporary statehood. When statehood becomes permanent, then you recognize the State. When it is only temporary and there is a doubt of its permanence, as in the case of Texas when General Jackson forbore to recognize the independence of that State until such time as there would be no danger of Mexican subjugation, you recognize belligerence. The only marked essential distinction is as between a permanent and temporary statehood. With whom will this great Government deal in the matter of belligerence? It must be with some political entity that has the muniments of a state, something that is covered by statehood indicia, something that there can be no mistake about upon the part of the recognizing power. That is belligerence. It is not necessary that these requirements be of a permanent character. Temporary possession of them authorizes the recognition of belligerence.

Mr. President, at the expense of thrashing over some of the old straw perhaps, I will quote certain definitions of statehood, in order to see whether or not we can recognize the independence or belligerence of the insurgents under Maximo Gomez or anybody else.

Mr. Wheaton, page 33, in his definition of a state, says:

> A state is also distinguishable from an unsettled horde of wandering savages not yet formed into a civil society. The legal idea of a state necessarily implies that of the habitual obedience of its members to those persons in whom the superiority is vested and of a fixed abode and definite territory belonging to the people by whom it is occupied.

I will read another one of them, and ask that the other definitions which I have may be inserted in my remarks in the RECORD. Woolsey, section 36, says:

> A state is a community of persons living within certain limits of territory under a permanent organization, which aims to secure the prevalence of justice by self-imposed law.

Then I refer to Hall, section 1:

> The marks of an independent state are that the community constituting it is permanently established for a political end, that it possesses a defined territory, and that it is independent of external control.

Now, in regard to the proposition which I have advanced, that belligerence is temporary statehood, I cite Hall, section 5, page 34:

> It is no doubt incumbent upon a state to treat subjects who may have succeeded in establishing a temporary independence as belligerents and not as criminals, and if it is incumbent upon the state itself, it is still more so upon foreign governments, who deal only with external facts and who have no right to pass judgment upon the value, from a moral or a municipally legal point of view, of political occurrences taking place within other countries.

There is the recognition of the proposition as to belligerence which I advanced, as drawn from the definition of statehood itself. I think it needs no further corroboration. It is self-evident to my mind.

We are called upon to vote for that which will stultify us. We are called upon to acknowledge in our legislative capacity and as having jurisdiction over the matter that which does not exist; and, sir, if it exists at all, where is the scope of its influence; where is the extent of its existence? It is said that Havana is held by the Spaniards. There are 250,000 inhabitants of that island in the one city of Havana. A majority of the population of the island is in the cities on the seaboard, not a single one of which is held by the insurgents. Now, if independence is recognized, how can the recognition cover any other than the territory occupied exclusively by the insurgents? Who has informed us where that territory is? Who could possibly define its limits and give it a local habitation? What skillful guide could conduct an American minister to the mountain capital of Gomez? It has been admitted that twice that fancied capital has been changed, but that would amount to little if there had ever been one.

Every President from Grant to McKinley, having cognizance of all the facts surrounding the case, has refused to recognize the independence of Cuba or its belligerence; and, sir, they had sympathy—not mock sympathy, but real American sympathy—for real patriots struggling for real liberty. Were they unsympathetic with the struggle for human liberty? No, sir; and if there is one argument of a practical character stronger than another to convince me of the absolute inutility of the power of recognition belonging to the legislative branch, it is our inability to get the information upon which that decision must be founded. With all the evidence upon which belligerency can be based in the possession of the President, who but him can ascertain its existence?

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CAFFERY. I decline to be interrupted now.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

Mr. CAFFERY. Here we are, sir, meditating now this question of war between Spain and the United States. Here is the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a volume of 600 pages, purporting to be the evidence and papers concerning the existing relations between Spain and the United States, and we have had three days to examine it in the midst of this exciting and absorbing debate, when we sit from 10 a. m. to late in the evening. I have not read that book. I have not had the time; and I am called on here, in this acute spasm of public indignation and wrath against the atrocities committed in Cuba, to decide upon this great question of war.

The Executive is charged, and charged solely, and charged exclusively, with the power of recognition. I have heard Senators say that because the Senate could make a commercial treaty or could make any other treaty, therefore there was a concurrent power and jurisdiction between the legislative branch and the executive branch in regard to recognition. It is not so, sir. Before you negotiate your treaty you must recognize the credentials of the representatives of powers with whom you deal, and who does that but the President? His recognition is all-sufficient and all-conclusive as to the existence of states when he recognizes their ministry as clothed with power to transact the treaty. It springs from the power to appoint and receive ministers and ambassadors. That gives a wide and exclusive operation for the executive exercise of authority in the premises.

The Executive is clothed with entire jurisdiction over our external affairs so far as diplomacy goes. Is there a man in the Senate who does not know that it largely rests within the discretion of a President whether to precipitate a war or not by acts or correspondence entirely under his control? He has charge of all the diplomatic negotiations looking to laying the foundation, both in deed and in word, for a state of affairs that may necessarily lead to war; and when we declare war, we do nothing more than act upon the findings of the Executive.

Mr. President, there can be no recognition of belligerency or independence in Cuba that will hold water under the canons of international law. We will stultify ourselves, we will violate the international law, if we do so. That law appears to be scoffed at, sneered at, as nonexistent. No civilized nation on the globe can dare fly in the face of the enlightened conscience of mankind. That law has for its sanction the rebuke of the nations of the world, and unless we want to be outlawed, unless we want to be outside of the pale of the family of nations, we can not knowingly and flagrantly violate any of the articles of the code that governs the conduct of nations toward each other.

The question of belligerency and the question of recognition have been so fully argued that I will simply content myself with the statement I have made of the general principles that I think bear upon the question.

I desire to take up the proposition advanced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in this connection. He stated that if we did recognize the independence of Cuba, and if there were anything lacking, if there were a missing link, we could make that up afterwards. In other words, that we could make independence and then recognize it.

You can not make a status of independence for another. You can only make your own. You may be an ally of another, but if you go outside of the confines of your own territory and dip into the affairs of another state and recognize that which does not exist, and set to work to make what you want to recognize, you have violated the international compact that binds states and civilized government. It does not make any difference in the case of Cuba whether the quotations that the Senator makes from President McKinley's message apply or not. If the sovereignty of Spain has ceased, it does not necessarily follow that the sovereignty of the insurgents rises and comes into existence.

We can only deal with the present state of facts. We can not predicate action on a contingent condition which, though likely, is not certain to happen. It would unsettle the relations of the world were the doctrine to obtain that, because a state may and of right ought to become independent, therefore we will proceed to recognize something nonexistent, and proceed by our aid to create the future existence of what we presently do not know to exist, or know not to exist.

Independence can not be made any other way by the people of Cuba than by clothing themselves with the muniments of statehood, and if they have not got them it makes no difference whether there is a Spaniard there or not. It may be that after the Spaniards leave the island the Cubans will proceed to get together after a while, with aid from the United States, and build up something that we can call a state, but before that happens we can not recognize it.

Mr. President, my deliberate opinion is that we stultify ourselves in voting for independence, and that the President of the United States would be bound to veto the resolution if we adopted it.

To show that the insurgents are as much to blame for the condition of affairs as the Spaniards, I will read some reports of our consuls laid before us on the 11th instant. I will turn over and read some of their reports and we will see the condition of affairs there. I have not time to read many of them. Here is a communication from Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day of the 31st of January last. I will read only the last part of it, and ask that the whole of it be incorporated in my remarks.

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 427.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, January 31, 1898.

SIR: I desire to inform the honorable Department of State that Captain-General Blanco arrived at this port on Friday night, the 28th instant, but remained on shipboard until the next morning.

The consular corps called soon after his arrival. Most of General Blanco's remarks were directed to the French and American consuls.

* * * * * * *

Colonel Marsh, of General Blanco's staff, called upon and dined with me the same evening. He speaks fairly good English, and is a gentleman of rare social qualities. On leaving he said, "I shall be at all times most happy to use whatever influence I may have with General Blanco in securing a favorable resolution of any matters that you may desire to present to him."

I told him I was prepared to take advantage of his offer at once, as there had just arrived at the custom-house in this place a quantity of quinine which the collector of customs said he could not deliver duty free without instructions from Havana. The colonel promised to lay the matter at once before the Captain-General, and the quinine is released, and, as I understand, it is ordered that all future shipments are to be promptly delivered to me, if any shall come.

On Sunday morning the regular passenger train on the Sabanilla and Maroto Railroad, when 5 miles out of Santiago, was blown up by dynamite bombs, exploded by electric wires; two cars were shivered in atoms. Five passengers were killed outright and twenty-two badly wounded, some of whom have since died. It is thought by some that the insurgents believed that Captain-General Blanco was on the train; by others that they merely wanted to notify the general that they were around and attending to business.

I am, etc.,

PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

Here is another extract showing how war is carried on in that island, the sort of highly civilized soldiers that we are to recognize, and the highly civilized conduct by which warfare is carried on. It is a letter from Mr. Hyatt again, and no one who reads these reports can accuse Mr. Hyatt of any partiality to the Spaniards. All his sympathies are with the insurgents. I read this to show how they treat autonomy:

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 423.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, February 1, 1898.

SIR: The military conditions here upon the surface are not materially changed, but to one who watches the signs of the times and knows the character of the men who act the drama the situation is not without portent.

The era of good feeling is passing away, while bitter words and cruel acts are again coming to the front. Those engaged in works of mercy are denounced for keeping alive a tribe that ought to be dead. But it can not be said there is no excuse for harsh judgment. The stoppage of all agricultural pursuits and the blowing up of cars containing innocent people can not be justified even under the guise of war. Extremists of both sides seem able to dominate the sentiments of their respective parties, while a deep feeling of personal hatred pervades their breasts.

General Blanco's mild and humane policy meets with but a feeble response from his own followers, while the insurgents laugh at the old man who throws sods and grass instead of stones.

Autonomy is already a dead issue, while buying insurgent leaders thus far is not a marked success, the insurgent generals having already imprisoned several officers suspected of venality.

Colonel Marsh, of General Blanco's staff, said recently:

"Spain fails to comprehend that Cuba has, as it were, two mothers—a political one, which is Spain; a commercial one, which is the United States; and the political mother fails to see that the commercial mother has any rights, while the commercial mother can not shake off her responsibility, for God has made them next-door neighbors."

I do not believe that the Western Continent has ever witnessed death by starvation equal to that which now exists in eastern Cuba.

Very respectfully, etc.,

PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

There is where the insurgents are blowing up passenger trains and killing passengers, private individuals, and where the consul states that autonomy is dead. I will read another extract from Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day. Let us see how they treat Americans over there. I read from No. 421, and ask that the whole letter be incorporated in my remarks:

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 421.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, January 12, 1898.

SIR: I deem it a duty to lay before the honorable Department of State the situation here as affecting American interests, and to inclose herewith an order issued by command of Gen. Maximo Gomez, and a translation of the same, forbidding the grinding of the sugar crop for the years 1897 and 1898.

In this part of Cuba, so far as I can learn, all idea of making a sugar crop is entirely abandoned.

I regret to say that the stoppage of industries, from present appearances, will not halt at the sugar crop, but coffee and other agricultural crops fall under the same ban.

I had hoped that after the reconcentration order was revoked, through the energetic action of the present administration, we would find no trouble in reinstating American industries; but it appears that all of the benefits that should have accrued to our citizens are thwarted by the action of the insurgents, who refuse to allow them to return to their sugar, coffee, and other estates. The Pompo manganese mines, owned by Americans, would at the present time be a very profitable investment if allowed to operate, are also being held up by the same power.

The three Revery brothers, who I informed you recently I was about to assist in returning to their coffee and fruit estates, got there only to find they could not go to work until permission was obtained from the insurgent commander, which permission seems doubtful, I myself, as I understand my duty, being inhibited from rendering them any assistance at this point.

These, with several sugar estates within my consular district, are held up and becoming more worthless than before.

* * * * * * *

It is beyond the power of my pen to describe the situation in eastern Cuba. Squalidity, starvation, sickness, and death meets one in all places. Beggars throng our doors and stop us on the streets. The dead in large numbers remain over from day to day in the cemeteries unburied.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

I have one or two more here. Here is one on page 33 that I will incorporate, the order of Calixto Garcia, who appears to be the insurgents' commander, ordering that any one who offered autonomy should be shot.

[Inclosure in No. 405.]

MILITARY DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST,
GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
Baire, November 6, 1897. (Third of Independence.)

To the commanding generals of the first, second, and third army corps of eastern Cuba:

Duly informed through the press that the Spanish Government is offering autonomy with the intention by these means to subdue the revolution, or at least to bring about disturbances in our ranks and weaken our cause, this general headquarters reminds you that the spirit and letter of our constitution does not admit with Spain any treaty whatever that is not based upon the absolute independence of Cuba.

In accordance with this I will be inexorable, submitting to a summary trial and will consider as traitors all civil or military officers of whatever rank who receive messages, commissions, or have any intercourse with the enemy, as the supreme government of the republic is the only one authorized, and listen to any overtures that may be made, and even the government will only listen to proposals acknowledging the absolute independence of Cuba by the Spanish Government. All persons who come within our lines commissioned by the enemy with proposals to submit to Spain will be tried and punished as spies.

In order to avoid any ignorance being professed on this subject, you will circulate this communication among your subordinates, posting this order during eight days at your headquarters and have it read in the presence of the troops.

Country and liberty.

CALIXTO GARCIA.
Commander in Chief of the Department of the East.

(Baire is a small village lying about 54 miles from the city of Santiago.)

Then, again, on page 34, I will read the letter of Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day, No. 410:

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 410.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, December 5, 1897.

SIR: The situation in this part of Cuba is not destitute of activity; nevertheless, it seems to be one of expectancy, both sides posing and waiting to see what will happen in the United States.

There is a more secure feeling since the arrival of Governor-General Blanco; otherwise no perceptible change. The reconcentration order is relaxed, but not removed; but many people have reached a point where it is a matter of entire indifference to them whether it is removed or not, for they have lost all interest in the problem of existence.

A census of the island taken to-day, as compared with one taken three years ago, I feel confident would show that two-thirds of the residents are missing; and the Spanish army would make no better showing.

The rainy season is practically over, and cooler weather is apparent, the thermometer ranging from 70° to 88° F. through the twenty-four hours, in the shade.

His Excellency Enrique Capriles, a former governor of this province, has returned to this post of duty. His former record is a sufficient guaranty of an honorable administration.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Rigney, an American sugar planter near Manzanillo, was preparing to grind during the coming season. A few nights since the insurgents fired seven cannon shots among his buildings, one ball passing through the roof of his house. Americans were hopeful that they would be allowed to make their crop, and several are making ready to do so; but the action of the insurgents toward Mr. Rigney gives the problem a doubtful aspect. It may have been a personal matter against Mr. Rigney.

The number of destitute Americans fed by this consulate decreased from 89 to 64, but is again on the increase. Since being fed, sickness among them has materially decreased and their appearance has greatly improved.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

I will not read any more, but I will ask that the next one, No. 413, on page 35, be incorporated to show that the order of reconcentration was practically wiped out at the date of this letter, December 14, 1897.

The letter is as follows:

Mr. Hyatt to Mr. Day.

No. 413.] CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, December 14, 1897.

SIR: Since my last dispatch on the situation in Cuba several military engagements of more or less importance have occurred, and the insurgents are claiming to have had the best in the fight; but until an engagement shall take place of sufficient importance to have a controlling influence, I can safely leave the press to report on such matters.

I take it to be a matter of far greater importance that I shall watch the trend of public opinion and its effects on the political situation, for thus far battles have not been the most important factors in the Cuban problem.

Up to the present we have only garbled accounts as to the contents of the President's message, so it is too early to say what its effects will be. I shall, however, watch such results with much concern, as all parties have looked forward to it with deepest solicitation.

The order of reconcentration is now practically wiped out, and so far as the Spanish Government is concerned, men go about nearly as they please. The insurgents and their sympathizers will unquestionably take advantage of the revocation to get from the towns and cities what they need, and otherwise strengthen their cause.

The effect on agricultural pursuits will be disappointing, because the great majority of those who would or should take up the work joined the insurgent forces when compelled to leave their homes, and the portion which came within the lines of reconcentration are women, children, old and sickly people, most of whom seem to have little interest in the problem of life. * * * There is no one to take these people back to the fields and utilize their remaining strength. Their houses are destroyed, their fields are overgrown with weeds, they have no seed to plant, and if they had, they can not live sixty or eighty days until the crop matures, which, when grown, would more than likely be taken by one or the other of the contending parties.

Many of those who are attached to their families have them within the insurgent lines.

* * * * * * *

Finally, I give it as my opinion, an opinion that I am sure is not biased in favor of Cuba, that Spain will be compelled to prosecute a far more vigorous war than has yet been done if she conquers peace in Cuba. I think I speak advisedly when I say that in this end of the island, at least, there are many thousand square miles where the foot of the Spanish soldier has never trod. Within this zone the insurgents have their families, corral their horses and cattle, and raise their crops. They reach the outside world by methods of their own.

Why Spain, with a large body of as obedient and brave soldiers as ever shouldered a gun, has not penetrated these grounds and scattered to the four winds the comparatively small body of men who are there is a question I will not attempt to answer.

As I write a man is dying on the street in front of my door, the third in a comparatively short time.

Very respectfully, PULASKI F. HYATT,
United States Consul.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, not only from these consular reports, but from the statements in General Grant's first message and the statements of every President who has written of Cuba since, have the wars between the insurgents and the Spanish Government been characterized, on either side, as of excessive atrocity, of unexampled fierceness, and of complete devastation and ruin to the country. It has been shown that the combatants on either side are guilty of excesses. The war first started with the firing of the cane fields in eastern Cuba. When Weyler, for whom I have no words but those of condemnation, saw that the insurgents were destroying the power of the sugar planters and others to make a living and pay taxes to the Spanish Government, he ordered the reconcentration of the pacificos, thought to be friendly to the insurgents. So between these two atrocious policies of destruction that island is a desert and a waste.

Both sides are responsible for it; the insurgents as well as the Spaniards. They are the same sort of people. There is no difference between them in respect to cruelty and a talent for destruction. They are mostly all of Spanish blood. They inherit all the virtues and all the vices of their parentage. They have shown as much cruelty in warfare, as much wanton waste and destruction of property, as the Spaniards themselves.

General Grant mentions in one of his messages the fearful tragedy of the murder by the insurgents of 600 Spanish prisoners at one swoop. It may or may not have been retaliation; but there was and is a war of absolute extermination going on there. That is the reason, and the only reason, why we can intervene. The only basis upon which you can put intervention, outside of the right of self-defense, is on the humane basis. That is a real, legal basis. It is a basis that is acknowledged by the humane code that governs the conduct of nations. It is a fearful responsibility for a state to undertake to judge of the circumstances that authorize an intervention for humane purposes.

The ground must be clear of doubt; the facts must be known with certainty. No mere sympathy for a people struggling for freedom is a proper or legal basis.

We seek no gain; we seek no conquest. If, to gain ends of peace, we must use the agency of war, the responsibility does not rest with us. We must discharge, in the face of difficulties both present and others looming up in the future, a solemn duty to humanity and to civilization.

The probability of some reconcentrados dying by reason of our intervention may come to pass, but it is better that some should die than all. It is better to save some than that all should perish.

But, sir, the exigency is on us. Impelled by the highest motive that can animate a nation, we are compelled to intervene; and for what? To stop a war of extermination and devastation; nothing more. If in order to restore peace, and permanently secure it, we may have to go farther and establish a government, we do that as incidental to the power to intervene—in order to carry out the beneficent purposes of the intervention.

Sir, that embarrassments and difficulties may grow out of this none will deny, but we can not foresee what the future may bring forth in the incidental duties that may devolve upon us. I regret that the hand of the President has been forced by the clamor for war. He and his predecessor have declared that affairs might get so bad as to compel the United States to intervene, and the time is at hand now to do so.

That is the basis upon which we can rest and defy civilization to point out one single flaw in our procedure. It is not only a right, but in our case it is a duty, a high Christian, civilized duty. It is useless to talk as to whether or not autonomy has been offered. It has been offered, but it has been rejected. The bearer of a flag of truce was murdered in cold blood who tendered on behalf of Spain the offer of autonomy and self-government to the islanders. There is an order in the consular reports from which I have read showing that it is death to speak of autonomy to an insurgent.

Sir, what kind of a cause is that? Even a whisper of peace is met by the murderous machete. Is that the sort of a republic that we want to unduly launch upon the civilized world, created by our breath, where the bearer of a flag of truce and the conveyor of a message of peace has to be murdered?

Sir, we are justified under the international law and in the Christian conscience of civilization for intervention. It is said we have to recognize what does not exist in order to make that intervention good. Sir, we will then start with a fraud. We will start by passing a spurious counterfeit statehood upon the world. That is a start that the United States deliberately proposes to make in this contemplated proceeding. We can not do it and maintain our self-respect as one of the self-respecting nations of the globe. You can not make states like you make paper money. You can not make states like you enact a statute. They are something to be made by and on behalf of the people who reside in them, and no outsider can by statute make them. Any demand, therefore, for us to acknowledge the existence of a fraud, the existence of a counterfeit, ought to be spurned out of this Chamber.

Sir, the war feeling must be strong that would carry our people to the length of recognizing a falsehood and perpetrating a wrong and launching upon international life a counterfeit state, which would inevitably lead to war.

And whose war would it be, Mr. President? Ours? Is there a foot of American soil that has been invaded by the hostile tread of the invader? Is there a single citizen of the United States deprived of his life or liberty anywhere in the civilized world for which we ought to take up arms? Whose fight is it that we are plunging into? Not our fight. It is a fight between certain insurrectionary persons in the Island of Cuba and the Spanish Crown, and under ordinary circumstances we have nothing to do with it.

Sir, if there was one single legitimate cause of war to unite this people, 1,000,000 swords would leap from their scabbards to defend the honor and the power and the reputation of the United States without debating the question an instant. Why do we talk here? Because this resolution involves the consideration of a momentous question affecting the good name and the reputation of the United States. It affects us very nearly, very closely. It affects us in our judgment and in our conscience.

Sir, this is not a question to be decided by passionate appeal. This is not a question to be submitted to the arts of rhetoric. This question can not be decided by vilification of Spain; nor, sir, ought it to be decided with any reference to any small, political, contemptible, partisan advantage.

Sir, this country appears to be swept from its feet by a perfect cyclone of passion. Men of ordinary judgment appear to be lost in amazement when they contemplate the extent to which mixed sympathy and passion are driving us.

Sir, men get up here in this Chamber and tell us it is no time to talk, but to act. Act how? Are we going to act foolishly? Are we going to act without cause? Are we going to plunge these 70,000,000 people into the horrors of war? We are told to act, to turn loose the dogs of war and let them dip their bloody tongues in human gore. That is the cry heard everywhere. Any temperate counsel is spurned, and a man of moderation is talked of as I have been talked of in the editorial that I have placed upon the records this morning.

Mr. President, I will lay down my position thus: The United States of America, moved and inspired by the highest considerations of humanity and duty, do hereby declare that the war between Spain and her insurgent colony shall cease. This is the language, the noble language, of President McKinley. And that in order to make that declaration good he shall intervene there with all the power of this great Republic, and then and there, if necessary, establish such a government as will secure permanent peace. Whether Spain likes it or whether Spain does not, we have gone too far to consider.

It is idle, sir, to refer to all the concomitant and conspiring circumstances and incidents that tend to the terrible conclusion of war. This ground of pure, unalloyed humanity is sufficient for any Senator in this Chamber to stand on. It is an aggravation of it to bring in the finding in regard to the Maine. That is an aggravating cause, but no man can say that it is a controlling cause.

Why, sir, have we gone insane? Here is a board of inquiry constituted out of our own officers. Their finding is thrown to the winds. Another hearing is taken by a body of civilians and they find suspicion of foul play by Spain, which an able court of inquiry did not entertain or did not put down in their report.

Ah, sir, I commend that report of the naval court of inquiry and Captain Sigsbee's telegram preceding that report. It ought to have given the tone to the American conduct and to the American action in regard to this whole question between the United States and Spain. "Suspend your judgment," says that most admirable officer, suspend your judgment; do not go off too quick; do not lose your heads; we will investigate; we will try to find out how this occurred, and when it is found out, we will say so. In the meantime "suspend your judgment."

An admirable, excellent, noble telegram, and at the time that it was written calculated to allay what he must have known were the high-wrought feelings of a great-hearted people struck almost dumb at the news of the terrible catastrophe. Instead of following that example, every art of rhetoric, every device of the demagogue, is resorted to to help plunge this country into a precipitate war.

Sir, I do not contemplate an honorable war, a just war, with any other feeling than one of sorrow, but I do contemplate a war waged between the United States and another power without a just ground as the most fearful curse that could fall upon the devoted heads of our good, honest, patriotic citizens.

Sir, as showing the rash and ill-considered war clamor, the finding of the Navy board of inquiry and the action and stand of the President are set aside, and the incident of the Maine is taken as the firm ground of battle.

Our own court has found no casus belli. Our own President has founded no case on that incident.

No impartial man can find a case on what, though terrible and shocking, sending a thrill of horror throughout the globe, has not been traced to Spain or Spain's act. Until Spain's complicity is established her liability to war does not arise.

Mr. President, I had intended to elaborate the questions in this case at much greater length. I will only now state some conclusions that I think may flow from intervention.

I have no hesitancy in saying that the condition of affairs in Cuba may be such after intervention as to require other than a cast-iron line of procedure. We are but little acquainted with that people and their conditions. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has given the clearest, the most succinct, and the most comprehensive statement that I have heard on the subject, and he does not satisfy me entirely. He could not have known the insurgents, the body of whom are to constitute the electorate. He did not see them; he was in the city of Havana mostly, and necessarily got his information secondhand.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. GRAY. Nor did he speak Spanish.

Mr. CAFFERY. Well, that is another drawback; but whether he spoke Spanish or not, he was not in the field, where he could discover precisely what kind of a government that people require. That ultimately some kind of a government of the people will be established there is without question; but, Mr. President, that is a most delicate operation, involving a practical acquaintance with the local conditions, involving a knowledge of who ought and who ought not to belong to the electorate, involving, in short, a complete inquiry as to the social and political conditions of that island.

Does not everybody know that after this war—you may say it is the culmination of the war of 1868—has lasted now thirteen years, with a break of seventeen years, the feelings of bitterness and hatred that have been engendered between the contestants must require of whoever goes in there to establish a government most cautious, most wise action?

The honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] in a speech delivered in this body said that the insurgents had four centuries of wrongs to resent and injuries to avenge, and that the lex talionis would be applied. If that be so, Mr. President, is it not incumbent upon us to give the President of the United States the widest latitude of operation, the widest discretion? It seems to me so. It seems to me that the House resolution must be modified in some particulars so as to give him a full and plenary jurisdiction on the lines that he asks for in his message.

I must say, sir, that that message commends itself to me, to the world, to civilization, as one of the most sagacious, wise, humane, and statesmanlike documents that ever came from a civilized ruler. It will be a memorial hereafter to the wisdom and patience and patriotism of President McKinley. It will show, when the proper occasion arises, the man whom the American electorate selects for the Presidency will always rise up to its height, however high it may be, and the greater the occasion the greater his patriotism.

Mr. President, one thought more, and I will take my seat. I have no doubt in my own mind that in the future the Island of Cuba will be ours. I do not say that we ought, in a spirit of aggression or greed for additional territory, to take any steps to bring about that result; but I do say that the finger of destiny itself points to it. It is not in the condition of the Hawaiian Islands or some insignificant point in the Pacific or the Atlantic. It is necessary to round up, as Mr. Jefferson said in an early day, the full possessions of the American Republic. No man can sail past the Florida Keys into the Gulf of Mexico who does not see the vast importance of that island to the American Republic. It is a part, and an essential part, of the Monroe doctrine that that island shall belong to no other foreign country than Spain.

What is the significance of that doctrine, Mr. President? Some time in the course of events Spain will have to let go that island. Spain is poor. She is vexed with dynastic trouble. Her resources can not much longer stand the drain of keeping up a struggle in which the chances of success are desperate. There will be an independent government in Cuba, even if we, the United States keep hands off now. Then Americans will flock there. They will finally get control of the government. Revolutions will, no doubt, break out at intervals, as they have in every Spanish-American country, but constant accessions of Americans will gradually cement their strength and importance. Loyalty to the Stars and Stripes will compel the erection of our national ensign as the governing flag in Cuba. I do not say, Mr. President, that I desire to see Cuba a State in the American Union. Certainly not until after a long tutelage of the population under Federal guardianship. That tutelage will be found necessary to fit the mass of the inhabitants there for the duties of citizenship as we understand them. But the destiny of Cuba is to be a part of a Republic to which, by situation and interests, she is and will be so closely bound.

With its nearness to this great Republic, right under the shadow of our institutions and influence, with the commercial intercourse between us and Cuba so large and constantly increasing, it is the part of wisdom to forecast the time when the lone star of the Cuban banner will glitter in the constellation on the blue field of our own star-spangled banner. But, ah, sir, that is not what the insurgents want now. They want independence. They have had the United States fighting their battles all the way along. The Cuban junta has directed operations from the city of New York. It does not stand them in hand to say that they have not sold or issued over a hundred thousand dollars of bonds. It is manifest that nobody will take them until the independence of that island is recognized; and to this end, they have bent every energy to force recognition by the United States.

Now, sir, when they get their independence, what then? Their bonds will, I am told, go to 40 cents in the dollar. They want, perhaps, to take the plantations that belong to the Spaniards as security for them. The Spaniards own nearly all the property. That appears to be the fact from the representations of the consuls. There are in Cuba about 300,000 Spaniards; there are about 800,000 Cubans; there are about 500,000 colored. That 800,000 will probably dominate the balance of the population, possibly tolerating the colored, until such time as they can be set aside. Such a heterogeneous population, animated by the hatreds of war, liable to clash from racial differences, naturally leads to revolution. A government recognized to-day may be extinct to-morrow, until finally the result of which I have spoken will come to pass—the incorporation of the island into the territory of this Republic.

Mr. President, I will leave the subject at this point. I have endeavored to look at this question as calmly and as dispassionately as I could. Whether or not I have struck the right line is for others to say. But whatever conclusion I have arrived at has at least been one attained after much reflection and after the best judgment I could give to the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I rise to speak with much hesitation and much sadness. I can not help seeing before me, possibly, a great addition to that debt from which we thought we had happily recovered in a great measure. I see before me the possible sacrifice of many lives, the anxieties and sorrows of hundreds and thousands, an aggregate of centuries of suffering. But I have listened with the others to all, or very nearly all, of the debate, and to the decision and conclusion that honor and duty call upon us to declare war with Spain for the purpose of putting a forcible end to great wrongs.

Our position as a nation seems to command it. We are, we will say, seventy-five millions of people, surpassing all others in physical power and material resources of all descriptions. We claim to be at the head of the world in wisdom, freedom, law, the liberty of our Constitution, and our system in general.

Evidently, Mr. President, we can not expect that we should drift through the world, being thus crowded along, you may say, by Divine Providence, to this magnificent position, without taking some of the responsibilities that naturally fall upon such power and such a situation.

We shall be inexcusable if we see near by us a comparatively powerful and cruel people most grossly oppressing for generations, robbing, trampling upon—yes, under the forms of war—murdering people by the scores of thousands. The instinct that always pushes an honorable gentleman to interfere between a cowardly bully and a weak cripple demands that we interpose with the powerful mailed hand of the great Republic and say "Stop!" And notwithstanding the sad aspect of many things, I say we must go forward "to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a manly heart" and meet the situation.

But I have some criticisms to suggest—and that is chiefly my reason for rising—of the resolutions that are before us. I wish my constituents to understand that I can not pass them by without something of objection. The first point that occurs to me is that I am opposed to a declaration of the independence of the so-called Republic of Cuba. I think that is unnecessary. I think it is not justified by the facts. Heroic as have been the struggles of that people for a long series of years, thirteen years out of the last thirty years having been spent in fighting, I can not think that they have yet clearly and legally reached the position where they are entitled to be called an independent government.

I think that General Jackson stated this matter about as well as anyone, and, though it has been frequently quoted, I think it necessary to incorporate the substance of what he said in my remarks. He said, relating to acknowledging the independent existence of Texas in 1836:

> It has thus made known to the world that the uniform policy and practice of the United States is to avoid all interference in disputes which merely relate to the internal government of other nations, and eventually to recognize the authority of the prevailing party without reference to our particular interests and views or to the merits of the original controversy.
> * * * But on this, as on every other trying occasion, safety is to be found in a rigid adherence to principle.
> In the contest between Spain and the revolted colonies we stood aloof, and waited not only until the ability of the new states to protect themselves was fully established, but until the danger of their being again subjugated had entirely passed away—

That is not the present position at all—

> Then, and not until then, were they recognized.
> Such was our course in regard to Mexico herself. * * * It is true that with regard to Texas the civil authority of Mexico has been expelled—

He was speaking in view of the then existing situation—

> its invading army defeated, the chief of the Republic himself captured, and all present power to control the newly organized government of Texas annihilated within its confines—

That is far ahead of this situation—

> but, on the other hand, there is, in appearance at least, an immense disparity of physical force on the side of Texas. The Mexican Republic, under another Executive, is rallying its forces under a new leader and menacing a fresh invasion to recover its lost dominion.
> Upon the issue of this threatened invasion the independence of Texas may be considered as suspended.

And one of the most combative and gallant and vigorous military men we ever had in the country dared to stop there. The situation was far, very far, in advance of the situation of the relations between Cuba and Spain:

> Prudence, therefore, seems to dictate that we should still stand aloof and maintain our present attitude, if not until Mexico itself or one of the great foreign powers shall recognize the independence of the new government, at least until the lapse of time or the course of events shall have proved beyond cavil or dispute the ability of the people of that country to maintain their separate sovereignty and to uphold the government constituted by them.

That statement General Jackson did not make without abundant legal counsel of the highest authority, and I judge from what I have read and heard and the full, learned, and long speeches we have heard from various Senators that this position is justified by the ablest writers on international law and by the conduct of nations whose decisions are most entitled to respect. Therefore I can not vote to declare that Cuba is independent. I might say that of right she ought to be independent; but she is not independent, and why say it? It is not necessary to our entering honorably upon this contest. Besides—and it has been fully discussed among other topics—it may give rise to very dangerous complications.

We all know that a great jealousy is entertained among all the great powers of the world, a fear that we may be seeking to aggrandize ourselves and to enter upon that most reprehensible and, as nations go, I think, dishonorable practice in the extension of territory, which picks a quarrel and finally seizes the territory, which steps into a controversy and turns it to its own advantage, for evidence of which consult every page of history of the last one hundred years. We do not desire to be involved in these controversies. We do not wish other powers to say to us that we also have joined them in this selfish and cruel policy. We are not seeking conquest and annexation.

The Senate resolution then demands—

> That the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces.

I think that unnecessary. Why set that task? It would very probably be the result of the war we are anticipating; but why put in limitations or restrictions? Recite our provocation; recite the absolute justice of our case, and then declare war to right the wrongs, and leave the details to come up, as they will, in their due order hereafter. The lawyer who attempts to provide for every emergency by great particularity of precaution is laying the ground for lawsuits and only embarrassing himself.

The supervision of the war and the treaty, if one shall be made, and all the negotiations that doubtless will be going along sub rosa during the contest—all those are in charge of the President, because the Constitution puts our foreign relations in his hands, and no law we may pass here can take them out of his hands. He will be the captain-general of our armies and of our navies and the controller of our international relations in any event. Why not leave it so?

I vastly prefer the House resolution, which says:

> That the President is hereby authorized and directed to interfere at once to stop the war in Cuba—

I think that, however the American people may differ among themselves, they are all of them willing to say that—> to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order

there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba.

That is democratic; that is American doctrine. Then follows the delegation of authority to the President, empowering him to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of the resolution. That is necessary. Those people have undergone terrible afflictions.

I speak of the thirteen years of war out of thirty; the desperate, vindictive, fierce, utterly unappeasable ferocity of that outraged people. Whatever you may say of inherited characteristics, no people could have so conducted themselves during such a number of years, with such very limited resources and such immense discouragements, unless there had been a foundation for their hatreds; and there is a foundation, the Lord knows, great enough. Their taxation, according to the latest figures I have seen, would bring, if a similar taxation were levied here, $1,120,000,000 a year—considerably more than twice what our taxation is; and that is upon a comparatively weak and poor people, nothing or next to nothing of which is returned in the way of the internal development of the island.

And there is a tax upon exports, even upon their tobacco, but nothing comparatively is done for the little railroads that might be run from the interior towns to the seaports, or any works that build up trade and commerce. Very little is done that we read or hear of in the improvement of the harbors; indeed the money is all taken to Spain under the most cruel conditions, with but a mere supposition of return. And since 1878 a very considerable portion of the revenue is devoted to paying interest upon the debt incurred in subduing after ten years of war.

Of course, fifteen minutes is a very short time to men accustomed to take their time in political campaigns; but I can not close these few observations without giving in defense, if I may call it such—no, that is not necessary—without saying some words in favor of the President and of a President, of any President of the United States; for every one of them, by the fact of his having been intrusted with the gigantic power of this nation, is entitled to our instant respect from the day he is declared to be nominated, and they have justified it.

Take them together, make out of the Presidents for one hundred and nine years one man who has been President, and he will be found to be a gentleman, a brave man, a patriot, and an honest man. Nor can it be supposed that any man will take that position without feeling "Now, this is all I can hope for in the way of earthly power or honor. What remains to me is to make a record such that posterity shall speak well of me." No President has been in the chair, and it is impossible that any shall be in the future, who will not think so of himself and of his duty. Nor is there a President of whom any gentleman ought even to insinuate that he has been impelled by selfish or corrupt motives in the discharge of his high duties.

The President of the United States is entitled to our sympathy. He is the loneliest man in the Republic. There is no man above him in power; no man equal to him in power. No man has the painful responsibilities that he bears. Therefore every American gentleman, whoever may be the President, should sympathize with him, extend to him a welcoming hand and a welcoming voice, and stand by him while he is right.

I am proud to say that I have endeavored to go with the President and have found myself justified in doing so. I would rather he had been a trifle in default in his delay, though I think he has not been, and in his love of peace and in his desire to avoid bloodshed and the waste of treasure, than to have seen him bloodthirsty, hasty, and revengeful in plunging into the horrors of war.

Mr. President, our President is a soldier, a gentleman, a statesman, and this supreme crisis will only serve to bring out the brightness of his character. Save only in exceptional cases that exhibit his worth by contrast, he has won the sympathy and respect of the world.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I recognize the solemnity of this occasion, the most momentous that within my brief day has challenged the attention of the American people. To its solution there should be brought the best intellectual capacity of all who have the obligation or right to act, and the judgment rendered should be uninfluenced by aught else than the dictates of justice. The high duty which we are called to perform will test our qualifications for the trust committed to our keeping. It is disagreeable, to use an expression scarcely forcible enough to cover the occasion, to dissent from the common view—to antagonize a general but suddenly formed conclusion. It is pleasant to receive the plaudits of our fellow-men.

The approval that evidences the concurrence of the public inspires us all, adducing unfeigned delight that conscientious thought has permitted us to take action in accordance with the general view. Confronted by these considerations and thoroughly appreciative of the good will of those by whom I am surrounded, I can not avoid the fact that there stand on the other side suggestions of the most solemn obligations. These I must interpret for myself. There is for me nothing save to express those conclusions which my conception of right have caused me to form regardless of personal interest. I can less easily depart from the pathway thus demarked than sacrifice my most cherished and dearest surroundings.

Nay, Mr. President, the terrible responsibility which requires our attention is beyond all things merely personal or individual. We are here to do the right, no matter what ill shall attend us. We are here compelled to make history; not vainglorioustly to seek to transmit our names to posterity, but to write the record of a nation which we love beyond self, a record which we should so make that when we have passed away will shine bright and unchanging in the full radiance of the intellectuality and morality of enlightened men.

Mr. President, what are the questions here? We witness, but slightly removed, a scene of war. The intervening distance is hourly diminishing. I agree that the conditions are such that it is almost useless, perhaps absolutely so, to urge a pause or to attempt to retard the warlike tendency. But it will not be amiss in this moment of excitement, this hour of exaltation, this time of unreasoning patriotism, to delay an instant and to reflect upon the nature of the act about to be done and the consequences certain to follow.

The situation is of mighty import. It is no waste of time to portray it with impartiality and candor. The acts here done will live as long as freedom—as long as justice shall be administered among men. We must be warranted not by an excited populace, but by wise decrees of unimpassioned history. I regret that under these circumstances, either in the report of the Senate committee or upon this floor, expressions have been used indicating prejudice and savoring of revenge. I regret that the debates in this Chamber should refer to stale events transpiring under Spanish influences more than three hundred years ago, or that the committee should have spoken of "the duplicity, perfidy, and cruelty of the Spanish character, as they have always been."

Mr. President, the right to make such charges we have waived. We have accepted a seat with Spain in the family of nations. She has not been excluded from our sovereign society. We have thrown around her the arm of fraternal friendship and seized her hand in affectionate clasp. We have received her ministers, sent ours to her court, and in all respects declared to the world our friendship for her. During our great Exposition we invited her representatives to our shores. The Infanta Eulalia was received with almost unexampled honors—greater, perhaps, than were accorded to the envoys of other countries. We are estopped to seek a cause for estrangement in the wrongs of departed generations. The present difficulties must be determined in the light of actual conditions, without reference to the transgressions of antiquity. Any other treatment would be undignified and even puerile. Let us meet the momentous questions presented to us in the light of their peculiar and legitimate surroundings. As rational men we can afford to treat as immaterial and unfortunate the references to the Duke of Alva and the Inquisition. We will not, I presume, pretend to free Cuba or to attack Spain because of these iniquities.

Mr. President, no one doubts that Cuba has been misgoverned. No one doubts that many places and many peoples in this world have been misgoverned. No one doubts that this great Republic is potent enough to defend herself in any engagement. I cordially indorse the utterances of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] with reference to this topic. There is no glory to be gained by the United States in a war with Spain. Intrinsically and as far as war itself, disentangled from other propositions, is concerned, no fame will be won by us. Spain is weak. She no longer commands the sea or dominates the land. In the march of events—by forces beyond her control—her foreign dominions have been taken away. She has been shorn of the possessions which she acquired by her enterprise and her valor. She has lost nearly all these, until she stands to-day in the presence of her woes, the Niobe of nations. Her financial embarrassments, her shattered treasury, her army reduced by disease and hunger, her navy of indifferent strength, her resources lessening daily—she is, indeed, but a remnant of the Spain which wrested the Alhambra from the Moslem.

I do not fear her. No American fears her. There is no rational question of the outcome of the impending struggle. It must be victory for the American people. But, Mr. President, powerful as we are, with millions of freemen ready, whatever may be our personal views, to spring to arms and to give our every dollar and the last drop of blood to vindicate our nation's honor and defend our flag; with our fertile soil budding and blossoming with products of luxury and necessity over an almost limitless area; with all the gifts and blessings of nature about us in rich profusion—our possession and our heritage—we are great enough to do justice.

In the early days of this Republic, in the dawn of our nation's life, a great statesman said with truth that he knew of no spectacle more sublime than that of a powerful nation kneeling before the altar of justice and sacrificing there alike her passion and her pride.

Here we can rest an instant to look upon conditions as they actually exist, and to write in compliance with verity a record which in cooler moments will be scrutinized by our children, who will ask themselves whether we were right. There may be no recall for our error. There can be no excuse for a mistake easily detected or direful in result.

The President of the United States, charged by the Constitution with the conduct of our diplomatic affairs, has been earnestly and actively engaged in attempting to bring about order in Cuba, followed by the independence of that island. It is my opinion that if he is permitted to pursue the course he has marked out for himself, if we let him alone, Cuba will be free, the Maine incident will be justly and honorably settled, and not one drop of American or other blood will be shed as a result of present estrangements.

But we are to have war. Every Senator who has spoken declares so, and in the same breath deprecates such a consequence. In beautiful language, in phraseology I will not attempt to rival, Senators have depicted here the atrocities of warfare. Who knows them not? Who has read the story of man and has failed to sicken at the ghastly spectacle of the battlefield?

> Lo, the giant on the mountain stands,
> His blood-red tresses gleaming in the sun.

When did reason assign to brutal conflict the settlement of any dispute? What true Christian ever willingly consecrated to the arbitrament of brutality issues involving rectitude and honor? War is the last resort. If wantonly resorted to it is wholesale murder.

There are times when settlement is impossible, when every reasonable offer has been spurned, and when the welfare and honor of individual and people alike demand that the sword shall be drawn. But the cause must be evident and undeniable. All other solutions must have failed. The nation that rushes into war in hot haste has not drank of the fountain of wisdom. When I was a child but some 8 years of age, the horrors of internecine strife broke upon the United States. Shattered forms, some of them in this Chamber, ruined homes all over the land, men and women mourning for those holier to them than property or life, furnish proof even now before the world that—

> Elemental rage is tame to the wrath of man.

Nearly a million names upon our pension roll rehearse the story more graphically than human lips may depict it, and demonstrate how much of ill effect remains more than a third of a century after the storm has passed. This is but an instance. All history is thronged with examples and is pictured with the terrible experience. Senators conceding all this yet say that war must come, because our honor shall not be impugned, even though a desperate struggle may be forced upon humanity.

I agree that there are occasions where an appeal to arms alone remains. I repudiate the calumny that those who do not find a reason for extreme measures here are for "peace at any price." This slanderous charge emanates from the thoughtless or insincere. I am for war only when it can not be honorably and wisely avoided. I am against war where the desired legitimate results can be otherwise attained. I am opposed to precipitate action. In the presence of such a possibility those charged with grave responsibility should be patient as well as firm, just as well as courageous. A delay, even if compelled by an opponent without candor, is better than unnecessary hostilities.

I propose in a very general manner to examine the alleged grounds for the action we are asked to take by the Committee on Foreign Relations. We are told that the abhorrent conditions in Cuba have been a disgrace to civilization, and have culminated in the destruction of the Maine and 266 of her officers and crew, and that the conditions prevailing can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President in his message of April 11, 1898; and hence we are expected to declare that the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent; that this Government demand that Spain at once leave the island, and that this demand be enforced by the President. The Executive, in the message referred to, merely sought authority to take measures to stop hostilities, establish a stable government, and to use the Army and Navy, if needful, for these purposes. All concede that Spain will not yield to these demands.

Mr. President, a Senator has said that the Maine incident alone or the Cuban inhumanities alone might not be sufficient to precipitate war, but that conjointly they render this outcome unavoidable. Our people have never been so thrilled as when they learned that their great and beautiful ship in the harbor of Havana had been torn to pieces and that the bodies of loved ones had been driven into the mud and mire of an alleged peaceful haven. They were not and are not in a condition to take a judicial view. The public heart was fired, and the demand for vengeance echoed and echoes from every hill. It is borne from the shores of the Pacific far inland; it does not pause on the summit of the Sierras; nor does it lose its resonance upon the crest of the Rocky Mountains. From ocean to ocean it thunders, and on the stormy Atlantic tells in the language of a common kindred its uncompromising resolve.

Pause a minute, Senators, and ask yourselves: Is there, even under these circumstances, no possible solution except that of arms? I will not discuss the evidence as to the destruction of the Maine. I will not go over the reports of the American and Spanish boards. I may not entirely agree with everything which has been said concerning them, but I do not intend to make this an arena for such a disputation. I assume, as it is my duty to do in view of the position of my Government, that the report of the American board is correct. But shall the adverse party be absolutely prevented from questioning this conclusion? Senators say that Spain has virtually admitted the act. No such confession will ever be found by the impartial investigator. Spain denies that she either directly or indirectly did it. The President, declaring that the naval court of inquiry has the unqualified confidence of the Government, says of that report:

> It did not assume to place the responsibility. That remains to be fixed.

He then declares that the Maine incident discloses an intolerable state of things in Cuba, informs us that Spain assures us that she will do all that the highest honor requires, and that she proposes—

> That the facts be ascertained by an impartial investigation by experts, whose decision Spain accepts in advance.

To this communication no reply has been made. No ultimatum has been issued by us; no final demand regarding the Maine; no refusal to arbitrate. The President does not find any cause for war here. But it is said war alone will atone for the Maine. Neither the question of liability nor indemnity can, it is asserted, be considered. Assuming a crime was committed, who are the guilty persons?

General Lee says that he does not believe that General Blanco had anything to do with it or had any knowledge of it; that when Blanco heard of it he cried; he seemed to regret it as much as anyone. Well might Blanco regret it. He knew, as the world knows, that such an act upon the part of Spain would be madness. General Lee, who was on the ground and observed the tout ensemble of the situation, said he was confident of Blanco's sincerity in grief. But at all events it is vehemently averred that this was an external explosion; that it was the result of the act of a Spaniard, an officer of Spain, and the penalty of his deed, under the laws of nations and the dictates of justice, should be visited not only upon him but should likewise be inflicted upon Spain. And for this we must resort to war. No indemnity will suffice or be accepted.

Senators have said no indemnity can reach this case. What can reach it? A few years ago in an Asiatic empire there were several missionaries murdered. Three great nations demanded that the guilty should be punished. Ten or fifteen miserable wretches were seized, bound and placed side by side, and beheaded. Perhaps some of them were guilty. At all events, they were offered in atonement. One of the nations involved objected that there were still others who had been participants in the original crime, and the officer in charge of the province, desiring no foreign complication, ordered out other victims and beheaded them likewise, remarking to the insistent foreigners, "Is there anything else, gentlemen, that I can do for you?"

Are we, Senators, to solve the Maine issue upon this atonement theory?

Upon what principle are we to act? Is there any question as to how the dispute should be settled? If it was the deliberate act of an individual and by any process of investigation we could discover that individual, it would be our duty to follow him up and to demand that he should be delivered over to impartial justice. But we do not know the perpetrator. We can not identify him. We insist, however, that Spain shall be punished as a criminal and that barbaric methods shall be invoked.

Mr. President, in cases such as this there is no settlement worthy of the age save the imposition, if the facts be proven, of a liberal and commensurate indemnity and suitable admission of the propriety of our demands.

I would not waive indemnity. Such a waiver would be in the interest of Spain. Assuming that the Maine was lost under circumstances involving that Kingdom, a sum commensurate with the deed should be exacted. If you decline indemnity, what are you to do? Shall we train our guns on Morro Castle, upon the city of Havana, drop our shells upon the innocent, and send to eternal judgment men, women, and children who knew nothing in advance of the Maine disaster and are not guilty unless their mere presence in the island makes them so? Will you invade Spain? Will you carry the sword of conquest to her capital city and destroy her as would the conquerors of old? Surely such conduct would be antagonistic to the teachings of Christianity. But I am told, "As a penalty, free Cuba."

But, Mr. President, if you admit that there is to be a penalty at all susceptible of justification, you must concede that it should be exacted in accordance with the rules and laws of civilized peoples. You can not justly free Cuba except upon the merits of her claims. If she is entitled to freedom, her argument must rest upon its own merits. The day for an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, if it ever existed, has passed away. Such a doctrine can not be taught, save by a heretic, from the pulpit of civilization. Surely no human being in this enlightened age wishes to slay an innocent person because of the misconduct or crime of another. Shall we find consolation in the mangled forms and destroyed property which will follow our invasion? If this be true as to the injury we are to do the Spaniard, what shall we say of our own people? Who shall ever pay for the stalwart and brilliant American manhood to be sacrificed? For these no money can be paid or indemnity exacted. If our heroes must die, let it be in an unavoidable conflict, not in a case still under negotiation and where there is a difference of opinion as to the facts.

There are times and hours when such calamities must occur. Such times have been; they are not forgotten in the glorious records of human prowess. But the time is not now. Upon what do you rely to justify war, Senators? Who is the President of the United States? I am not of his party. I need not call attention to that fact. But he, as our Executive, charged with the duty of administering diplomatic affairs, in a state paper which will remain here as long as the archives of this Government endure, has stated your case. Before the world to-day, to-morrow, and after is and will be that statement, made within the Presidential jurisdiction—a statement emanating from the loftiest station known to our system.

What does he tell us? He informs us in appropriate and plain words that the Maine matter is the subject of diplomatic negotiation; that he has forwarded a note to Spain and that Spain has responded, declaring that she is willing to submit the matter to an impartial tribunal and to accept its verdict as final. To that proposition no reply, no demand, has been made. We have not officially insisted that Spain must do any particular thing in consequence of the Maine incident. She denies that she is guilty, and because she so denies we are told eo instanti arose a casus belli; that because she negatives the charge in the indictment she can not be heard before any tribunal save one of our own creation. Such is the proposition upon which you must act.

In the council halls of reason, in that tribunal where a single nation does not dominate, but where civilization asserts itself and justice and manhood prevail, it will be held that there has been no judicial investigation of this subject, and this will be the verdict of history, regardless of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. No man can judicially investigate the case of one he loves and honors, and who has died, according to common report, by perfidious hands. Can one so interested impartially try the accused? Our own jurisprudence is builded on other and more rational lines. Human nature is too weak, its infirmities too obvious, to permit under such conditions that impartiality which alone makes a judgment final in the opinion of the able and the just. No investigation has been conducted with "judicial thoroughness and deliberation," the Committee on Foreign Relations to the contrary. No such judicial thoroughness is being displayed here. We are rushing along at a rate to make familiarity with the record an impossibility, and are given less time to examine issues involving war than is ordinarily accorded to a litigant in an unimportant matter.

For a moment let us consider the other phase of this unhappy dispute—that which seeks to justify our invasion of Cuba because of the inhumanities which have been practiced there. The President feelingly and forcibly alludes to the barbarities which he hopes to terminate. He attributes the extraordinary suffering to Weyler's reconcentrado order, but at the same time there is transmitted to us correspondence from our consuls in Cuba showing not only that the reconcentrado order has been vacated, but that the insurgents have themselves interfered with the ability of the people to earn their bread. From these reports I make the following extracts:

On page 28, Mr. McGarr, at Cienfuegos, says:

Small predatory parties of insurgents make frequent attempts to fire the cane fields, and it requires constant and active vigilance to prevent their destruction.

On November 17, 1897, Mr. Brice, at Matanzas, reported (page 29):

A general order has been issued allowing reconcentrados to return to the country, but the restrictions placed in order are such as to practically prohibit. If they went, what can they do without money, food, or shelter? Only those who can obtain employment on sugar plantations can live. Insurgents say no one will be allowed to grind in Province of Matanzas.

The same consul, on December 17, 1897 (page 30), reported:

A few plantations are grinding cane. In every case they are heavily guarded by Spanish troops and have paid insurgents for so doing. Was shown a letter from insurgent chief to owner of a large plantation, in which price demanded for grinding was 2,000 centones ($10,000 United States gold). It was paid.

On page 33 of the same report there is a copy of an order issued by Calixto Garcia, of date November 6, 1897, in which it is stated:

All persons who come within our lines commissioned by the enemy with proposals to submit to Spain will be tried and punished as spies.

Mr. Hyatt, at Santiago de Cuba, reported on December 5, 1897 (page 34):

Mr. Rigney, an American sugar planter near Manzanillo, was preparing to grind during the coming season. A few nights since the insurgents fired seven cannon shots among his buildings, one ball passing through the roof of his house. Americans were hopeful that they would be allowed to make their crop, and several are making ready to do so; but the action of the insurgents toward Mr. Rigney gives the problem a doubtful aspect. It may have been a personal matter against Mr. Rigney.

The same consul, on December 14, 1897, reported (page 35):

The order of reconcentration is now practically wiped out, and, so far as the Spanish Government is concerned, men go about nearly as they please. The insurgents and their sympathizers will unquestionably take advantage of the revocation to get from the towns and cities what they need, and otherwise strengthen their cause.

On January 12, 1898, Mr. Hyatt reports (page 38):

I had hoped that after the reconcentration order was revoked, through the energetic action of the present Administration, we would find no trouble in reinstating American industries; but it appears that all of the benefits that should have accrued to our citizens are thwarted by the action of the insurgents, who refuse to allow them to return to their sugar, coffee, and other estates. The Pompo manganese mines, owned by Americans, which would at the present time be a very profitable investment if allowed to operate, are also being held up by the same power.

The three Revery brothers, who I informed you recently I was about to assist in returning to their coffee and fruit estates, got there only to find they could not go to work until permission was obtained from the insurgent commander, which permission seems doubtful, I myself, as I understand my duty, being inhibited from rendering them any assistance at this point.

Mr. Hyatt likewise reported on January 31, 1898 (page 40):

On Sunday morning the regular passenger train on the Sabanilla and Maroto Railroad, when 5 miles out of Santiago, was blown up by dynamite bombs, exploded by electric wires; two cars were shivered in atoms. Five passengers were killed outright and twenty-two badly wounded, some of whom have since died. It is thought by some that the insurgents believed that Captain-General Blanco was on the train; by others that they merely wanted to notify the General that they were around and attending to business.

This, it will be observed, is the condition of things prevailing after the reconcentrado order has been vacated.

On February 1, 1898, Mr. Hyatt again forwarded a report (page 41). He said:

General Blanco's mild and humane policy meets with but a feeble response from his own followers, while the insurgents laugh at the old man who throws sods and grass instead of stones.

Mr. Barker, at Sagua la Grande, on November 20, 1897 (page 46), reported as follows:

As to grinding the present crop, I have interviewed most of the largest planters in this consular district, who stated that unless assured of immunity from the insurgent chief—Gomez—they would not jeopardize their property by attempting to grind.

On December 15, 1897 (page 49), he further reported:

Thinking it may interest the Department, I have the honor to transmit herewith clippings from a leading Spanish journal published in Havana, * * * calling attention to the inability of the mills to grind in the Province of Santiago de Cuba, which is one of the obstacles to grinding in this (Santa Clara) province, were the planters able to pay tribute required by the insurgents.

Mr. Barker, on December 28, 1897 (page 50), states:

To grind this cane without interruption would be the means of saving the lives of thousands who, without this or outside aid within the next thirty to fifty days, must die of actual hunger. Over a month since the planters were officially advised of Spain's inability to provide protection in order to operate their mills. This leaves the sugar growers entirely in the hands of the Cubans in revolt, as to whether they will be allowed to grind without hindrance or fear of total destruction of their property. I know that strict orders have been given to subordinate commanders under no circumstances must mills be permitted to grind, under penalty of violation of the order destruction of property.

The people of Cuba have indeed had a hard time. Apart from personal perils, they have also been forced to pay onerous taxes and to submit to the most extravagant impositions—a state of things for which Spaniards and insurgents seem to be both responsible. I am informed by authority which I deem good that all the sugar mills in Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, and Havana were closed by the insurgents, each factory having some 500 men dependent upon it.

This was a measure of war. I am not challenging or discussing the propriety of it. War is not sympathy—it does not beget comfort or happiness. In our civil conflict we learned something of it. I have read in the records of that period, which our Government is publishing, letters from those who belonged to the respective armies giving accounts of fearful suffering too horrible to describe and incident to the remorseless business of carnage. Death amid the lurid fires of destruction has been, not only in Cuba but in many other lands, the common attendant of war.

It appears plainly enough from the President's message that there were two leading reasons for Cuba's suffering. One was the brutal order of Weyler and the other was the conduct of the insurgents in refusing to allow people to go abroad and produce or procure the necessaries of life, as shown by the reports which I have read.

Mr. President, I shall endeavor in a moment to show by the President's message that Spain, instead of ignoring, has been yielding to our demands and that we waited while the obnoxious orders of Weyler were in force, and are now demanding war when the spirit of concession seems to be abroad.

But I will digress a moment to consider the specific resolutions before us. The President, in the light of the facts alluded to in the consular reports, concluded that the condition of affairs in Cuba was such that there was no government which he could afford to recognize. The majority of the committee, in addition to the preamble, reported the following:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

The minority propose this:

The undersigned members of said committee cordially concur in the report made upon the Cuban resolutions, but we favor the immediate recognition of the Republic of Cuba, as organized in that island, as a free, independent, and sovereign power among the nations of the world.

If we concur with the general situation outlined by the President, if we accompany the majority of the committee, we can not escape the conclusion that the amendment of the minority is right, and that the Republic of Cuba, not the people of Cuba, are entitled to recognition. It must be understood that I am opposed either to a declaration of war or to resolutions which must bring war. I hold that there is nothing which we are legitimately entitled to seek which can not be obtained by diplomacy, and that Executive successes warrant this conclusion. But if we must acknowledge the independence of either "the people" or the "Republic" of Cuba, I favor the latter. If there is any governmental organization in Cuba, outside of that of Spain, it is that over which Masó presides. The report of the committee shows this, and if it does not establish that the insurgents have a government, it fails altogether. I might add that I cordially agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that the power to recognize is an Executive function. I elaborately discussed that proposition upon another occasion. But the Senate it seems is determined to recognize one of two organizations, and we must all make our choice, whether we do or do not favor either.

I have no suspicion with reference to this subject. My conclusions may be wrong. I have been mistaken more than once. I accord that absolute concession of independent judgment to my neighbor that I demand for myself. But I fear that a grave error is threatened.

Assuming the position taken by the majority of the Senate, how can it be that the people of Cuba are free, but without a government? Is there a monarchy in Cuba, Mr. President? The majority's resolution denies it. If the people of Cuba are free, what is the character of their government? From the circumstances of the case, it must be a republic. If you mean that the people are free, you mean that Maximo Gomez and those who follow him have been successful. The people of Cuba are not free, certainly, disassociated from the Republic of Cuba. Who are the men who have struggled for their freedom—the men who have hidden in the swamps, sought refuge in the forests, passed through labor and travail to accomplish the existence of a nation? If Cuba is free—and you say so—it is the insurgents who have made it so, and their government, the republic, is the representative of the people. Then why not recognize the republic, if you insist upon some recognition?

What is the meaning of the word "people" as here used? In this sense the word means a nation. It is a political entity. It is not a nomadic band of disorganized adventurers or inhabitants without a head. There can not be a free people composed of scattering tribes or individuals with diverse objects waging local disputation, each contesting with his neighbor. If the word "people" is at all appropriate, it means the physical expression in governmental form of the concentrated power and will of those who inhabit the territory involved. Such an organization alone constitutes in diplomatic phrase a people. Why not, therefore, identify the government which you wish to recognize? Why should there be any question here—any doubt to perplex us in the future?

If you are determined to expel Spain from Cuba; if you are determined to contend that violation of the Monroe doctrine is desirable and that it is wise as well as just to invade Cuba; if you are willing to repudiate the precedents of our history and the teachings of the fathers, be nevertheless consistent. Do not go to Cuba without a declaration of what you intend to do. Do not go there without placing upon your banner in indelible and certain language the object you seek to attain. This looks like a war of conquest. For the first time in our history we are to engage in the avocation of either subduing a state or of making a government.

Every member of this body admits that war should come only as a dernier resort. Then do not invoke it, save only in the cause of that liberty to which every Senator here declares that he is willing to pledge his life; but do not compel it merely because Spain for so many months declined those concessions which she is now making. Even if she is slow, or, as is said, evasive, every hour brings us nearer to the end we all covet. She is gradually acceding to our suggestions. Is there any question as to the ultimate action of those who may seek to carry out the mandates of the majority resolutions?

I attribute no ulterior motives, but able and patriotic men here and elsewhere have construed these resolutions as meaning that something may occur not in accordance with the wishes of any of the American people. Those who approve of intervention do not consent that the insurgents shall be ignored or that we shall be foreign state makers. Let the language, if you must pass any resolution, be plain and simple. Let the words be such that they can not be misunderstood. Now, that attention is called to it, there is no excuse for ambiguity. And out of all this horrid work—if we are to plunge into bloody scenes—let us at least evolve something like a real republic. The President well says that forced annexation would be criminal aggression. Have a care that this does not result.

Oh, if it should happen, which I trust can not be, that after a conflict involving the taking of life, the weeping of widows and orphans, the deprivation of limb, and the sacrifice of the flower of our flock, it should appear that we had waged a war of conquest, and that the permeating motive was not patriotism, but sordid avarice, what a desecration, what a disgrace to the American name! Let us have no doubt about this. We all agree that improper motives are absent, but our phrases will be the subject of ruthless investigation, and the vast importance of the occasion suggests consummate prudence.

I agree, as I have said, with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. He and I have discussed the subject here before that the Executive has the power of recognizing independence. I concur with him in disapproval of language which directs the Executive—a coordinate branch of the Government. But I do not design to reopen that issue, so ably treated by that distinguished Senator. I repeat, if we are to have recognition at all—and I believe that subject should be left to the Executive—let it be the only recognition for which there is the slightest argument, that of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. President, whatever we are to do, I repeat, let it be obviously definite, specific, positive, so that this work may not be worse than it must be.

The majority of the committee have stated as follows—I refer to the report, page 19—in speaking of the insurgents:

They have not been subdued. The autonomy proffered was specious and illusory. It has been rejected by the insurgents, not because it was specious and illusory, but because they will accept nothing short of complete national independence. The suggestion of a more complete autonomy has also been rejected by them. They declare to the United States and Spain alike that no terms short of independence which those powers may attempt to prescribe to them will be accepted. Spain refuses to grant independence.

Thus the committee notifies the world that the Cuban insurgents absolutely decline to accept anything short of independence, and that independence the committee does not intend shall be granted. They have placed the insurgents before us as men who will not voluntarily allow the intervention which this resolution professes to extend. The President asks for authority to establish a stable government. He makes no tender to the insurgents. He seems to recognize the peculiarity of such a course in the light of our nonintervention history.

Senators, you who believe in intervention as being warranted in the name of humanity, and who are satisfied of your jurisdiction and insist upon immediate invasion, study this platform upon which your country must stand with painstaking devotion. Declare not that a people are free, but give that people a name. Nowhere in the narrative of man's transactions can there be found recognition such as this—so threatened and so defended.

Mr. President, returning for a moment to the second point, as to the propriety of our interference upon grounds of humanity, let me call your attention to the diplomatic situation. Our attitude is shown more particularly by the Presidential message. The President of the United States has informed us that the order of reconcentration has been vacated. The consular reports cited are to the same purport. We learn that that order to which we attribute terrible suffering has been set aside. The consular reports advise us that the partial failure of this late humane act is largely due to the intervention of those who are contesting with Spain. There is now no order of reconcentration. In response to an intimation from the President, General Blanco has been required to suspend hostilities. The bloody mandates of Weyler are all merely history.

The demand of the Executive that they should be revoked and vacated has been affirmatively met. If the details are incomplete, the tendency of the present Spanish policy is toward a reversal of her former plan of campaign. You are, therefore, before your fellowmen with the only grounds upon which you rely for intervention swept away from you in response to Executive and popular demand. The Maine incident, I have said, is not closed. It is a subject in dispute, with an offer from Spain to arbitrate, to which offer we have not responded; nor, indeed, have we made—as I have heretofore observed—any demand whatever with relation to that calamity. Here is our complaint, the basis of our international action, upon which we must justify an attack, met by concessions from Spain. There is not one syllable in the Presidential message to indicate that it is useless to go further. If any such inference could be drawn from the body of the document, it is expressly negatived by the postscript, which shows unmistakably that the matter is in fieri, that it is still in progress. That debate has not been terminated. The President's language is as follows:

> Yesterday, and since the preparation of the foregoing message, official information was received by me that the latest decree of the Queen Regent of Spain directs General Blanco, in order to prepare and facilitate peace, to proclaim a suspension of hostilities, the duration and details of which have not yet been communicated to me.
> This fact, with every other pertinent consideration, will, I am sure, have your just and careful attention in the solemn deliberations upon which you are about to enter. If this measure attains a successful result, then our aspirations as a Christian, peace-loving people will be realized. If it fails, it will be only another justification for our contemplated action.

But we must have war anyhow. Our people want it. It is necessary for us, and so it is to come. Such is the unreasoning language of not a few. But I trust that if we follow such advice we will not proceed upon any basis marked out in the resolutions which are before the Senate.

Years ago a man was appointed from England to a judicial position in India. He fulfilled the duties of his office ably. He was known as a great jurist. His practice was to enter judgment without comment. But he lost his head and filed an opinion. He was at once removed. The resolutions under discussion, thus hurriedly constructed I regret to say, must remain, not for a day, not as a private affair between litigants, who generally lose their individualities and seldom transmit the memory of their wrongs, but your decision will be here photographed as long as society and government continue to be. The reasons which you assign must be those which history will justify under the most rigid scrutiny. If you are determined to fight, if you think, considering the whole situation, there ought to be a war, why not make a naked declaration to that end and proceed without the assignment of reasons which, I fear, will in calmer moments be considered inadequate. We have heard in this debate able men eloquently attacking these resolutions. Their arguments will be more patiently examined hereafter.

Walk upon our streets. We find one man saying war ought to be declared upon one ground, and another who says it ought to be declared upon a different account. The situation must be dubious when the friends of action find it so hard to agree, so difficult to justify.

I repeat, that I fail to see in the light of a careful and painstaking investigation that the end has yet been reached and that argument must be supplanted by force. But for Heaven's sake, make this record clear upon its face at least. Do not so construct it as to disclose any inherent weakness unnecessarily.

Oh, I am told, we are powerful and unconquerable. True. We are mighty. From one end of this great Republic to the other there are in this exigency only united hearts, which argumentative differences can not sever. There is not one who will not aid in defending our common flag. Our resources are boundless; the courage of our people undenied. Granted that we might subjugate the world. There is something beyond that. This, we are proud and prone to claim, is the Republic of the ages. Here is realized the dream of the ancient philosophers who led the vanguard of progress; those mighty few who sought to solve at too early a day the intricacies incident to a free government organized so as to conserve and advance society. Are we to render a verdict justified only by an appeal to power? Shall ours be the barbarian's plea? No, I repeat, a thousand times no! I plead for a determination that will through all the years be approved by those who, knowing the truth, love it.

Mr. President, we have been told that other nations would not have submitted to the Maine and other experiences which have been ours. Without further discussion I will concede the assertion, though it might be questioned. Many of the powers of this world—alleged civilized nations—have violated every canon of rectitude and with gory sword have cut pathways for their armies through many opposing ranks and have raised the savage voice of triumph above the lamentations of suffering womanhood and childhood. They have erected their governments over the ashes of departed races. The corner stones of their institutions rest upon human pain and human sorrow. Shall we follow in the wake of such as these? Surely not.

I may be censured for my opinion. Slow in my judgment though I be, I will not involve my country in a controversy which does not meet the entire approval of my conscience. No blame, no condemnation, will ever force me to bring on a conflict which I deem unrequired by any demand of the highest honor or loftiest patriotism, and which I consider in every sense premature, contrary to foundation principles, and establishing a precedent upon which we may be seduced from those moorings where the ship of state has safely ridden since the days of her first illustrious captain. I do not care what other nations might do or may have done. I do not take advice from them. The higher mission of our Republic should beget higher resolves, and weak or great, we should apply the same rules to all.

Witness the face of nature as it illumines the loftier walks of civilization wherever on this earth the banner of Christianity and advancement has been borne. What language does it speak? It talks words of peace and good will. Men may violate the precepts of right, but the tide of progress will flow ever onward toward better things. Whenever this Republic, acting in the interests of justice, shall demand that a foreign government must acquiesce in that which we can properly demand, that decision I am willing to enforce. When an exaction is insisted upon, I am prepared to maintain our ultimatum at whatever cost. Otherwise the Government must finally fail.

But I will not continue. I might say much that is pertinent along the same lines. I love liberty; I aspire to witness the betterment of man everywhere. But I see plainly that in this instance our just ends could be achieved by peaceful methods. I care more for my own than for any other land. I will not voluntarily, without imperative circumstances, force new problems upon her or permit her to be allured from considerations of grave domestic concern.

Mr. President, those of us who dissent from the attitude of the majority here, and who think that the time has not arrived for the fierce arbitrament of the sword, entertain no doubt as to the issue. We know that our flag must triumph. We know that it must win on land and sea. There will be no dissenters in the camp. This is our council hall. In these Chambers, in connection with the Executive, are solved all questions of peace and war.

We have our opinions, deeply rooted, perhaps, and firmly set, but we are all Americans. The flag that floats above this Capitol is the flag of the whole people. The individual theory must, after our vote here, be subordinated to the judgment of the majority. When that judgment is rendered there is but one view that can prevail, there is but one course to pursue. Shoulder to shoulder, hand in hand, we march forward with equal step to vindicate the conduct and the action of that Government which we believe to be the best that Almighty God has permitted in all time.

Upon the morrow, when this fearful crisis shall be upon us, in evidence of faith and loyalty and union, let there float from every housetop in the United States the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. BATE obtained the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Tennessee kindly yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir.

PROHIBITION OF EXPORT OF COAL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration. I send it to the desk that it may be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Immediate consideration is asked for a joint resolution, which will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. The reasons for it appear in the morning newspapers.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and with such limitations and exceptions as shall seem to him expedient, to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States until otherwise ordered by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. Let us know what would be the effect of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. To authorize the President to stop the heavy export of coal that is going out.

Mr. HOAR For Spain.

Mr. HAWLEY. For Spain; and it is of more value to them than powder.

Mr. PETTUS. If the joint resolution ought to pass, and I am willing that it should, it ought to be an order. Congress can not give the President that sort of authority. If we desire to order that coal shall not be exported, it must be ordered by law. It can not be ordered at the will and pleasure of the President, as he sees fit.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Connecticut can modify the joint resolution so as to meet that point. I hope it may be done.

Mr. HOAR. We shall be obliged to commit to the President of the United States, in my opinion, a hundred times before this emergency is over, a like discretion. But in order to remove the scruple of a single Senator or of any number of Senators in regard to a matter so pressing, I move an amendment which the Secretary will please take down.

Mr. MILLS. Very well; move the amendment and then I will raise a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Substitute an enacting clause and strike out all of the resolution and insert:

The export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States is hereby prohibited until otherwise ordered by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as now proposed.

The bill (S. 4419) to prohibit the export of coal and other material used in war was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States is hereby prohibited until otherwise ordered by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me there should be some provision for the exportation of coal when necessary by special license of the President. The bill makes an absolute prohibition.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. By unanimous consent the consideration of the matter before the Senate was to proceed to-day, and I shall object to anything being interposed at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill lies over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3154) to amend an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 504) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 20,000 copies of the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with Senate Report 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba, etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 157) to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan;

A bill (S. 487) granting a pension to Delia Gilman;

A bill (S. 499) granting a pension to Sarah R. Fray;

A bill (S. 668) granting a pension to Frances E. Pease;

A bill (S. 1450) granting a pension to Catharine Leary;

A bill (S. 3517) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman;

A bill (H. R. 639) increasing the pension of Charles B. Eades;

A bill (H. R. 2629) to grant a pension to John Thurston;

A bill (H. R. 3132) granting a pension to Plum P. Miner;

A bill (H. R. 5904) to grant a pension to M. Louise Anderson; and

A bill (H. R. 7539) granting an increase of pension to Martha M. McCall.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 149) for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I suppose, according to the arrangement of last night when I was not here, time was allotted to me of fifteen minutes without any request of mine. It is proper, however, upon an occasion of this kind, so momentus, so fateful, that every Senator who desires should be heard in regard to it and let his position be known to his constituents and the country. I feel much interest, as do my constituents, in this measure, and I would not be candid were I not to say I approach it with a degree of embarrassment.

I have no hesitation, however, in giving my voice and my vote for the independence of Cuba, and I am glad that my colleague and I agree upon this. I believe, in doing so, that we not only do that which is right, but reflect the will of our constituents, whatever they may think upon the subject of peace. I believe that the independence of Cuba should be acknowledged according to the minority resolution presented by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and it is to that that I propose to speak. Under all the circumstances, I approve of it, and expect to cast my vote for that report known as the minority report, and principally for the reason that it acknowledges the independence of Cuba, and does it promptly and without equivocation.

Mr. President, for years and years you and I and all of us have been hearing of the troubles in the Island of Cuba. It is a part of the current history of the times. There was a time when the United States was solicitous to take Cuba as a part of her Government. But it seems not to be so now. But it has, however, become the sentiment of this country that Cuba should be cared for by the United States.

Her wrongs, her grievances, perpetrated by Spanish rule, have become more or less personal. She has had a war period of many years. But an angry and ominous one has hung over her, filled with wrath, for the last three years. The Government of Spain has so long held Cuba by the throat that she thinks her grip can not be loosed, and resists with violence every effort in that direction, and especially so of any effort by the Cubans themselves. Insurgents have sprung up and for the last three years held at bay Spanish power. I have no criticism upon them because they rebelled against the power of a tyrant.

Insurgents and rebels are synonymous terms, and they have my sympathies.

Mr. President, you may search history—sacred and profane, ancient and modern—and you will find that wherever the word "liberty" is found there are the words "rebel" and "insurgent" on the page in front of it. Rebels and insurgents are the forerunners of liberty, and history so writes it. I have no criticism to make upon the Cuban insurgents. They did the best they could under the circumstances. One of the best evidences of their patriotism consists in the fact that they fought those battles without money and held the territory without outside aid. They have sustained their cause and have governed the larger part of the beautiful Island of Cuba. Two of the states and three or four of the provinces are under the control of the insurgents and have been for three years.

But we are told in this Chamber that we can not recognize their independence before intervention for fear that when our forces go there General Gomez will take command of them and will govern the conduct of the war. Mr. President, that is not a patriotic idea. That is not the view for a man to take who wants to see Cuba free. It is not the view that Lafayette took when he brought his fortune and his men to America. He did not ask, "Shall I command?" or "Shall the French nation dictate the conduct of the war?" He asked no such question, but tendered his sword unconditional to Washington and took the part assigned him.

When, in the crowning act of our old Revolution, at Yorktown, the tricolor of France fluttered in front while Lafayette was with Washington in the rear of Cornwallis, neither D'Estaing nor Count De Grasse hesitated to cooperate with the American Army and report to an American general. No, Mr. President, should our troops go to Cuba there would be no friction as to commanders. That would soon be adjusted to perfect satisfaction. It is not one of those matters about which we need have apprehension.

The insurgents for the last three years maintained themselves. They have not had, in a strict sense, a government de jure, but it can not be questioned, in the face of the fact of the reports which have been made to us from official authorities, that there was and is a government de facto, one that we must recognize, and one which has been able to maintain its authority over the territory of that Government in defiance of the power of Spain, notwithstanding her 200,000 troops which were upon Cuban soil. The Cubans have held that territory until this day; they have defended it; they have kept up their little flag for three years in actual warfare against them. And why is it said they are not a power to treat with?

Why need we hesitate upon the ground that General Gomez may take charge of the troops that may be sent there? There is nothing in it other than mere suspicion, and I dismiss it.

History is not without precedents where, under similar circumstances, independence has been acknowledged and recognition given by the nations of the earth. I give a precedent in point from our own country.

Passing by the "Ostend manifesto," which pointed to intervention in Cuba, it must not be forgotten when Maximilian was Emperor of Mexico, possessed of the capital and at the head of a Government, Juarez was a fugitive in the mountains and his government as itinerant as that of Cuba at present. The United States maintained diplomatic relations with Juarez as far as was practicable with a government which, like that of Cuba at present, had neither local habitation nor abiding place.

This country did not stop to inquire where the capital was, nor what seaports were held by Juarez, nor whether his legislature was in session or otherwise, but, regarding Maximilian as a European potentate invading an American State, we gave our moral influence and were prepared to add physical force to the fugitive and peripatetic government of Juarez without drawing the fine distinctions of international law.

A great nation makes precedents and discovers principles suitable and applicable to its own conditions and necessities. The United States called into existence the Monroe doctrine, which, if not yet written in the books of international law, stands as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians.

This country, in the case of Maximilian, made Europe understand that no foreign prince shall ever sit permanently on an American throne, and the time has now come to further emphasize the fact that the despotism of a European State shall not continue on the Island of Cuba, almost in touch with our shores. The opportunity has offered to enforce this doctrine, and we should embrace it with promptness and vigor and let consequences take care of themselves.

This is an example, Mr. President, which is on all fours with the one now before us in the case of the insurgents of Cuba. But it is said that these Cuban insurgents and rebels are without ships and without forts. They needed no ships, and they could not use them if they had them, for the reason that the insurgent government has not been acknowledged by the world; but if their independence had been acknowledged by the United States or by other nations, Cuba could have provided herself with ships to carry her commerce and she could have had all the relations with the outer world necessary for an independent government.

Neither was it so in the South American republics. When Mr. Monroe recognized them they were without ships of war and had but little commerce, and yet, sir, in the name of liberty, President Monroe did acknowledge them; and if that means anything, it means recognition. The doctrine known as the Monroe doctrine, which, although I believe it is not known on the pages of books on international law, yet the Monroe doctrine is now known and recognized everywhere, and is as fixed and unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. The Senate so recognizes it.

Mr. President, the right to recognize the independence of a people struggling bravely for national existence appeals so strongly to the American people that the shadowy principles of international law will hardly counterbalance that sympathy which springs in the hearts of a people who won their independence despite the law of nations and the power of Great Britain. The wrongs against which the American colonies revolted were matters of political principle; those against which the Cubans have been in arms these many years have superadded to the same principles the horrors of a warfare hitherto unknown among civilized nations, involving the very existence of the people.

Recognition of independence is always a question of fact, the criterion suggested by publicists being whether the old government had recognized the independence of the new. But no such principle is recognized by this country. Our independence preceded by eight years England's recognition. France in recognizing the United States disregarded the principles of noninterference, and the practice of European governments has for a century been that of interference.

The nations of Europe in 1792 interfered in French affairs and attempted to set up another government for the people of France. The principle of interference to stop the effusion of blood, or to put an end to anarchy, such as that which has existed in Cuba, was, in 1827, justified by England, France, and Russia, when these nations intervened between the Sultan of Turkey and his rebellious subjects, the people of Greece.

The Porte rejected the overtures of the nations, as Spain does those of the United States, and the great naval victory of Navarino became the precedent which it is to be hoped will follow in Havana Harbor. In 1823 France intervened between the Government of Spain and her rebellious subjects, and the army of France marched to Madrid. Again, in 1839, England intervened between the Government of Spain and her rebellious subjects, the Carlists. In 1825 Mr. Canning intervened between Spain and her rebellious colonies in South America, and "called the New World into existence to redress the balance of the old."

The late abortive attempt at intervention of the nations of Europe between Turkey and Armenia recognized the principle of intervention, but it is to be hoped that the fiasco will not be repeated in our intervention between Spain and the Cubans. History is replete with examples and precedents which justify our action and intervention in Cuba, but on no page of history is recorded a parallel act of perfidy and treachery to that which sunk the Maine in the harbor of Havana.

A crime so recent, a horror so appalling, requires of me no repetition of its circumstances. It stands without a precedent and, happily for humanity, without a parallel among nations. Too gross in its iniquity for arbitration, too infamous in its character to be canceled by money, our people approve the Administration in its silence as to indemnity. The mangled forms of American sailors, the shattered wreck of our American battle ship, the dishonor of our flag, admit neither arbitration nor indemnity, but demand of this country prompt recognition of independence for Cuba and immediate active intervention, if necessary, to secure it.

I fully comprehend the responsibility that rests on those who appeal to war. I am familiar with its suffering, its cost, its horrors, but I fully agree with that sentiment expressed so epigrammatically by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] that, "There is something worse than war; something better than money." I add to it by saying that dishonor is worse than war and liberty better than money. Intervention in Cuba and independence for the Cubans may be a matter for debate and discussion, but the crime which sunk the Maine cries aloud for punishment—swift, sure, and severe. My vote for those resolutions is given more because of the crime against our flag, our battle ship, and our gallant sailors, than for any other cause.

However much I may desire to see Cuba free and independent by her own efforts, my indignation over the perfidy which deliberately selected the best place in the Havana Harbor to destroy an American ship, and perpetrated a crime without a parallel, carries my judgment for certain, swift, and severe punishment. The ghastly sight "will not down at my bidding."

Go for a moment to the harbor of Havana and see the wreck of that vessel. You are Americans who are proud of your sailors and proud of the flag under which they were. Look there and see the misfortune that overcame them. I believe it was treachery. I do not charge the Spanish Government was a party to it, but I say they had placed those mines there. They knew that fact, and they should have given notice to any of the vessels of another friendly power coming within the purview of such a danger, just as a railroad engineer is required to blow his whistle at a crossing or as a flag is held up to indicate where there is a point of danger.

They knew the danger was there; they had placed the mines there for a purpose; they were silent as to their location, and the authorities certainly directed our battle ship Maine to be towed to that point and fastened to that buoy, without giving us notice that the danger was there. The captain of the Maine did not know the parts of the bay in which mines were located. He did not know they were there.

He did not have the least intimation that there was danger there; and I say that the death of those sailors of our country cries out in the face of all the civilized world for vengeance. I seek not vengeance; yet I say that under such circumstances we can not overlook what has occurred. No man who loves the flag of his country, no man who loves its honor, believes that that outrage can be wiped out by the payment of money. It is the trembling coward, the sordid huckster, who teaches such doctrine. Our people believe in maintaining the honor of this country, and they feel that this midnight assassination needs rebuke.

I have never thought since the sinking of that vessel that we could keep out of war. As I regard it, it is in itself a casus belli. In my judgment it was the duty of the United States Government to have promptly demanded satisfactory explanation, and, Mr. President, as so much has been said in this debate about Andrew Jackson in recognition of the independence of Texas, I venture to say that if he had been at the head of affairs, old Hickory, "by the eternal," would have let loose the dogs of war on Morro Castle in forty-eight hours after the destruction of the Maine and murder of our sailors, and perhaps would by this time have made peace with Spain with Cuba free.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a vote on the pending resolution and amendments will be taken at the close of this day's legislative session. I wish it could come now. I have no pride that would cause me to address the Senate or country if by remaining silent the action of the Senate would be hastened by a single moment. Even if I had the graces of oratory of other Senators in this Chamber, if my silence would hasten final action by one time beat of the clock, iron bars could not unseal my lips; for I know, as every Senator here knows, that while we are talking in the Senate of the United States, men, women, and children are dying of starvation in Cuba, the victims of a warfare the most cruel, inhuman, and barbarous of modern times; but knowing as I do that my silence will have no effect to produce quicker action, and aware of the fact that my speaking to this resolution will be productive of no delay in action, I feel it my privilege and duty to give my views in general terms and in few words upon the pending proposition.

Mr. President, with due deference to the conservative warning of the senior Senator from Connecticut, and with complete respect for the legal doubts of the Senator from California, I have still no fear or hesitation in regard to the vote which I shall give upon these resolutions, nor do I care much for the text of the resolution. Whatever form of expression is agreed upon, the result is the same—war, swift and sure, and war with the most diplomatic, the most deceitful, and the most cruel of all the Christian nations of the earth, a nation that for three hundred years, because of its deceit and cruelty, has seen its power fade and its possessions diminish, until from the time of the magnificent power of Charles and the cruel inhumanities of Alva it has been reduced to the feeble Government of the present and the savage barbarism of Weyler. Even in the face of the certainty of a contest with a nation that has accumulated only vices with its years, and from which we may expect in course of war to receive only deceit and treachery and the methods of war used by a nation of such characteristics, still, Mr. President, this Senate and this nation should not hesitate, nor will they.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, prepared by the eminent chairman of that committee, replete with historical precedents and the legal learning for which he is so justly distinguished, and with its conclusions of fact drawn from indisputable evidence, is such a terrible arraignment of the Government of Spain as must cause every patriotic heart to throb with fervent heat at the indignities suffered by the United States and every Christian soul to stand appalled at the unprecedented cruelty and inhumanity of the long-continued, frantic, and futile efforts to subdue a liberty-loving people.

I had hoped, although almost against hope, that a peaceful solution might be had of all our difficulties. I believe the President, in the trying situation presented, has acted with a patriotism, a wisdom, a moderation, and a patience that will fully commend his course to the sober, candid, and honest judgment of the American people; but I felt in my heart, Mr. President, when our battle ship went down in Havana Harbor, that all hope of such an adjustment was at an end.

Mr. President, as the evidence accumulated, under careful and honest investigation, that the loss of our sailors was due to the direct criminal action of Spain or to her equally criminal negligence, the diplomacy of the world could have accomplished nothing. I most heartily indorse the President for his efforts to secure a peaceful solution. I as fully indorse and commend his course in remitting the whole matter to Congress when it became apparent that further diplomacy would be futile.

Mr. President, I have no wish nor time to discuss the Cuban question proper, nor to go into detail of the miserable condition of that most unhappy island. Others in this Chamber have drawn pictures from personal observation, from well-authenticated facts, and from undisputed conditions, that leads us to wonder if, after all, there is such a thing as Christian civilization on God's earth after two thousand years of Christian teaching; and, Mr. President, the half has not been told, and, as is stated in the report of the committee, even Turkey, "who, abominable and atrocious as her cruelty has been toward her subjects in Greece and in the northern part of her dominions in Europe, has not approached the eminence at which Spain stands in solitary and unapproachable infamy."

The Committee on Foreign Relations, in making up its judgment as set forth in the resolution and report, has very properly, it seems to me, seen fit to go over the entire ground of our relations with Cuba and Spain. Such a course I believe to be a wise one; and yet, Mr. President, in my judgment the insufferable conditions that have prevailed in Cuba for three years, without mention of the Maine, of which I desire to speak later, would justify Congress in the course which I believe it will take; and leaving out of the question all such statements of inhuman conditions as have not been fully proven, still a case of perfect justification is made that demands prompt and decisive action.

No matter whether the ground of broad humanity is taken or whether we look only to the rights of Americans and the outrages on American citizenship, our duty is equally clear. I hope, Mr. President, the time may come when our citizenship shall be as we now sometimes falsely boast it is—the perfect guaranty of personal and property security the world over. I believe the time is now opportune. I have no disposition, Mr. President, to give aught but praise to those efforts which have released the citizens of this nation from foreign dungeons.

Thank God for an Americanism that under conditions as they have existed could accomplish that much; may it be but a forerunner of a governmental firmness of policy that shall make the flag of our nation omnipotent to protect our citizenship the world over. But, Mr. President, though prison doors have opened, there are other wrongs to be righted. The eloquent, distinguished, and patriotic junior Senator from Indiana has said in this Chamber during this debate that "not an American citizen is to-day imprisoned on Spanish soil."

Mr. President, I thank God if such is the fact, but I can not lose sight of the other more potent fact that many an American citizen lies to-day imprisoned in Spanish soil, victims of national hate and official vindictiveness, rotted in dungeons or sentenced to death by star-chamber proceedings or drum-head courts-martial. All in all, such a violation of national rights is made up by the record as is seldom found in the history of the world, and all this without thought or word of excuse, regret or apology from Spain.

But, Mr. President, the crowning infamy of Spain was reached when, in the darkness of night, on the 15th of February, by her agencies, our noble ship was blown from the face of the seas and 266 of her officers and crew were ushered, unshriven and without a prayer or farewell, into the presence of their Maker. God pity the soul and the nation that could compass such a deed. Such an act can not be settled by diplomatic correspondence nor treated by any tribunal of arbitration, the learned and eloquent Senator from California to the contrary notwithstanding. There is but one remedy, and would to God that remedy could restore to our country and to their wives and sweethearts our naval heroes who so miserably perished. That remedy is justice, swift, sure, and complete.

There may be some who doubt the criminal responsibility of Spain. I am not one of them. Eminent lawyers on this floor say the guilt is not conclusively fixed. Mr. President, I would not assume to match my legal acquirements against some of nal tional reputation who have taken that position in this debate. a have been a lawyer only in a sort of a way. But I have been e prosecuting attorney, years ago, in a new country, upon the frontier, where crimes were then frequent and where juries wer inclined to fully obey the instructions of the court, to "give the defendant the benefit of all reasonable doubt;" and, Mr. President, in my judgment, upon the evidence of our court of inquiry, to which we are fully committed, and by which we must be bound, in connection with other evidence produced, which has not been and which can not be disputed, there is no impartial jury on the face of the earth that would not find a man guilty of murder in the first degree upon evidence of like character in an ordinary court of justice.

I believe the evidence shows not only guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, but guilt beyond all and any doubt. I can not go into the minute evidence of this transaction at the present time. It is unnecessary to do so, and a minute discussion would be both undesirable and unprofitable, even if time permitted. There are two things, Mr. President, that are said to reach nearly to infallibility, and these are the intuition of a good woman and the general opinion and conclusions of a great and a just nation, and the belief of this Republic to-day is that Spain destroyed the Maine and should be held responsible for the act, and, my word for it, if war shall come, the battle cry on sea and land will be "Remember the Maine!" This belief of the people is perfectly rational and is drawn from the well-known facts in the case.

Our ship, on a friendly visit in a Spanish harbor, was anchored by Spanish officials over a Spanish mine, placed there by Spanish authority; and the vessel and crew were destroyed either by Spanish authority direct or by Spanish negligence equally criminal. The conclusion is irresistible to the general mind, and in the general mind only, unaccustomed to specious nicety of hairsplitting as to conclusiveness of evidence, do we find the true conclusions.

Mr. President, in this connection I desire to read a portion of a letter received by me but a few days ago from a citizen of my own State, who lives 2,000 miles from the Atlantic seacoast and 6,000 feet above sea level, and who is not consequently hampered in his reasoning by the doubts and fears that seem to create so much disturbance in the minds of some who have their being nearer the tide water of New York Bay. This gentleman is a graduate of our Naval Academy, afterwards a lawyer of wide practice, and now one of the most efficient as well as one of the most conservative judges upon the trial bench of our intermountain courts, Judge Scott, of the district court of the first district of Wyoming. With only the testimony of our naval board of inquiry before him, he brings to the consideration of the question his technical knowledge acquired at our Naval Academy and the severe processes of his judicial mind and arrives at the conclusions expressed in his letter of April 8, a portion of which I desire to read. He says:

> I have read the evidence and studied the exhibits in the light of my early education and later training, and I confess that while the report is not as full and complete as I would wish, yet I am forced to but one conclusion, and that is that the Spanish Government is responsible in any view of the case. The evidence conclusively shows that the first blow received by the ship was from the outside and must have been from some very powerful agent to have forced the keel up through the ship, as shown by the exhibit, while the second explosion from the reserve magazine was the immediate cause of the destruction of so many lives. These facts being established, it seems to me to be an easy problem to solve.
> No one can say that the mine which caused the destruction of the ship could have been placed in that position without the knowledge of the agents or officers of the Spanish Government. It was a harbor over which that government had jurisdiction and absolute control, and a mine in that position could only be there for one lawful purpose, and that for the national defense.

It is apparent that time fuses could not be used with these engines of destruction. It must, therefore, have been exploded by wire properly connected with the mine and an electrical generator conveniently placed, and the connection of the circuit made by key when the Maine swung into position to receive the full force of the blow from the explosion of the mine.

The position of the Maine as she swung at her anchorage and the place of the mine at the time of the explosion, or rather its position with reference to the Maine at the time of the explosion, imparts a knowledge to the one who completed the circuit or manipulated the keyboard of the exact position, respectively, of the mine and the ship. That it was figured down to a mathematical certainty is evidenced from the fact that the full force of the explosion was received on the keel of the Maine. This was not the work of a novice. It was the work of an expert, thoroughly versed in that art of warfare. The mine and the mechanism for using it must have been Government property and under the control of the Government and its employees, for no one else could or would have been allowed to place it there, thus endangering the free navigation of the harbor by merchantmen and other ships frequenting the harbor, and, as stated above, it would have been unlawfully there for any other purpose than for the national defense.

If the mine was exploded by the officers in charge of the same, or if it was exploded by their consent, it was an act of the Spanish Government. On the other hand, if exploded by some one without their knowledge or consent, the Spanish Government is still liable on the principle that if I set a spring gun in my yard, whereby my neighbor is shot and killed, I am criminally liable. I think our citizens ought to be protected in every port on the face of the globe, and that whether they wear the uniform of a sailor or soldier or are in civilian's dress. The Maine was on a lawful mission, securely anchored in the harbor of a nation with whom we were at peace. That nation was in duty bound to so govern her citizens that the lives and property of our citizens would be safe. If it actively through its officers and agents assassinated our citizens, or tacitly consented to, or negligently permitted such assassination, it seems to me that no greater cause for war could ever be presented, and especially so in this case where the means of such assassination must have been in the very nature of things the property of Spain.

And, Mr. President, the conclusion of Judge Scott is the conclusion of the American people, and to that conclusion, formed not in haste but after a careful and honest consideration of all the well-known facts in the case, I believe this Senate, by the vote shortly to be taken, will give its full answer. Mr. President, the bond question is raised, but the time has long passed since I have considered this question from a money standpoint. We are warned by Senators, in private at least, that by our action we are possibly creating a national liability of our own for four hundred millions of Spanish bonds, to the payment of which the revenues of Cuba stand pledged, or an indefinite amount of Cuban bonds, which we might be held responsible for.

Mr. President, to me this question has passed beyond the matter of bonds into the broader and, as I think, more patriotic field of national honor. The question of responsibility or nonliability for bonds enters not my mind, nor does it disturb me in the least in the consideration of this question. The time for financial pettifogging is passed. It cost us a third of a century ago three thousand million dollars to preserve the integrity of the union of these States. I am willing now to devote, if necessary, three thousand millions to preserve the honor of the nation. It is a burden that may perchance rest upon the shoulders of our children and our children's children, but if American patriotism still lives, it is a burden they will gladly accept and honestly discharge; and in this statement I believe I voice the sentiment and the patriotism and rightly interpret the great heart of this Republic.

Mr. President, war is the court of last resort. Woe to that nation that has not a righteous cause. The great captain of Europe uttered an atrocious fallacy when he said, "God is on the side of the strongest battalions." All history disproves the utterance. God is ever on the side of the right, and in this coming contest we are in the right. We stand for freedom of peoples and for republican government, for free institutions and national honor, and in the trying days that are upon us the American people, having a just knowledge of their responsibility and a full appreciation of their duties, will have but one watchword: "Remember humanity; remember the Maine." And to this they will add the fervent and confident prayer, "May God speed the right."

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, though I have participated but little in the debates in the Senate upon the different phases of the Cuban question as they have from time to time been presented here, I have been greatly interested in the uprising of the people there against the domination of Spain, and my earnest sympathy has constantly been with them in the brave struggle for independence and a republican form of government which they have thus far maintained against a powerful opponent, superior in numbers, in discipline and training, and in the resources of war. The Cubans are near neighbors to the people of Florida. We have desired and hoped for their success in this unequal contest; and in advocating the fullest measure of recognition that our people and our Government could give them, according to the usage and practice of civilized nations, I have always been in entire harmony with the best sentiment of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

The two Houses of Congress were satisfied from the information that had reached them more than two years ago that the contest had advanced beyond a condition of temporary and lawless resistance to constituted authority, beyond a mere revolt or insurrection, and they solemnly and formally declared by a concurrent resolution that there was a state of war in Cuba with all that is signified by that expressive word. It meant that the Cubans were an organized force, that they were maintaining an army in the field, that they were capable of joining battle with Spain, and that in the opinion of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States the armed men sent into the field by this organized force were soldiers and not lawbreakers and criminals, and that they should be treated, whenever they fell into the hands of their enemies, according to the laws of civilized warfare. More than a year later, in May, 1897, the Senate made a like declaration in the form of a joint resolution, and it was sent to the House of Representatives, but it was never passed by that body. These findings and declarations have been fully justified by the subsequent history of the contest.

Spain, with all her vast resources, has failed to restore her civil authority over the island, force has been continually met by force, and a governmental organization with armed soldiers to sustain it has maintained itself in open defiance of the Spanish Government ever since our first declaration of the existence of actual war.

Notwithstanding this deliberate action of the Senate, twice repeated, and the terrible array of facts developed during the debates, there was no response to these resolutions by the Executive, and the conflict, whether war or not, has gone on till weeks have lengthened into months and months into years.

Meanwhile army after army has been sent by Spain to put down those who have been resisting her authority by force and arms. Sections of country have been desolated so that the inhabitants might have no opportunity to afford aid and comfort to the revolutionists. The people driven from their homes have been compelled to remain in towns and villages within the Spanish lines of defense, and the Senate and the country have recently been informed by members of this body who have gone to Cuba and witnessed the actual conditions there of the suffering and starvation and sacrifice of life that has been going on among these reconcentrados and still continues. The civilized world has been shocked by the sad and terrible revelations.

The time has at last come for some action on the part of Congress to settle our differences with Spain and to relieve her victims from the oppression and sufferings which they have long endured. Diplomacy has failed. The President has despaired of accomplishing any results by further negotiation and has turned over the issue to Congress. In doing this he says, "I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors," and he is now awaiting our action.

Those who have had some experience in war are fully aware of its horrors, and would gladly see this as well as all our international differences settled by peaceful methods; but these methods have failed, and the committee to whom the President's message and the resolutions it evoked were referred have, after careful deliberation, reported their recommendations, some of which I propose briefly to discuss before the vote is taken.

The preamble and resolutions of the committee are as follows:

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

A minority of the committee offer the following amendment, proposing a recognition of the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island, and I favor its adoption:

Insert in line 4, after the word "independent," the following: "and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island."

This republic is an organization that has maintained itself for more than three years against the power of Spain. Nearly two years ago Consul-General Lee reported to President Cleveland that the Spaniards stood no chance of ever suppressing the insurrection, and during the present week he testified before the Committee on Foreign Affairs that he does not think there is the slightest possibility of their being conquered by Spain and that peace can not be restored to the island by that power.

In December, 1896, the Secretary of State in his annual report showed the strength of the Cuban power at that time, and I make the following extract from this report:

Although statistics of their military strength are attainable with difficulty and are not always trustworthy when obtained, enough is certainly known to show that the revolutionists in the field greatly exceed in numbers any organization heretofore attempted; that with large accessions from the central and western districts of the island a better military discipline is added to increased strength; that instead of mainly drawing, as heretofore, upon the comparatively primitive population of eastern Cuba, the insurgent armies fairly represent the intelligent aspirations of a large proportion of the people of the whole island, and that they purpose to wage this contest, on these better grounds of vantage, to the end and to make the present struggle a supreme test of the capacity of the Cuban people to win for themselves and their children the heritage of self-government.

A notable feature of the actual situation is the tactical skill displayed by its leaders. When the disparity of numbers and the comparatively indefensible character of the central and western Vegs country are considered, the passage of a considerable force into Piñar del Rio, followed by its successful maintenance there for many months, must be regarded as a military success of a pronounced character.

So, too, the Spanish force, in the field, in garrison on the island, or on its way thither from the mother country, is largely beyond any military display yet called for by a Cuban rising, thus affording an independent measure of the strength of the insurrection.

From every accessible indication it is clear that the present rebellion is on a far more formidable scale as to numbers, intelligence, and representative features than any of the preceding revolts of this century; that the corresponding effort of Spain for its repression has been enormously augmented, and that, despite the constant influx of fresh armies and material of war from the metropolis, the rebellion, after nearly two years of successful resistance, appears to-day to be in a condition to indefinitely prolong the contest on its present lines.

There is a white population upon the island of 1,000,000 people, and 700,000 of these, according to the testimony before the Senate, are supporting or are in sympathy with this organized government. This government is an existing fact. It has a written constitution, adopted in October, 1895; the supreme power is vested in a President, Vice-President, and four secretaries of state; its authority is recognized over fully one-half of the territory of Cuba, which, the Committee on Foreign Affairs informs us, is held to the exclusion of Spain; its officers collect taxes and discharge other official functions, and have done so ever since the first few months of the war; it has in the field an army of more than 30,000 men, and represents a force strong and powerful enough to insure domestic tranquillity when the hand of war is withdrawn.

The President tells us in his recent message that "the long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged war can not be attained," and with this quotation I can leave this part of the subject.

I am not troubled by the suggestion that the proposed amendment trenches upon the prerogative of the Executive upon the theory that to him exclusively belongs the right to recognize a new member of the family of nations. Whether this is correct or not, when the recognition is a single act unaccompanied by no other proposition, is a question which Senators learned in the law have differed upon, but it is not a material question here. We are now called upon to act under a power granted exclusively to the Congress by the express terms of the Constitution, and the question of recognition is inseparably connected with it.

The President has realized that his powers are inadequate to deal with the subject. He has remitted it to the Congress. We are to reach a result that all admit requires the united action of two of the great departments of the Government, and the Executive stands back and says the legislative must take the lead. He will at the appropriate time act upon the pending resolution as a branch of the legislative department, and if passed with the proposed amendment and thus approved, I do not share in the doubt expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], as to whether under such circumstances the recognition will be complete. What the legislative hand has signed the executive arm will surely execute.

The war is inevitable. I do not hesitate to say, in view of recent events, that it has begun. Spain struck the first blow when on the night of February 15 a Spanish submarine mine, without notice or warning, was sprung in Havana Harbor, and by the explosion the Maine was destroyed and hundreds of her officers, seamen, and marines were hurried into eternity.

This was practically recognized as an act of war on the 8th of March when, at the request of the President, the two Houses of Congress placed at his disposal $50,000,000, to be used in his discretion for the national defense and every purpose connected therewith. Since that time the Departments and bureaus have sounded the note of preparation, our vessels have been prepared as rapidly as possible for active service, new vessels and munitions of war have been purchased at home and abroad, our fortifications have been strengthened, and patriotic citizens in all parts of the Union have offered their services in defense of their country when the two nations confront one another in the inevitable conflict which is approaching, while in the meantime Spain has employed like diligence in warlike preparation. The resolutions we are now considering will soon be followed by the raising of armies and the invasion of Cuba. When our forces land there, I agree entirely with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], in the proposition contained in his recent resolution, that the contemplated military operations of our armies should be carried on in concert with the forces of the Cuban Republic, commanded by Gen. Maximo Gomez, under suitable and proper arrangements to be entered into between the military authorities of the two Governments and with our generals in chief command.

The resolution is as follows:

First. That the contemplated military operations against the Spanish armies on the Island of Cuba should be carried on in concert with the military forces under the command of Gen. Maximo Gomez, such concert to be secured through arrangements between this Government and the Cuban revolutionary authorities recognized by said Gomez, and that any offer looking to such arrangements that may be made by those authorities should be favorably considered, provided it shall concede to the commanding officer of the United States troops the right to control and direct all military operations.

Second. That all such military operations should be carried on to the end that the independence of the Cuban Republic may be secured.

The two nationalities have a common purpose in view in their determination to forever terminate Spanish domination upon the island. They are natural allies in this emergency. The Cuban soldiers are acclimated; they know the country well and thoroughly, and their cooperation with us must speedily result in the occupation of the cities and strongholds by the American and Cuban armies.

I do not accept the view presented by the President in his recent message of the 11th of April, when he says that our forcible intervention to stop the war involves "hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest, as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement." I shrink with abhorrence from any idea that the approaching conflict is likely to result, under any circumstances, in imposing hostile constraint upon the Cubans who are defending themselves against Spanish tyranny.

Many of these people who have sought our shores to avoid the hard conditions now existing in their own land have settled in Florida, and they are for the most part peaceable and well-disposed citizens. They supply the skill and labor which have made an important addition to our manufactures at Key West, at Tampa, and at other points, and they have added largely to our wealth and resources. They are a liberty-loving people, and have contributed freely of their means to aid their countrymen who have carried on this prolonged contest for freedom and independence. They are an intelligent, well-informed people, interested in the education and moral training of their children, eager for information and knowledge and self-advancement.

These people here and at home have been taught to believe that Americans are their friends and that our Government and our free institutions are worthy models for them to follow in building up a new republic in the Island of Cuba. There should be nothing in our action here to drive them from us or to give any grounds for apprehension that a time may come before the coming contest is brought to a termination when the flag of the United States will symbolize hostile constraint upon those of their countrymen who are in arms against Spain.

We can make no better beginning than by declaring at the outset that the republic is free and independent, and with this free and independent government as an ally our cause will have the good will of the lovers of human liberty the world over. Such a recognition will relieve us of any well-founded charge of aggression or self-aggrandizement if we thus make it clear that we propose to claim no power, when the victory has been won, to force upon an unwilling people unwelcome rulers or unreasonable burdens or harsh conditions.

We have hitherto labored under an embarrassment in our negotiations with Spain, because we have not recognized any right in the Cuban Government to be considered or heard with reference to subjects in which she has vital interests, and arrangements are proposed which can only be successfully carried out with her consent. An armistice was proposed, to continue until October next; but how vain an armistice must be unless the Cuban military force is a party to it. It is often said that it takes two to make a quarrel, but it is equally as true that one man can not maintain the peace when his neighbor continues his attack upon him.

The Cuban Republic, as a recognized Government, can agree with Spain, if a proposition for an armistice is offered or can authorize the United States to speak in her behalf, if we attempt to negotiate for her; but an unorganized population can agree to no armistice, and the pending resolution seems to contemplate only an unorganized population when it says "that the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent."

If the resolution of the committee is thus amended and our efforts are to be exerted in behalf of an independent republic and not to establish a government to be shaped under our dictation hereafter, I shall support the amended resolution. I may do so, though it will be with extreme reluctance, if the amendment should fail, in the hope and expectation that a recognition of the republic may be accomplished at a later day and that subsequent action may remove any unfavorable results that are apprehended from the passage of the resolution as it came from the committee.

Mr. President, the time at my disposal is limited, and I can not enter into the details of the subject as I should like, but we have passed the stage of prolonged debate. The time is at hand for action. I have the honor to represent in part a State that is peculiarly interested in this result; it is nearest the scene of action. During the continuance of the difficulties between Spain and the revolutionists there has been almost daily communication between the different ports of Cuba and our own harbors, and thousands of refugees have made their homes in our cities and towns. The sympathy that has been expressed and manifested for these unfortunate people has engendered the ill will of their enemies. We have a long line of coast around our State exposed at many important points to attack by an armed flotilla, and until recently there were no preparations for defensive warfare except at two points.

We may have to bear the brunt of the first shock of war, and our exposed position warns us that the danger of attack and invasion is imminent; but if war is necessary to defend the honor of our country, and to defend the young republic established almost within sight of our peninsula and the keys and islands around our coast, and to assist in making good the declaration of independence which its people have made, the people of Florida will accept the verdict which we will here render after a deliberate consideration of the situation as it has been presented, and will meet whatever results may follow calmly and courageously, and in the full confidence that the God of Battles will give to us the ultimate victory.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I have been among those who have deemed it their duty, while the matter of our controversy with Spain was pending in a diplomatic manner, to withhold any criticism of the President or any suggestion as to what course should be pursued by him. The matter was properly within his jurisdiction, and as long as it was confided to him by the Constitution and the law we deemed it but right and proper that the entire control of the subject should be left with him. But the Executive has informed us that he has ceased to undertake to carry on any further diplomatic negotiations. In his message recently sent to us he tells us:

> The issue is now with the Congress. It is a solemn responsibility. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors. Prepared to execute every obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution and the law, I await your action.

The Executive has informed Congress that he has exhausted his resources, and he has called upon Congress to take action at the point where he has been compelled to leave off. Upon us devolves that great responsibility. I admit, with those who have expressed themselves upon the floor, that this is a most serious responsibility. We all appreciate the accuracy of the pictures which have been limned before our eyes as to the horrors of war, and I take it there is none on this floor who is willing to rush into war if that calamity can possibly be averted.

Mr. President, I regret very much that the Executive felt impelled to cease efforts at negotiation. I believe it was possible under some circumstances to have avoided the issue which is here presented to us, and I must say that it is with great regret that I appreciate that the President has reached the conclusion that it was impossible for him to do anything further in the premises. I would not be understood as criticising the Executive harshly, but as a member of this body, as one who is called upon now to act at this most solemn and momentous moment, I feel that I am justified in expressing myself plainly, notwithstanding it may possibly involve a suggestion of disagreement with the Executive.

I shall not, in the brief time at my command, undertake to go over the various points of difference wherein I find that I can not agree with the views of the Executive. I will be just to him and say that I have ascribed to him nothing but the loftiest and most patriotic motives in the action which he has taken. We know his history. We know that he is the chosen of the 70,000,000 people in this country. We know that his record up to this time has been pure and patriotic, and I would be the last man to undertake to cast a reflection upon any conduct of his that was not fully justified by the facts.

But, Mr. President, in passing, only stopping for the purpose of asserting the fact that I do not agree with all the policy which has been pursued by the Executive, I would advert for a moment to a fact that was brought out this morning by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] in reference to the application made to the President by the representatives of six great powers with a view to mediating between this Government and Spain. The Senator from Nebraska stated that he had inquired of many older Senators if there was any precedent for it, if there had been anything of the kind in the history of this country, and that he was informed there never had been.

I beg to call that Senator's attention to the fact that on an occasion on which this country was in far greater stress than it is at this moment, in the year 1861, a similar interposition on the part of foreign nations was attempted with regard to mediation between the United States and the people of the Confederate States. The effort was made by Great Britain and France, and a visit was paid to the then Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, for the purpose of conveying to him the sentiment of the two great powers represented by their ministers. These facts are given in a lecture delivered by Mr. Frederick W. Seward, the son of Secretary Seward, and I think they can be accepted as absolutely authentic. I will not undertake to read what was said by Mr. Seward, but I will ask unanimous consent that the extract from his lecture which I have here may be published as a part of my remarks:

> Early in the war it was learned through the legation at St. Petersburg that Great Britain and France had agreed to take one and the same course on the subject of the American war, including the possible recognition of the rebels. Later this understanding was distinctly avowed by M. Thouvenel, the French minister of foreign affairs. This alliance for joint action might dictate its own terms. From a joint announcement of neutrality it would be only a step to joint mediation or intervention; and it was hardly to be anticipated that the Washington Government, struggling with an insurrection which had rent the country asunder, would be willing to face also the combined power of the two great empires of western Europe.
> To the minds of French and English statesmen the project was even praiseworthy. It would "stop the effusion of blood" and increase the supply of cotton. It would leave the American Union permanently divided, but that was a consummation that European statesmen in general would not grieve over.
> On the morning of the 15th of June a scene occurred at the State Department which had more influence on the fortunes of the Union than even a pitched battle. The Secretary was sitting at his table reading dispatches when the messenger announced:
> "The British minister is here to see you, sir, and the French minister, also."
>
> "Which came first?"
>
> "Lord Lyons, sir; but they say they both want to see you together."
>
> Seward instinctively guessed the motive for so unusual a diplomatic proceeding. He paused a moment and then said:
>
> "Show them both into the Assistant Secretary's room, and I will come in presently."
>
> A few minutes later, as the two ministers were seated side by side on the sofa, the door opened and the Secretary entered. Smiling and shaking his head, he said:
>
> "No, no, no! This will never do. I can not see you in that way."
>
> The ministers rose to greet him.
> "True," said one, "it is unusual, but we are obeying our instructions."
>
> "And at least," said the other, "you will allow us to state the object of our visit?"
> "No," said Mr. Seward, "we must start right about it, whatever it is. M. Mercier, will you do me the favor to come and dine with me this evening? Then we can talk over your business at our leisure. And if Lord Lyons will step into my room with me now, we will discuss what he has to say to me."
>
> "If you refuse to see us together," began the French envoy, with a courteous smile and shrug.
>
> "Certainly, I do refuse to see you together, though I will see either of you separately with pleasure, here or elsewhere."
> So the interviews were held severally, not jointly, and the papers which they had been instructed to jointly present and formally read to him were left for his informal inspection. A very brief examination of them only was necessary to enable him to say courteously, but with decision, that he declined to hear them read or to receive official notice of them. Writing to the United States ministers at London and Paris, he said: "We shall insist in this case, as in all others, on dealing with each of these powers alone, and their agreement to act together will not at all affect the course we shall pursue. This Government is sensible of the importance of the step it takes in declining to receive the communication in question."
> The projected intervention, thus thwarted in the first year of the war, was again and again attempted in some different form during each succeeding year. At one time the plan was seriously discussed in the imperial councils at Paris of putting forward some small power, like Belgium, to pick a quarrel with the United States, and then the two great Empires, suddenly espousing that side of the controversy, would be able jointly to crush the American Government thus drawn into a trap.

The substance of it is that Mr. Seward had received information that he was to receive a visit from the two ambassadors or representatives of France and Great Britain for the purpose of expressing to him the wishes of their countries with regard to the war then existing between the United and Confederate States. The call was made. Mr. Seward was notified of their presence and went to them, and before they had an opportunity to express to him their purpose he informed them that, while he was perfectly willing and always glad to receive either of those ministers, he did not care to receive them officially together, and that he would not do so; that he would accept as unofficial the note which they wished to present; he would read it over, and he would let them know thereafter whether he would receive it officially.

The ministers departed. Mr. Seward read the note, and came to the conclusion that it involved an interposition on the part of those powers in our affairs on this side of the Atlantic, and immediately he resolved that he would then and there stop all pretensions on their part to express their wishes with regard to the conduct of affairs in the matter. Writing to the United States ministers at London and Paris, he said:

> We shall insist, in this case as in all others, on dealing with each of these powers alone, and their agreement to act together will not at all affect the course we shall pursue. This Government is sensible of the importance of the step it takes in declining to receive the communication in question.

There is a precedent—a precedent which it will be well for us to adhere to in this our day of unity and strength. It was established at a time when much depended upon it and when it would have been difficult, perhaps, for the United States, had it not been for the prescience, for the foresight of Mr. Seward, to have successfully met the effort of the European powers. I refer to this now, not in a spirit of criticism, but because I am satisfied that in the emergency which is before us now, possibly, probably, a similar effort will be made, not by two powers, but, as was done the other day, by six powers, and I think, Mr. President, in view of the precedent established by Mr. Seward, that similar conduct on the part of this Government with regard to such a proposition should be observed.

Mr. President, I have said that I regretted that the Executive had come to the conclusion that negotiation was no longer possible between this Government and Spain, and as things stand now I concur with the opinion expressed by the great majority of those who have addressed the Senate in the belief that we are now so committed to war, that hostilities are so near at hand, that it does not lie in the power of any man or any set of men to avert that terrible calamity. The question is, then, what is best for us to do?

We are presented here with the consideration of three propositions—the majority report of the Foreign Relations Committee, the minority resolution, and the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives. So far as the last is concerned, while I shall not say that under no circumstances will I vote for it, I regard it as a measure which is, if not unconstitutional, so close to it that it would require a great strain upon my sense of duty to justify me in voting for it. Anyone who looks at it will see that it practically confides to the President the war-making power, because, while it declares—

> That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba to the end, etc.—

when it comes to the point of providing the ways and means whereby he shall make that intervention good, it says:

> And the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

In other words, if the President choose to exercise the discretion there confided to him, of invoking the vast power of the armed forces of the United States, he is at liberty to do so, or if he prefers not to do so, there is no requirement that he shall. For that reason, in view of what has been said upon the subject of delegating our war-making power to the Executive, in view of the fact, and I do not think it will be disputed, that that is beyond our power, that we are recreant to our oaths if we undertake to commit to him so vast a power, I can not see how we can consistently support any such resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I fully realized that after the full and elaborate discussion which has been had in the Senate on the subject now pending for our action, that little, if any, information could be added to that now in its possession. For weeks the grave responsibility which the present crisis has produced has commanded the best thought, the diligent investigation, and the most earnest patriotism of every member of this body. Each has determined for himself the course which he should pursue, inspired by the highest sense of duty to his country and with the full realization of the consequences which will follow from his action.

None who have been in touch with the intense and earnest sentiment of this body can hesitate or doubt as to the character of its utterance. If any doubt or anxiety exists, it is not as to what will be the action of the Senate, but how promptly and unitedly that action will be taken. The American people do not court the horrors of war, but they will not submit that their honor shall be imperiled, the lives of their citizens taken, and a fertile and populous island at their very doors rendered desolate and her population decimated by unrestrained and barbarous decrees issue by authority of an unfeeling and unforgiving nation.

The President has informed Congress that he has reached the end of diplomatic negotiations. Only one of two courses is left open for us to take. We must submit to the indignities, insults, and barbarous acts which have marked the course of Spain to this country and to the people of Cuba, or with clear, ringing, and distinct voice the American Congress must make such a declaration as will leave nothing for construction or inference, and declare to that Government and to the civilized world that after full and deliberate consideration, the course of honor and safety lies only for the protection of those rights and interests which have been invaded, indemnity for those lives which have been sacrificed so cruelly, and the removal of the barbarism which has existed in the Island of Cuba, by submitting its cause to the arbitrament of war.

The mailed hand of oppression must be lifted by this nation from the emaciated shoulders of the people of Cuba and the rights and lives of American citizens must be made inviolate by the lesson which will be taught, that secrecy and treachery will never be permitted to shield a national responsibility. But little difference exists in this body as to what should be the action of the Senate, but we have debated long and earnestly as to the method or form by which that result should be reached.

Though not in full accord with the views I entertain on this subject, I shall support the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whose patriotism and ability, under the rules of the Senate, this question has been submitted for their recommendation and action.

I regret that I can not give my earnest support to the amendment which will be submitted by the minority of that committee. Upon this question I have the most decided view as to the law which should govern us and as to the policy which at this time should control our action. Had it not been for this difference of opinion with so many of those in whom I have the highest confidence as to their ability, learning, and patriotism, I should have remained silent and not delayed the final action of this body one moment by taking part in this debate; nor will I at this time attempt to go over the field which has been garnered so fully by those who have preceded me, but content myself with briefly stating the conclusions which will control my action in casting my vote against the amendments which will be submitted by the minority.

First. It is not such a government as under the well-known rules of the law of nations is entitled to be acknowledged as a new state in the sisterhood of states and sovereignties.

Second. The principles which have for over a hundred years governed this country, and which have been maintained through every Administration which has been called upon to act upon similar questions, would prohibit its recognition as a free and independent sovereignty.

Third. The advice of every official of this Government charged with the duty of ascertaining the real character, power, and function claimed to be exercised by the insurgent government in the Island of Cuba is adverse to its recognition as a state by the Government of the United States.

Fourth. The consequences which might follow such action upon the part of this Government, when it claims the sympathy and challenges the respect of civilized nations for its patience under great provocation and its strict adherence to those well-recognized rules of conduct approved by all enlightened nations, are too grave to permit a mere sentimental desire on our part to control the action of this Government under the facts presented for our consideration.

Fifth. The President of the United States, representing a coordinate branch of this Government, has informed Congress in an official communication that with the information in his possession, derived from those sources upon which he has the right to rely, in his judgment, under the principles of the law of nations and the position which this country has during its entire diplomatic history assumed on this question, the facts and circumstances bearing upon the existence of such a government did not warrant the Executive in recognizing the independence of the Cuban Republic.

Sixth. This being a joint resolution, it must be submitted to the President for either his approval or disapproval. He has announced to Congress his views on this question. He has officially declared that the facts did not justify the acknowledgment or recognition of the independence of that Government. Under these circumstances, in my humble judgment, it would be unwise in the legislative department, under the grave conditions surrounding our action, to force upon the Executive the alternative of violating his conscience or repudiating his declaration as to his official duty by asking him to approve the resolution or, if he could not yield to the views of Congress upon this question, to compel him to return with his disapproval a resolution which, in fact and in law, is a conditional declaration of war by the war-making power upon the ground that Congress has included in that declaration subjects which are not within its usual and ordinary primary jurisdiction, and upon which the Executive has formally announced that he differs with Congress.

Seventh. If the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body shall finally pass the Congress, it is a conditional declaration of war with the Kingdom of Spain. In entering upon so grave and vital a controversy in the name of the people of the United States it should be our object to crystallize all elements and agencies. Difference on nonessentials to the interests of the United States at least should be harmonized, that in the face of the world we may present a united front, not only in the legislative branch of the Government, but through the hearty concurrence in our official action of all branches of the Government charged with the inauguration and conduct of that war. Party interests, sectional differences, personal views which do not involve a sacrifice of constitutional principles or national interest, should be made subordinate to unity of purpose and effort. For these reasons I shall feel constrained to cast my vote against the amendment proposed to the Senate resolutions by the minority of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I had hoped that the resolutions of the Committee on Foreign Relations might be adopted by the Senate without debate. It was my earnest desire again to witness that magnificent spectacle of the representatives of the people, without regard to party, voting to maintain the national honor with the same calm dignity with which they voted fifty millions for the national defense.

Mr. President, the results of that act were worth all the cost. It said to all the world that the American people were united. It said that all sectionalism had been abolished. It said, "No North, no South, no East, no West, but one country, one flag, one people."

I had hoped for immediate action. I had hoped to see the Senate and House hold up the hands of the President, "even until the going down of the sun and until Amalek and his people should have been discomforted with the edge of the sword."

Mr. President, I regret, as this debate has progressed, that an apparent effort should have been made to obtain some partisan advantage from such a serious issue as that of war. "Our country first and party afterwards" is the motto that should guide all true patriots. In the last one hundred years no war has been declared or refrained from without criticism, usually unjust, upon those who have had the responsibility of waging it.

In 1870 France, with the cry "On to Berlin!" and without preparation, rushed headlong into war; and Alsace and Lorraine stand as monuments to her folly. But yesterday Greece clamored for war, and her Government was forced into it without adequate preparation and with an army and navy that had nothing to fight with but the remembrance of the glories of Salamis, Marathon, and Lepanto; and it took the combined force of Europe to maintain her integrity as a nation. Mr. President, what we needed was adequate preparation; less oratory and more powder; less rhetoric and more rams.

I am not versed in—nor do I care for—academic discussions of so-called international law. Divesting it of all subtleties and applying the principles of a sound common sense to this question, it must be acknowledged that the United States has grave ground of complaint against Spain. It is not that Spain has maintained a nuisance at our doors; it is not that we have been forced at an enormous expense to maintain our neutrality; it is not the fact of her centuries of misrule in Cuba, culminating in a barbarous and cruel war. It is all of these together that make the situation intolerable.

When the Maine went down in the harbor of Havana, she carried with her the last hope of Spanish sovereignty on the Western Hemisphere, and the silent and sunken wreck in that harbor is the harbinger of liberty and independence to the insurgents of Cuba.

Mr. President, I have heard much in this debate of the cost of war, and that this, though a powerful, was a peace-loving nation. No one has greater admiration for the marvelous development and growth of the American people than I. No one has greater admiration for their business acumen, activity, and enterprise, and no one more highly values their importance. The point is often made here and elsewhere that we must not disturb business, must not interfere with trade. There is more to deal with in the life of a nation than business or trade. There is patriotism, love of country, honor, and virtue—things that money can not make and money can not buy. What is it, as we go forth from this Chamber and see the flag floating above us, that causes our hearts to beat stronger? Is it because we have become rich and powerful under its folds? I think not. When I see it there, I see no dollar marks on its broad stripes. I do not see the motto of the epicure—"Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." When I look I see, if anything, the picture of Washington, marching from defeat at Long Island to victory at Trenton, going from misery and starvation at Valley Forge to glorious triumph at Yorktown. I see the triumphs of John Paul Jones, of Perry, and Decatur. I see the grave and patient face of Lincoln, surrounded by all that mighty host that went forth to battle for constitutional liberty and that men might be free.

Mr. President, it is respect and honor for our flag and the principles it stands for that has made this country one of the great nations of the earth.

The Constitution of the United States imposes upon Congress the right to declare war. And while I would not shift upon any man, no matter how high his station, the responsibilities in which I should share, speaking for myself alone, if I could have my way, I would lay aside all other resolutions and cast my vote for a direct declaration of war. And I would follow that declaration with a vote to give to the President of the United States the money to make it effective, that we might wipe out the foul insult to our flag in the harbor of Havana.

Since the night of that unfortunate tragedy, if Spain had denounced the act and hunted down the assassins, meting out to them punishment for their crime, some avenue might have been left open to maintain an honorable peace. But in place of investigation we have had a shameful and self-convicting farce. In the place of honorable amend, we are now brought face to face with a foul slander upon the dead and living heroes, and the Spanish prime minister, in his official capacity, posts the officers and men of the Maine, both living and dead, as cowards, poltroons, and tricksters. In the name of the American Navy and in the name of her heroes of the past and of to-day, I denounce the foul slander.

Mr. President, Spain reached the height of her glory during a past age. Unwise and wasteful in her day of power and prosperity, when her splendor dazzled the world, she stands to-day, without art, without literature, without science, and without hope, a bankrupt and ruined nation. There can be no glory in war over such a carcass. But we shall have war; not a war of conquest nor aggression, not war for territorial aggrandizement, but war on behalf of liberty and humanity.

Mr. President, the issue that confronts us is momentous. But I do not doubt but that the representatives of the people will meet it with calmness and dignity, and work out its solution with a high sense of justice and honor, and when history shall speak of that nation which is greatest among the nations of the earth, she will say:

> Each of the nations around you has fought for her country and line,
> But thou hast fought for a stranger, in hate of a wrong not thine.
> Happy are all free peoples, too strong to be dispossessed;
> But blessed is she among nations who dared to be strong for the rest.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, in this solemn hour I have no thought of discussing the causes of war. I shall make a few remarks on this occasion, mainly to explain some plain principles of law that I think deserve the attention of the Senate.

First I will answer some remarks that have been made about the President of the United States. I have no thought of criticising that great citizen whom our people have put in place to rule over us according to the Constitution of the United States. In his line of duty, in his line of power, I have no word of criticism to make. He came to the position he occupies a distinguished citizen, of clean reputation, of much education and experience, and I believe myself that he is to-day as patriotic a citizen of the United States as there is in this Chamber. So I do not want to be understood as criticising the President.

But we are told that we ought to go with the President. Ah, Mr. President, that will not do. We ought to go with the President so far as he is discharging his constitutional functions. Evidently he understands that in the same light I do, or he would never have submitted to Congress what he ought to do under the circumstances.

When the President acts in his Presidential sphere, let us support his hands. Let us hold him up. Let us not say a word to his discredit. But when he turns over a subject to Congress which by the Constitution belongs to Congress, it is for the President to obey what Congress does in reference to war. It will not do for gentlemen to say that if we do not go along with the President in this matter we are not patriotic citizens, that we want to raise difficulty.

That will not do, Mr. President. It is the function of Congress to make war or to refuse to make war; the President has no power or just authority to criticise it, and I have no idea that the President ever had thought of doing so. A Senator said that we do not comprehend the difficulties that surround him, and he said a wise thing. We do not. We do not comprehend the difficulties that surround him and have surrounded him; and so far as he has protracted the negotiations for the purpose of putting the nation in the position it ought to occupy, every true man ought to applaud him.

Mr. President, he has his constitutional advisers chosen by law, and doubtless they are patriotic citizens. No one questions that. But it is a false idea to suppose that Senators are the advisers of the President. There is no foundation for it in the Constitution or laws of this country. Senators are not the Presidential advisers at all. His Presidential advisers are his Cabinet. The Senate is the Presidential adviser, and not the Senators. I have no doubt that the patriotic citizen who now occupies that chair has had a thousand temptations and a power to resist them that is almost miraculous. I will not go into these things. He has had more advisers than the law allows, and he has been able to meet the issue as against all of them.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the general resolutions before us, but I say emphatically that the resolution passed by the other House, which is also before us for consideration, is unconstitutional and can not be supported by any argument in the world to sustain it. The preamble does not mean anything. It has no vitality, no force. It is the resolution that is to make the law. What does it say?—

> And with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba.

He is authorized and directed to do that. Well, I am not complaining of that part of the resolution at present; but the next clause is that wherein the Constitution is directly and palpably violated:

> That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba, to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba; and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. President, Congress can not delegate to the President any power to declare war and bring it on when he sees fit. Notice the singular clearness with which the other House has drawn the distinction between an order and a mere authority:

The President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene.

He is authorized—using this same word—and empowered to make war when he sees fit. That is what is meant there.

Mr. President, the Constitution says that Congress alone can declare war. The first declaration is that all legislative power is vested in the Congress of the United States. That language has been uniformly construed to mean Congress alone, without any other authority. So, whatever may happen in reference to this resolution, if it is not amended so as to make a positive and unequivocal direction, it is bound to be unconstitutional in the eyes of that instrument as construed by our own Supreme Court.

I have another objection to this resolution. What war is this that the President is authorized to make? I know that Congress can declare a general war or a limited war; I know, also, it can declare a conditional war; but it can not vest that power in the President. If it is insisted that this is a declaration of war, whom is it against? The President is to stop the war in Cuba. That is the purpose. He is to intervene in Cuba to stop the war there. The Spanish Government is not named or even intimated in that paper. The Spanish Government and no part of the Spanish territory nor the high seas is covered by that declaration. He is to intervene and establish peace in the Island of Cuba. He is not authorized to make war on the Spanish Government anywhere else.

Even if we could give him such authority, we do not confer it by this resolution. The war is limited to the Island of Cuba; and without a declaration of war by this Congress, the President has no authority to make war on the high seas. We all know that if war comes, it is bound to be on the high seas and not in the Island of Cuba in the first instance. Before the American soldiers can get to the Island of Cuba it will be necessary for the American Navy to make a road into that island and to bridge it so that the soldiers can pass over it; and we will have to bridge it with such a force as will prevent any Spanish ships from destroying our convoys to that island. The fight will be on the high seas; and yet the President of the United States, if authorized to make war at all by this resolution, is to make it in the Island of Cuba and not against the Spanish nation.

I hope that whatever resolution the Senate passes will be in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and not a disgrace to our people by putting them into a war without lawful authority.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, in stating the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment reported by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I wish to say that I do not deny the constitutional right of the President to recognize a government; but this case is exceptional. We have determined to intervene in a contest between two contending people. We can join one or the other, or oppose both. Necessarily when that question is submitted to us, it comes within the jurisdiction of Congress to say in what manner that intervention shall be exercised and whether we shall join one party or the other, or oppose both, or whether we shall make any exception.

If the Senate resolution had to be construed by its text, I would unhesitatingly vote for it; but, unfortunately, the clear import of that resolution has been denied. An interpretation has been placed upon it so as to make it mean that now no legal government exists among the Cuban people. That resolution says that the people are free and independent, but you can not conceive of an independent nation without its having an organized government. It is an organized community, a moral organism, and its government is but the assertion of its sovereignty. To deny this, to say that this resolution means anything else, is to say that in Cuba there exist fragments of wild, reckless, mad humanity warring upon an organized government. If that be the fact, then we have no right whatever to join in an organized mass in a war upon constituted and organized society.

These resolutions admit that the Cuban people have internal sovereignty, that they have the right to determine their political end, that they have the right to establish their own forms of government, that they have the right of exclusive legislation within their own domain, that they have the right of self-preservation, and that they have the right to maintain relations with the other nations of the earth. Therefore, I believe that this resolution should be relieved from ambiguity, and expression given in it that the people of Cuba have organized themselves into a Government, and that they are in full possession of all the essentials of internal sovereignty.

Why should they not be declared a free and independent people and why should it not be declared that a republican form of government exists among them? Their battles have been in no aimless contest. They have been engaged in an effort to maintain their unity and life and their self-preservation in the fulfillment of a righteous cause, the independence of their people as a nationality. They have passed through every conflict of effort and endeavor; they have passed through the gates of willing and holy sacrifice with the sacrament of the nation upon their lips; they have prayed in the litany of human hope and sorrow for the sympathy of the world. Their prayer has been responded to by the people of this country, who have been lashed into acute madness and sympathy, and the wave has come rolling on until it has gathered force and power, and it will dash against and crush and level to the sands of the sea any barrier that may be raised between Cuba and her freedom.

Mr. President, we stand upon the threshold of war. While there is gloom among the people of the United States as to the severing of the relations with a former friendly power; while there are dread and hope and fear as to our efforts on sea and land, as there are preceding every battle, as to the loss of dear ones and the wreck of homes and firesides, yet there is consolation among the people and joy, I may say, as it is remembered that all past differences have gone, that the dream of the gray and the blue has become realized, and that we stand as one people, under one flag, and knowing only one country. The rock which divided the waters has disappeared, and they are now united, rolling onward, happy in their embrace, singing the joyous song of a nation:

Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. President, I shall take but a very short time to give my views on the pending resolution. I shall be glad to vote for the House resolution if I can have an opportunity to do so. I can not vote for the resolution reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], from the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, because I believe it to be unconstitutional. That resolution proposes to recognize the independence of Cuba. That is purely an executive act. The Constitution under which we live gives to the President of this country the exclusive right, in my judgment, to recognize any country. He could recognize Cuba to-day by accepting a minister from that country; he could have done so at any time; and I am inclined to think from my knowledge of the President of the United States that he would have done so had he been satisfied at any time in the past that the Cubans have a form of government which we could properly accept.

Who are the Cuban insurgents? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] tells us that they have a president in that country, a Mr. Masó, and a vice-president, both of whom are equal in point of ability to the President and Vice-President of the United States. I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Ohio that he has found that these men are so distinguished as he said they were. He is the first man to have discovered that. No man in this country ever heard or knew of the president and vice-president of the Cuban Republic in the sense in which the Senator spoke. We have in the report made by the Committee on Foreign Relations the evidence of a gentleman who lived in Cuba in 1878, a Mr. Guerra, who acts as treasurer of the Cuban Republic in this country. Who is Mr. Guerra? He keeps the treasury of the Cuban junta in a cigar store in the city of New York, where he has lived the last twenty years, and do Senators propose to recognize that kind of a government? If they do, I, for one, do not.

We are told that the insurgents have a president and a cabinet. That may be so, but it is probably a cabinet on paper; and I am satisfied that the government which has existed for the last three years in Cuba is purely a paper government.

The treasurer says he has collected $400,000 in taxes. How are those taxes collected? The insurgents go to a sugar planter in Cuba and they say to him, "If you do not pay this tax of 25 or 40 cents a bag on your sugar, we will burn your plantation." Of course, under such circumstances, the man pays. That is the kind of tax collection they have in Cuba, and that is the kind of a government our friends on the other side want to recognize.

The committee had before them a gentleman by the name of Quesada, I think. I am told Mr. Quesada's evidence is not in the report. He is reputed to be the chargé d'affaires from the Cuban Republic to this country. When I look back over the message of General Grant on the Cuban revolution of 1868 to 1878, I find there was a gentleman named Quesada, a General Quesada, who in one morning crucified 650 prisoners. I do not know whether this man Quesada, who appears as chargé d'affaires to this country from the Cuban Republic, is the same gentleman or not.

Mr. MORGAN. He is not the Mr. Quesada, who is a young man, only about 30 years old.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, it is not the same person. Mr. Quesada is a young man utterly incapable of countenancing anything of the kind.

Mr. GEAR. I do not say that he is the same gentleman, but I suppose he is a descendant of the man to whom I refer.

The Senator from Ohio says that the insurgents have a capital at Cubitas. I have a letter from a gentleman as well known to me as almost any man in this Senate. He was in Cubitas fifteen months ago, and he stated to me that Cubitas was a mere deserted hamlet, a deserted sugar plantation. That is where the government which our friends on the other side propose to recognize is located. I am inclined to think that if you would hunt the map over, you would hardly be able to locate the capital of the Republic of Cuba.

Many of our friends on the other side of the Chamber were in the civil war. Gallant men they were, too, but the government for which they fought had an army; it had a president; it had a postal department; it had a congress; it had more than a million of men in arms against our Government; and they were enforcing all the laws of their so-called Confederacy among themselves, and with all those departments of government which they had established they endeavored to get European governments to recognize their independence. The United States Government replied and said to those powers, "You must not do it," and the Confederacy was unable to secure recognition, and yet we are asked now after that long contest, which cost the country so many valuable lives and millions of treasure, to recognize this Republic of Cuba and go back on our record of thirty years ago. Yes, our record of a hundred years.

Mr. President, I am on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, and my colleagues of that committee who are on the other side of the Chamber will bear me witness—and I shall not violate any secrets of the committee in making the statement—that when a colored man is nominated by the President of the United States it is with great difficulty that we are able to confirm him. I do not blame my Southern brethren for that. Born and brought up and educated as they were, I can understand their feelings in regard to the race question and their objection to being brought in contact with that class of people; but the men whom they are trying to recognize as a government are largely of that race and that color which they object to being placed in charge of any of the post-offices in their section of country.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GEAR. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that less than 29 per cent of the insurgents are colored people?

Mr. GEAR. No, sir.

Mr. CLAY. That is correct, for I read it last night.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator may read almost anything in the press. I was in the presence of two gentlemen two weeks ago, one of whom has lived in Cuba for years, who has a million-dollar plantation there, whose name I will not mention. The other was Dr. Klopsch, the man who is administering the charities of the Christian people among the sufferers in Cuba. He said the Cuban army, so called, consisted of less than 10,000 men and that 70 per cent of them are colored men. I do not blame the colored men for belonging to that army, for the colored men in that country love liberty as they do in the United States; but my friends from the South, who are opposed to the confirmation of colored postmasters in the South, have turned around and are now ready to recognize a government more than half colored.

Mr. MILLS. I ask my friend if they have been appointing any negro postmasters in his section of the country?

Mr. GEAR. We have not, of course. We have no negroes there.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, you have.

Mr. GEAR. Very few. There is not 1 per cent of them composing the population of the State I live in.

Mr. KENNEY. How many negro postmasters were appointed there?

Mr. GEAR. Not any. None of the colored people in Iowa have applied.

General Lee, a Democrat of Democrats, a man whom every American citizen honors to-day as few men are honored, said in his evidence before the committee of which my friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is chairman that the Government of Cuba is a "skeleton government," that they have no recognized government that he knows of, and yet——

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I ask him if General Lee did not say the insurgents had 30,000 troops?

Mr. MILLS. From 30,000 to 40,000.

Mr. LINDSAY. And that he had never seen a Cuban, white or black, who did not adhere to the revolutionary government?

Mr. GEAR. I do not doubt that that is true.

I think there is ground, Mr. President, for a declaration of war against the Spaniards, and that ground is the loss of the Maine. The people whom I represent in part in this Chamber feel very sore about the loss of the Maine. The bodies of Iowa men were buried in that iron casket in that great disaster. The State I represent here in part will do in a war with Spain as it did in the war of the rebellion thirty years ago. We had at that time 675,000 people, and we sent one man out of every eight and three-fourths of our population into that war.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GEAR. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a committee in whom we all have confidence, and they certainly would not report a state of facts here that does not exist. I find in the report of that committee the following:

> The Spaniards charge, in order to belittle the insurrection, that it is a movement of negroes. It should be remembered that not more than one-third of the entire population are of the colored race. As a matter of fact, less than one-third of the army are of the colored race.

Mr. GEAR. I have no doubt about the truth as to the population of Cuba.

Mr. CLAY. Both as to population and as to the army.

Mr. GEAR. I doubt the fact as regards the report of the committee, in view of what was said to me in this city two weeks ago to-day—that of the insurgents, 70 per cent were colored men. I do not blame them for being in that army. They were glad to enlist in the Army of the United States during the late war when they had an opportunity.

But, as I said before, the State I represent in part had about 675,000 population, and one man out of every eight and three-fourths of that population enlisted to maintain the majesty of this Government when the hearts of the people beat as with one pulsation in favor of maintaining the integrity of the Union. And when it comes to war to maintain the majesty of the American flag, the people of Iowa will send as many men in proportion to her population, which is now 2,000,000, as they sent to the war of 1861–1865.

For the reasons which I have attempted to give in these few brief moments, I shall vote for the resolution reported by the majority of the committee, and I shall not vote for the resolution reported by the minority. I do not think that resolution should be adopted by this body. Its effect will be to tie the hands of the President. You know what terrible responsibilities have been placed upon his shoulders. He has exhausted, as we all know, all the arts of diplomacy, and has come to the naked fact that we can not submit to this thing any longer. He says in his message the war must stop. I believe in my heart of hearts that it must stop, and that the American people are ready to stand together as one man to stop it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after the utterances I made in this Chamber a few weeks ago in reference to the Cuban situation, it is perhaps unnecessary for me to add a single word. I certainly would not do so were it not for the fact that the character of the Cuban people and the Cuban Government has been called so sharply in question in this debate.

I remember, Mr. President, that the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] gave it as his opinion that the purpose of the revolutionists is to establish a black republic in Cuba. I think I do not misquote him when I say that he said that that was a proper aspiration and one that had his assent. To-day the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], for the purpose of prejudicing this case, and possibly changing some votes, has repeated the statement that the purpose of the Cuban insurgents is to establish a black republic, and that their army is largely composed of colored men.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said nothing of the kind. I simply said that their army was composed of 60 or 70 per cent of colored people. I did not say anything in relation to establishing a colored republic.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no purpose of misrepresenting the Senator. The RECORD will show whether I have done so or not.

Mr. GEAR. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have talked with a great many people who have knowledge on this question. I have talked with Cubans in the United States; I have talked with Cubans and with Spaniards in Havana, and I have found nothing to warrant the assertion either that the revolutionists purpose establishing a black republic or that their army is largely composed of colored men. I turn to the report which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] read from a moment ago, and I want to read a little more from it than he read. It is a statement of General Palma, who represents the Cuban Government in this country, a gentleman of culture and of learning, a gentleman whose word every honest American will accept on matters relating to the Cuban insurrection. General Palma says:

> The Spaniards charge, in order to belittle the insurrection, that it is a movement of negroes. It should be remembered that not more than one-third of the entire population are of the colored race. As a matter of fact, less than one-third of the army are of the colored race. Take, for instance, the generals of corps, divisions, and brigades. There are but three of the colored race, namely, Antonio and José Maceo and Augustin Cebreco, and these are mulattoes whose deeds and victories have placed them far above the generals of those who pretend to despise them. None of the members of the constituent assembly or of the government are of the colored race. The Cubans and the colored race are as friendly in this war as they were in times of peace, and it would indeed be strange if the colored people were not so, as the whites fought for and with them in the last revolt, the only successful purpose of which was the freedom of the slaves.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that ought to settle the question of a colored republic, when they have established a government in Cuba and not one single colored man occupies a position in that government, and only one-third of the Cuban army are of the colored race.

The question of the recognition of the Cuban government has been contested in this debate. I hesitate not to say that I am in favor of recognizing the brave men who have for three years carried the banner of liberty across the fields and over the mountains of Cuba, fighting as bravely as men ever fought in the history of the world. Listen to the utterances of General Gomez, the grand and patriotic commander of the Cuban forces. Two years ago the 28th of March I made some observations regarding Cuba in the Senate, and I quoted these words from General Gomez, who then as now was at the head of the Cuban army:

I admire and love the American Republic, but it is impossible for me to understand why we should not be recognized as belligerents. We suffer greater wrongs than did the early American colonists who threw off the yoke of Great Britain, and we have more troops in the field than were ever gathered together by the thirteen States; yet the American Government declines to share with the patriots now fighting the honor and glory of freeing Cuba. We have taken the words of Patrick Henry as our motto, and will have liberty or death.

Thus spoke Gomez nearly three years ago. They are brave words from a brave man—words of admiration for the people and the institutions of the United States.

Mr. President, there are two things the Cuban mother teaches her child when it gets old enough to prattle. The one is to abhor and despise the flag of Spain, and the other to revere the flag of the United States. Those are the people who are fighting for liberty in Cuba, and those are the people who are traduced in the Senate of the United States.

I wish I had time to read some further utterances of General Gomez. He is a brave old man. He is a patriot. He is a republican. He is a lover of liberty. I have on my desk a proclamation dated Headquarters of the Army of Liberation, Sancti Spiritus, November 11, 1895, in which General Gomez calls attention to the war that had been organized for liberty in the Island of Cuba. The declaration is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF LIBERATION,
Sancti Spiritus, November 11, 1895.

To honest men, victims of the torch:

The painful measure made necessary by the revolution of redemption drenched in innocent blood from Hatuey to our own times by cruel and merciless Spain will plunge you in misery. As general in chief of the army of liberation, it is my duty to lead it to victory without permitting myself to be restrained or terrified by any means necessary to place Cuba in the shortest time in possession of her dearest ideal. I therefore place the responsibility for so great a ruin on those who look on impassively and force us to those extreme measures which they then condemn like dolts and hypocrits that they are. After so many years of supplication, humiliations, contumely, banishment, and death, when this people, of its own will, has arisen in arms, there remains no other solution but to triumph, it matters not what means are employed to accomplish it.

This people can not hesitate between the wealth of Spain and the liberty of Cuba. Its greatest crime would be to stain the land with blood without effecting its purposes because of puerile scruples and fears which do not concur with the character of the men who are in the field, challenging the fury of an army which is one of the bravest in the world, but which in this war is without enthusiasm or faith, ill fed, and unpaid. The war did not begin February 24; it is about to begin now.

The war had to be organized. It was necessary to calm and lead into the proper channels the revolutionary spirit always exaggerated in the beginning by wild enthusiasm. The struggle ought to begin in obedience to a plan and method, more or less studied, as the result of the peculiarities of this war. This has already been done. Let Spain now send her soldiers to rivet the chains of her slaves. The children of this land are in the field, armed with the weapons of liberty. The struggle will be terrible, but success will crown the revolution and efforts of the oppressed.

MAXIMO GOMEZ, General in Chief.

What a grand and patriotic utterance that is. Mr. President, I wish I had time to quote many other utterances from this brave old man. Here is an order from the Headquarters of the Army of Liberation, dated August 1, 1895, in which this man whom Senators of the United States are afraid to trust at the head of the Cuban government gives direction to the forces under his command. It is as humane an order as was ever issued by any man in command of any army in the history of the world. There is not a sentence in it that does not breathe the spirit of humanity and love. He tells his generals and his soldiers how they shall act in the event of capturing soldiers of the Spanish army. He tells them to treat them well. He tells them to allow them to go on parole. I will insert it as a part of my remarks:

CIRCULAR OF THE GENERAL IN CHIEF.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF LIBERATION,
Camaguey, August 1, 1895.

In order to establish in a clear and precise manner the mode of procedure toward the chiefs, officers, and soldiers of the Monarchy captured in action or operations, and toward those who voluntarily surrender to our columns or authorities, I have deemed it convenient to order as follows:

ART. 1. All prisoners captured in action or by the troops of the republic will be immediately liberated and returned to their ranks, unless they volunteer to join the army of liberation. The abandoned wounded will be gathered and attended to with all care, and the unburied dead interred.

ART. 2. All persons who shall be arrested, charged with committing the misdemeanors in the circular of July 1, by violating or disregarding the said order, will be summarily proceeded against.

ART. 3. Those of the prisoners who are chiefs or officers of the army of the monarchy will be respected and considered according to their rank and treated according to the valor with which they may have resisted, and will all be returned to their ranks if they so desire.

ART. 4. Those who volunteer to join the ranks of the republicans, and appear before our columns and authorities, will have their option in the mode of serving the cause of the republic, either in arms or by more peaceful occupations, civil or agricultural pursuits.

I communicate this to you for your instruction and for your rigid compliance. Country and liberty.

MAXIMO GOMEZ,
The General in Chief.

Mr. President, the man who is leading the insurgent forces in the Island of Cuba to-day has never uttered one single word during the past three years which can be contorted into anything except an utterance in behalf of human liberty and independence.

I have here on my desk some testimony of other men in the shape of autographic letters. I have a letter from a gentleman well known to at least one Senator of the United States, a major in the Cuban army, an American by birth. He wrote only a few weeks ago to an American citizen as follows:

It is with no little degree of delight that I write you from the camp of Gen. Maximo Gomez. He and his men are in the best spirits and he is as confident of success as he was at the beginning of the present struggle for liberty. There is a large contingent of insurgents in this part of the island, about 40 per cent being cavalry. The infantry, which is mostly operating in small groups, is almost naked and shoeless, while the cavalrymen are much better dressed.

Mr. President, this gentleman, speaking to a United States Senator in Cuba only a few weeks ago, told him that many of the men were shoeless and entirely naked above their waists and sleeping on the ground in the winter, with no covering but grass and twigs. Yet those brave men, suffering such privations, are carrying on a warfare against the great Kingdom of Spain in behalf of the principles that we as a nation enjoy, and the armies and navies of Spain are utterly powerless to crush them.

Again, I have a letter from the chief of the fourth corps of the Cuban army, likewise addressed to a citizen of this country. Let me read it:

MY MOST ESTEEMED AND RESPECTED SIR: I am induced to address you these lines in view of the attentions you dispense to the goodness of our cause, showing you the gratefulness of this people, worthy of a better fate, and consequently the independence it desires, for which it faithfully fights, to the great American people, of whom you are the illustrious representative.

I wish to avail of the opportunity offered by the bearer, to offer you my friendship, and with it all I am able to do as chief of the fourth army corps.

It is also an object of this letter, and please take it as the main one, to express through you to that great people my sorrow and that of those forces for the lamentable and painful catastrophe of the Maine.

I remain, with great respect and esteem, your friend and obedient servant,
FRANCISCO CARRILLO.

Mr. President, has anybody seen a letter from any commander of any army corps of the Spanish army expressing such profound regret over the catastrophe that befell our great battle ship in the harbor of Havana? Certainly I have not.

I have also an autographic letter from Gen. Maximo Gomez, dated March 9, 1898. I have had it translated. Here is the original in Spanish, with the signature attached to it [exhibiting]. This was not addressed to me, but to a citizen of the United States. Who can say that these are utterances less patriotic than fall from the lips of citizens of this Republic:

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: It is very agreeable for me to answer your favor of 26th February ultimo, contents of which cause me great pleasure.

Spain's impotence to subdue this revolution either by military force or political action is well evidenced by the development of the events that have been taking place, and our determination and purpose too well proclaim and prove that I should require to demonstrate them here, much less to a person like your good self, who has formed a complete judgment by your own experience of the respective situation of both belligerent forces.

At the stage that things have reached every man understands that Spain's continuance of this war is iniquitous and inhuman, and even a menace to the peace of the world, as a just and noble end is no longer pursued, but to kill and destroy by a sense of vengence and hate.

The great American public is destined by many causes to intervene sooner or later in some way in the termination of the Cuban war, but her mediation may only be fruitful of a final peace if through it Cuba obtains her absolute independence.

This is the opinion and unanimous feeling among the Cuban people, and particularly of its army of liberation, which I have the honor to command.

With the highest esteem, consideration, and friendship, I am, yours, the commander in chief,

M. GOMEZ.

Mr. President, on a former occasion I called the attention of the Senate to the cruel and unjust exactions that the Cuban people are compelled to submit to in the matter of taxation. Here is a statement from high Cuban authority that epitomizes their grievances and explains why they are fighting for freedom and independence:

The Cubans would have been wanting not only in self-respect but even in the instincts of self-preservation if they could have endured such a degrading and destructive régime. Their grievances are of such a nature that no people, no human community capable of valuing its honor and of aspiring to better its condition, could bear them without degrading and condemning itself to utter nullity and annihilation.

Spain denies to the Cubans all effective powers in their own country.

Spain condemns the Cubans to a political inferiority in the land where they are born.

Spain confiscates the product of the Cubans' labor without giving them in return either safety, prosperity, or education.

Spain has shown itself utterly incapable of governing Cuba.

Spain exploits, impoverishes, and demoralizes Cuba.

To maintain by force of arms this monstrous régime, which brings ruin on a country rich by nature and degrades a vigorous and intelligent population, a population filled with noble aspirations, is what Spain calls to defend its honor and preserve the prestige of its social functions as a civilizing power of America.

The Cubans, not in anger but in despair, have appealed to arms in order to defend their rights and to vindicate an eternal principle, a principle without which every community, however robust in appearance, is in danger—the principle of justice. Nobody has the right of oppression. Spain oppresses us. In rebelling against oppression we defend a right. In serving our own cause we serve the cause of mankind.

We have not counted the number of our enemies; we have not measured their strength. We have cast up the account of our grievances; we have weighed the mass of injustice that crushes us, and with uplifted hearts we have risen to seek redress and to uphold our rights. We may find ruin and death a few steps ahead. So be it. We do our duty. If the world is indifferent to our cause, so much the worse for all. A new iniquity shall have been consummated. The principle of human solidarity shall have suffered a defeat. The sum of good existing in the world, and which the world needs to purify its moral atmosphere, shall have been lessened.

The people of Cuba require only liberty and independence to become a factor of prosperity and progress in the community of civilized nations. At present Cuba is a factor of intranquillity, disturbance, and ruin. The fault lies entirely with Spain. Cuba is not the offender; it is the defender of its rights. Let America, let the world, decide where rest justice and right.

How much more time have I, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Two minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will occupy those two minutes in simply making one observation. Are not the men who have fought and suffered such privations, who amid all their sufferings have not been swerved from their purpose by the promise of autonomy, made, as they believe, to be broken as in 1878; who have spurned the bribes of Spain, her favorite weapon, entitled to some recognition?

Are not the people of Cuba, who have carried on this unequal contest for three years; is not the cause for which Gomez has fought, and for which Marti and Maceo fell, and which the God of battles has recognized, fairly entitled to some mention and recognition from the Senate and the Government of the United States?

Mr. President, I shall cheerfully give my vote for the resolution reported by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, believing as I do that a majority of the Senate will be found in favor of a declaration of independence for these brave people who are fighting the same battle that our forefathers fought a hundred years ago.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, war seems inevitable, and it is useless to discuss the question further. Closing the debate to-day indicates that the Senate wants war, and now. We are not willing to wait over Sunday to pass these resolutions. Is there fear that peace may be secured on the Island of Cuba before war can be declared? I wish more time had been given for the discussion of this serious and momentous question. I think we should have had more light on the difficult questions raised and it would have been better for all concerned. Speeches like those made yesterday on both sides would have been helpful and instructive to Senators and the country.

But I bow to the will of the majority in limiting debate and accept the time allotted to me. I desire to devote this time, as far as I can, mainly to a discussion of the question of the recognition of the independence of the Cuban insurgents. Apart from the minority report, I believe the first resolution reported by the majority of the committee, if it means anything, recognizes the independence of the insurgents. The resolution reads:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Leaving out the words "and of right ought to be," the resolution would read: "That the people of the Island of Cuba are free and independent." This is not a fact; it is not true. Now, the next resolution:

It is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish—

If the Cuban Government is independent on the Island of Cuba, it is the only government authorized to act in regard to the war between Cuba and Spain. We might become the ally of the Cuban people; but if Cuba is independent, she is the party authorized to act, and the United States is excluded from making any such demand.

I oppose the recognition of the independence of the insurgents in Cuba for a number of reasons. First, they have not won their independence as other nations seeking to be admitted into the family of nations have won theirs in their struggle for freedom. Second, according to their own constitution the government of the insurgents is only temporary and preparatory in its character, and on the conclusion of hostilities must be succeeded by a "democratic republic." An extract from the constitution of the government of the insurgents is as follows:

We, the representatives of the Cuban people, freely meeting in constituent assembly, convoked by virtue of the mandate contained in the constitution of the 16th of September, 1895, ratify our firm and unshakable resolve of obtaining the absolute and immediate independence of the island, in order to establish in it a democratic republic, and inspiring ourselves in the present necessities of the revolution; we decree the following:

Third. To recognize the independence of Cuba now would be contrary to international law and the American doctrine on the subject for a hundred years, besides being a dangerous precedent.

We will defeat Spain, and, in my judgment, easily and quickly. She can not fight so far from her base, 3,000 miles away. She has no coal in the Western Hemisphere and can not bring her supply from home. Coal is more important to Spain than powder. We know the result now. We can also pay the costs of this war; but, in my opinion, there are wrapped up in this doctrine of the recognition of the independence of the insurgents, if adhered to under present conditions, many wars, that may cost this nation thousands of millions of dollars and may again threaten the disintegration and destruction of this Republic.

Mr. President, Congress should follow the recommendations of the President, but refusing to do so, it should not embarrass him by sending him a resolution for his approval declaring that Cuba is free and independent when he explicitly declares in his recent message that it is not, and makes an argument to show that it is not and should not be recognized. Mr. Quesada, the chargé d'affaires of the insurgent government, as I understand, stated before a committee of the House that unaided it would take twelve years to establish the freedom and independence of Cuba. He is the authorized representative of this insurgent government, and, speaking to a committee of Congress on the subject, his word should be taken as conclusive.

We have also the evidence of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, who has served as our consul-general at Havana, I think, for two or three years. It is his judgment and his advice, as I understand it, to the United States at this juncture not to recognize the independence of the insurgents. To my mind his advice should have great weight. I confess it has had much to do in forming my judgment outside of the precedents and international law.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, in its report on page 7, says:

Upon due consideration of all the relevant facts of the relations of this Government with Spain, including the destruction of the Maine, and of the history of the rebellion, it is the opinion of your committee that the United States ought at once to recognize the independence of the people of Cuba, and also ought to intervene to the end that the war and its unexampled atrocities shall cease, and that such independence shall become a settled political fact at the earliest possible moment.

Right in the face of this finding that independence is not a settled political fact the committee call on us to declare what? That Cuba is free and independent; to declare in the face of the world a fact which is not true. How can we possibly do this? We want to follow the Committee on Foreign Relations. We want to stand by it. We want to stand by the President also, who says it is not a fact, and he is the authorized power under the Constitution to determine the question. We want to be united in this matter, but how can we be? The Congress of the United States is asked by one of its great committees to declare solemnly something to be true that we all agree is not true, and that the insurgents themselves say is not true. How will such a transaction appear to the world? What answer can we make to such inconsistency? There is no foundation for this declaration. We admit there is none. The world knows it. If Cuba is independent, why does Spain occupy one-half of the territory on the island, all the seacoast towns and cities, and maintain this occupation by an army? Why do not other nations near by, almost as near as we are, recognize the independence of Cuba? Why are not Mexico and the South American States agitated over the subject of the independence of Cuba? If the Cuban insurgents are independent, why should not they, as the only authorized power in Cuba, have made this demand on Spain, to withdraw her land or naval forces? Now, as to the demand by the United States, besides ignoring the President, it is not proper in form, is unnecessarily harsh and abrupt, and bad in construction. Who is to execute this demand but the President? If this demand had been left to the Executive, as it should have been, I am sure he would have expressed it in better form and with better taste.

If the second resolution is to pass, it ought to be amended so as to authorize the President to speak to Spain for the Government, as he always does to foreign nations. There has never been any departure from this course. Congress has never spoken to foreign governments. It never can. It has no one to make the communication. The communication must be made by the Executive. He is the proper and only channel.

It seems to me that the joint resolution in the second paragraph studiously ignores the President. The third of course could not ignore him. It had to take him into account, because he is by the Constitution of the United States the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and must lead our forces in war, or execute any direction or order of Congress. In recognizing independence Congress usurps power belonging exclusively to the President. This is his function and can not be taken from him by Congress. Violating the Constitution by taking power from the Executive is worse and more dangerous than war. The report of the committee, so far as I have been able to read and understand it, seem to me to be illogical and contradictory, with some good law cited and some not so good.

Mr. President, up to this hour, although the war in Cuba has been waged three years, there has been no great battle, no conflict with the insurgents that has risen to the dignity of a battle. As I learn, not 200 men have been killed on either side in any given battle. In all movements for independence generally there have been great battles fought on the part of the insurgents before recognition was considered. This is true where there has been a struggle and where independence has not been brought about by the great powers, as in the case of Belgium and Greece.

According to the distinguished Senators who have visited the island and made reports, and especially the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who has stirred this nation in a great speech as no other man rarely has, there are 60,000 Spanish soldiers and 30,000 insurgents. Now he asks us, according to his own testimony, to believe, while there are two Spanish soldiers to one insurgent soldier, and Spain is in possession of all the seacoast cities, that Cuba is free and independent; that this independence should be recognized, and we should go to war to make independence a fact.

But I will say to the Senator that I challenge his statement, if other reputable men, but not distinguished as he, can be believed. I do not think it is possible for the Senator or for other Senators to go through a foreign country, not speaking the language, when there is a state of rebellion and war and gather information sufficiently accurate to guide the Senate and to the extent of going to war.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will he take the evidence of our representatives there—our consuls? It agrees fully in regard to the respective numbers with my statement.

Mr. ELKINS. I would take that ordinarily. I would rather, however, take the statement of the Senator from Vermont a thousand times if I could; but, sir, there is a man from Boston, a reputable gentleman, who has lived on the island for nearly thirty years and who has a half a million dollars invested there, who tells the country the true state of affairs there. He says there are only five or six thousand insurgents in arms, and that 15,000 is the extreme number that can be assembled.

None of the Senators who went there spoke the language, as I am informed; and I submit, on so short a stay, they could have been imposed upon in many cases by insurgent sympathizers. It is impossible to learn all about an island in a state of war and about the insurgents in so short a time. I credit these Senators with sincerity, and know and feel that they are incapable of intentionally misleading anybody on any subject. They are high-minded and honorable men.

Mr. Atkins—and I state his name—says that Cubitas, where the Cuban capital and the secretaries of state, for war, navy, and the treasury are located, as stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], where they hold congress and where the government is located, is a deserted sugar mill. But this is not important if there is a government. I am not disputing these facts for the purpose of belittling the Cuban struggle for freedom, but I am stating them to see whether they and all others when assembled make a case that authorizes recognition. In response to the suggestion made to me by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], I will say that I think we have $17,000,000 of claims against the Spanish Government.

Mr. MASON. Has not Mr. Atkins some claim?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know whether he has or not. Likely he has. No American could live there ten or fifteen years without having claims against the Spanish Government, for there is want of protection to property on the island.

Mr. MASON. Does he not pay for protection?

Mr. ELKINS. He says that he defends his property against the insurgents with his own guard, and he has paid the insurgents first and last $90,000 for protection. That is the way to get protection there.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are not Spanish guards protecting his estate?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, as I understand; helping. I am not defending the Spanish troops, nor am I attacking the insurgents; both are responsible for much of the disorder that goes on in the island. I am trying to get at the truth.

RECOGNITION NOT AUTHORIZED UNDER INTERNATIONAL LAW.

According to international law and precedents on the subject, from the standpoint of success on the part of the insurgents, battles fought, territory occupied, government established, courts held, jurisdiction exercised, having a capital and congress, the insurgents are not entitled to recognition. Under the American doctrine, always adhered to in our history, there is no warrant for recognizing the independence of Cuba.

In our civil war with the South the Confederates held possession of one-third of the Republic. The Confederate States exercised authority and jurisdiction over this large extent of territory. They had a capital that was known all over the world, a congress that held regular sessions, an organized government that issued money, carried on trade and commerce, had ships, had a navy, and armies commanded by great generals, and fought battles equal to any the world has ever seen. I know something about those armies. They were too much in evidence. They were everywhere in our front; we did not have to look far to find them. There was no dispute about the existence of that government. Notwithstanding all these facts and a struggle for independence such as no people in history ever made, the United States constantly resisted for four years any intervention or recognition of the Confederacy by Europe. When a Union soldier laid down at night under the stars, worn, and fatigued, he wondered, "Will I wake up in the morning and read about the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by Europe?" He felt that would end the struggle against the Union. But it never came, and the Union was saved.

Why depart from this doctrine now? It is the American doctrine, and has been adhered to by our Government for a century. It saved the Union during the civil war. If the doctrine of recognition now demanded had obtained in our civil war we would have had two governments in the United States to-day. The struggle of the Cubans presents no such example and no such claim as the South had for recognition. Take the case of the United States when we won our independence. France was our ally. She hated England. That is one reason why she helped us. We desired recognition by the nations of the world, but did not get it until Burgoyne and Cornwallis had surrendered and every British soldier on our soil was a prisoner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. ELKINS. I had part of the time that belonged to the four-hour class. I am with that class, I am told.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. I am delighted with the argument of the Senator from West Virginia, and I yield.

Mr. ELKINS. I merely want ten minutes. I had half the time, I understood, or I would have hastened through.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted ten minutes very much, but I did not get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that unless unanimous consent is given he can not extend the time of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. I have proceeded under a mistake, entirely.

Mr. GRAY. I understand the unanimous-consent agreement to be that those who represented that view of the question were entitled to four hours.

Mr. ELKINS. I proceeded on that theory, and my colleague the Senator from Maryland said I might have ten or fifteen minutes of his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I certainly understood when the agreement was reached that the Senator from West Virginia would have more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not present when the unanimous-consent agreement was made last evening, but of course I am bound by it. I made a request to-day of the Presiding Officer that I might transfer my fifteen minutes to the Senator from Texas, who desired more than fifteen minutes, and I very much desired to do so. I was informed that such transfer of time could not be made. Now, if the Senator from West Virginia is entitled under the agreement to more than fifteen minutes, I certainly shall not find any fault.

Mr. FORAKER. Whether the Senator from West Virginia is strictly entitled to it or not, I hope unanimous consent may be given that he may have ten minutes in addition.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the Senator from West Virginia, if he attaches himself to the three Senators named, ought not to take it as a matter of unanimous consent, but that he is entitled to it——

Mr. ELKINS. I thought so.

Mr. FAULKNER. Because the four hours have not been exhausted.

Mr. BATE. I was to follow the Senator from West Virginia, and I applied to the Chair, and he told me that the Senator from West Virginia was within the four hours and could speak as long as he chose, so that he did not absorb more than four hours.

Mr. STEWART. Let the unanimous-consent agreement be reported, so that we may understand it.

Mr. BATE. He ought to be allowed to speak without any consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the agreement asked for by the Senator from Arkansas was that four hours should be granted to the Senators who held views in opposition to all the resolutions. No names were given except by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], who said:

I presume this will except the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and myself, and thirty minutes given to the Senator from Connecticut.

The Chair does not feel authorized, although he would be delighted to do it, to extend that privilege beyond the Senators named in the agreement without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is also informed that by an agreement between the Senators themselves the Senator from West Virginia was allowed thirty minutes. There are forty minutes from the four hours' time still remaining unconsumed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will be permitted to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the circumstances, how many minutes does the Senator from West Virginia desire? He is entitled to thirty minutes.

Mr. ELKINS. I shall not occupy so long a time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that an arrangement will be made so that the time will be divided between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I am not on that side. I do not come in that category.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to extending the time of the Senator from West Virginia for thirty minutes?

Mr. MILLS and others. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. ELKINS. Now, Mr. President, how much time have I? I do not propose to be caught again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has thirty minutes.

Mr. ELKINS. Not thirty minutes from now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; until a quarter past 6 o'clock.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, in the case of the Republic of Texas, recognition was delayed ten years after it became an independent Republic, and when the United States recognized its independence there was not a Mexican soldier on its soil. Mexico did not get her independence until the Spanish forces were expelled from that territory. The Argentine Republic, or Buenos Ayres, fought and resisted Spanish power twenty-one years, and recognition did not come until fourteen years after the Spaniards had been expelled from that country. See how guarded in all these cases in this hemisphere or on this continent the United States and Europe have been in respect to the recognition of independence, and the admitting of a new state into the family of nations. It is an important transaction, and one in which the whole world has an interest. These are the American precedents that should guide and govern us. Other cases can be cited. Above all, we should heed the doctrine that we so zealously proclaimed and adhered to during our civil war, and have adhered to since we have been a nation.

General Grant, when President, in his message to Congress in December, 1875, stated the case clearly. I had the honor at that time of serving in the House with a number of members who are now Senators on this floor and remember what then transpired. The Cubans had struggled for seven years against Spanish authority on the Island of Cuba. Apart from the death by starvation in the present struggle, the facts are about the same as in the war that was waged in 1875. General Grant opposed both recognition of independence and belligerency, on the ground that the Cuban insurgents were not entitled to either. He said the struggle did not rise to the dignity of war. His sympathies were with the Cuban insurgents as ours are to-day, and he knew the United States had suffered loss of commerce and trade on the islands; but with all these things before him he could not reach the conclusion that the Cubans were entitled to belligerent rights or had won their independence.

I read the following extracts from President Grant's annual message dated December 7, 1875:

The past year has furnished no evidence of an approaching termination of the ruinous conflict which has been raging for seven years in the neighboring island of Cuba. The same disregard of the laws of civilized warfare and of the just demands of humanity which has heretofore called forth expressions of condemnation from the nations of Christendom has continued to blacken the sad scene.

Desolation, ruin, and pillage are pervading the rich fields of one of the most fertile and productive regions of the earth, and the incendiaries' torch, firing plantations and valuable factories and building, is the agent marking the alternate advance or retreat of contending parties.

I have hoped that Spain would be enabled to establish peace in her colony, to afford security to the property and the interests of our citizens, and allow legitimate scope to our trade and commerce and the natural products of the island. Because of this hope, and from an extreme reluctance to interfere in the most remote manner in the affairs of another and a friendly nation, especially of one whose sympathy and friendship in the struggling infancy of our own existence must ever be remembered with gratitude, I have patiently and anxiously waited the progress of events.

Our own civil conflict is too recent for us not to consider the difficulties which surround a government distracted by a dynastic rebellion at home at the same time that it has to cope with a separate insurrection in a distant colony. But whatever causes may have produced the situation which so grievously affects our interests, it exists with all its attendant evils operating directly upon this country and its people. Thus far all the efforts of Spain have proved abortive and time has marked no improvement in the situation. The armed bands of either side now occupy nearly the same ground as in the past, with the difference from time to time of more lives sacrificed, more property destroyed, and wider extents of fertile and productive fields and more and more of valuable property constantly, wantonly sacrificed to the incendiary's torch.

In contests of this nature, where a considerable body of people who have attempted to free themselves of the control of the superior government have reached such point in occupation of territory, in power, and in general organization as to constitute in fact a body politic, having a government in substance as well as in name, possessed of the elements of stability, and equipped with the machinery for the administration of internal policy and the execution of its laws, prepared and able to administer justice at home as well as in its dealings with other powers, it is within the province of those other powers to recognize its existence as a new and independent nation. In such cases other nations simply deal with an actually existing condition of things, and recognizes as one of the powers of the earth that body politic which, possessing the necessary elements, has in fact become a new power. In a word, the creation of a new state is a fact.

To establish the condition of things essential to the recognition of this fact there must be a people occupying a known territory, united under some known and defined form of government, acknowledged by those subject thereto, in which the functions of government are administered by usual methods, competent to mete out justice to citizens and strangers, to afford remedies for public and for private wrongs, and able to assume the correlative international obligations, and capable of performing the corresponding international duties resulting from its acquisition of the rights of sovereignty. A power should exist complete in its organization, ready to take and able to maintain its place among the nations of the earth.

While conscious that the insurrection in Cuba has shown a strength and endurance which made it at least doubtful whether it be in the power of Spain to subdue it, it seems unquestionable that no such civil organization exists which may be recognized as an independent government capable of performing its international obligations and entitled to be treated as one of the powers of the earth.

A recognition under such circumstances would be inconsistent with the facts, and would compel the power granting it soon to support by force the government to which it had really given its only claim of existence. In my judgment, the United States should adhere to the policy and the principles which have heretofore been its sure and safe guides in like contests between revolted colonies and their mother country, and, acting only upon the clearest evidence, should avoid any possibility of suspicion or of imputation.

Belligerence, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies and their occasional conflicts do not constitute war in the sense referred to. Applying to the existing condition of affairs in Cuba the tests recognized by publicists and writers on international law, and which have been observed by nations of dignity, honesty, and power, when free from sensitive or selfish and unworthy motives, I fail to find in the insurrection the existence of such a substantial political organization, real, palpable, and manifest to the world, having the forms and capable of the ordinary functions of government toward its own people and to other states, with courts for the administration of justice, with a local habitation, possessing such organization of force, such material, such occupation of territory, as to take the contest out of the category of a mere rebellious insurrection or occasional skirmishes and place it on the terrible footing of war, to which a recognition of belligerency would aim to elevate it.

The contest, moreover, is solely on land. The insurrection has not possessed itself of a single seaport whence it may send forth its flag, nor has it any means of communication with foreign powers except through the military lines of its adversaries. No apprehension of any of those sudden and difficult complications which a war upon the ocean is apt to precipitate upon the vessels, both commercial and national, and upon the consular officers of other powers, calls for the definition of their relations to the parties to the contest. Considered as a question of expediency, I regard the accordance of belligerent rights still to be as unwise and premature, as I regard it to be at present indefensible as a measure of right.

As I have stated, I was a member of the House when this message was sent to Congress. There was great excitement. We were not in the presence of war then, but there was intense interest and all the innuendoes, insinuations, and hints of sinister influences were afloat in the air, as now. Cuban sympathizers went so far as to declare that General Grant had lost his courage, that he was under the influence of New York, that the business men of the country had too much to do with the Administration, that he was ruled by his Secretary of State, something like the charges now made against the President and those who sustain him. But in the case of General Grant what has come to pass? The proudest monument ever raised to perpetuate the memory of any American stands over the grave of this great general, able and pure President; while all the people love and cherish his memory more and more as the years go by, his calumniators and vilifiers have passed into merited oblivion. The present case is nearly parallel, and I know that William McKinley will survive these attacks and the mad passion that pursues him as General Grant survived them. He can afford to wait. Time and posterity will vindicate his course and policy on the Cuban question.

There is no clear or certain rule laid down in international law that authorizes the recognition of Cuban independence. I know what Hall, quoted by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says, but the Cuban insurgents do not even come within this rule.

Lawrence, in his Principles of International Law, page 87, states:

The community thus recognized must, of course, possess a fixed territory within which an organized government rules in civilized fashion, commanding the obedience of its citizens and speaking with authority on their behalf in its dealings with other states. The act of recognition is a normal act, quite compatible with the maintenance of peaceful intercourse with the mother country, if it is not performed till the contest is either actually or virtually over in favor of the new community.

Woolsey, in his last edition on International Law, states, page 41:

It is almost needless to say that this rule can not have its application as long as there is evident doubt whether a government is a fact. If the question is still one of armed strife, as between a colony and a mother country, or between a state and a revolted portion of it, to take the part of the colony or of the revolted territory by recognition is an injury and may be a ground of war; but every nation must decide for itself whether an independent state be really established, and needs not to wait until the party opposing the revolutionary effort has accepted the new order of things. It is a safe rule in contests involving the violent separation of a state into parts that when the mother country, in the case of a colony, or the leading portion of a state, in the case of disruption, gives up active efforts to restore the old order of things by war other states may regard the revolution as perfected and a new state as having come into the world.

Hall's International Law, page 38, reads as follows:

When a sovereign State, from exhaustion or any other cause, has virtually and substantially abandoned the struggle for supremacy, it has no right to complain if a foreign State treat the independence of its former subjects as de facto established. When, on the other hand, the contest is not absolutely or permanently decided, a recognition of the inchoate independence of the insurgents by a foreign State is a hostile act towards the sovereign State, which the latter is entitled to resent as a breach of neutrality and friendship. It is to the facts of the case that foreign nations must look. The question with them ought to be, Is there a bona fide contest going on? If it has virtually ceased, the recognition of the insurgents is then at their discretion. It was upon this principle that England and the other powers acted in recognizing the independence of the South American Republics.

The action of some of the European powers toward Greece in 1827, and Belgium in 1830, was not a simple recognition of independence and does not come within the preceding rule. In both cases the powers intervened to settle the disputes, and without this assistance the insurgents would not have succeeded. In the case of Greece, the intervention was based on the ground of humanity and for the suppression of piracy and anarchy. In that of Belgium, the Powers, by their own act at the treaty of Vienna, had united that country to Holland; but finding the union incompatible, they intervened to dissolve it.

These citations from standard works lay down the rule on the subject of recognizing the independence of a state, and according to them the Cuban insurgents have no just and valid claims to be recognized.

I agree that the cruelties, horrors, inhumanities, and the starvation on the island, should stop, and that now is the time to settle the Cuban problem once and for all. President McKinley says they must be stopped, and now. The question arises, however, what is the best way to accomplish this. I have always said by peace, if possible but by war if necessary. Is the recognition of Cuban independence, and going to war to make this independence a fact, the best way to relieve the horrors of the war and starvation going on on the island of Cuba? Would war between Spain and the United States be the best means of relieving these starving people? War between the United States and Spain would, I fear, result in the continued starvation and death of the reconcentrados, numbering, it is said, 150,000, because in the event of war Spain could not relieve them. It has not the means at hand; and the United States, I fear, would not be able to do so. Before relief could reach these people the United States would have to take Cuba and then see that food and supplies reach them in ships guarded by our Navy. All this will take time; and according to the best estimates, these people can not live unless means are provided within ten days to relieve them of starvation.

If we have to go to war with Spain as we are, let us not put it on the ground of recognizing the independence of Cuba and fighting to make it a fact, but on the ground of our actual differences with Spain, growing out of our relations during the past thirty years with Cuba, the misgovernment of the island, or the want of government, the loss of property of American citizens, the burden of preserving neutrality between Spain and Cuba during the years that they have been at war, the starvation on the island, inability of Spain for a long number of years to insure protection to life and property, culminating in the Maine disaster; and after she refuses to comply with our demands, then declare war explicitly on these grounds.

It is clear that Cuba, according to the rules that govern such cases, has not won her independence, and the recognition of independence would not only be setting a bad precedent, but it would weaken our case at home and before the world. But this is not all. The recognition of the independence of Cuba would prevent at the conclusion of the war the United States taking and holding it in part payment of the expenses of the war. While I have always opposed annexation, yet in the event of the United States going to war she will not only take Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, but all the territory and property of Spain in the Western Hemisphere, and, having taken this territory in war, we should hold it as a war indemnity and dispose of it as we please, because Spain is a bankrupt nation and this is the only way we can get indemnity.

If we recognize the independence of the insurgents and that they have established a government on the island and have one at the close of the war, what will be the situation? The United States will have driven Spain from Cuba, and then Cuba can invite the United States to leave the island in the hands and control of the government the United States has recognized. It will claim it is an independent nation among the nations of the earth, and the United States could take no part in making a stable government, preserving peace or exercising any jurisdiction on the island. Recognizing the independence of Cuba would not help us in case of our going to war against Spain.

I am clearly of opinion that if we have to go to war with Spain we should do so on grounds other than to secure the independence of Cuba. If we recognize the independence of Cuba and go to war to make it a fact, then we will have no claim on the Cuban Government to pay part of the expenses of the war. If we give Cuba to the insurgents now, as proposed, by recognizing independence, then at the conclusion of the war we will have no claim on the island or the insurgents to pay part of our war debt; whereas if we delay recognition we can decide, with all the facts before us, what is better to do and what best suits our interests. To my mind this is the safest and wisest course to pursue. If Cuba comes to us as the result of war on grounds I have stated, then all the debts and bonds of Spain secured by the revenues of Cuba will be extinguished and no obligations will rest upon the United States in case she takes Cuba or the insurgents in case of independence, except those the Cuban Government may wish to recognize.

Mr. President, in this debate the glories and advantages of war have been commended as being in the interest and to the advantage of nations. While not opposing war with Spain, I must say this is new and strange talk in the Senate of the United States in the closing decade of the nineteenth century. We have been taught for hundreds of years that war is a calamity at best. It brings with it devastation, destruction, want, woe, and tears. It brings mourning and sorrow into once happy homes, and leaves in its wake widows and orphans. It increases the pension list, the national debt, and taxation. Go ask the South if war is a good thing; ask Greece; ask the Armenians. Ask the victors and vanquished in every war. Read of the desolation and want that followed the Thirty Years' war, the Seven Years' war, and the Napoleonic wars. Poetry and painting have been invoked in all ages to portray the horrors, desolation, and destruction of war.

I admired the speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. I was held spellbound at his apostrophe to force and blood; but let me say to the distinguished Senator and orator who stirred the country so deeply by his splendid effort that the "Still, small voice" has wrought more than all the force and all the wars of the world.

War strikes down dynasties, changes sovereignty and boundaries of states, but thought and high ideas move peoples and influence the world. War points toward barbarism and savagery; peace to progress and a better civilization. Emerson says:

The soul of God is poured into the world through the thoughts of men. The world stands on ideas, and the source of all elements is moral force.

The United States has for twenty-five years, from Grant to McKinley, arraigned Spain for the cruelties, misdoings, and horrors which she has permitted and committed on the Island of Cuba. But no President until the present Chief Executive has said definitely and positively that war shall cease and peace reign on the Island of Cuba. During this period our Presidents have declared that there might arise an occasion when the United States should intervene to bring war to an end; but for the first time in thirty years of the agitation of the Cuban question the present Chief Executive has declared formally in a message that this war must stop, and Congress agrees with him.

But, Mr. President, he not only declares "this war must stop," but he says, "I want Congress to authorize me to use the Army and the Navy to stop it." This is reasonable. It might bring peace with honor and avert war. Why not comply with his request? Is it unfair? Is it unjust? Is it wrong? Let him send this ultimatum to Spain coupled with an expression of the feeling of the American people about the Maine disaster. Then, if it is refused, let Congress declare war. That would be the orderly, dignified way to proceed.

Now, Mr. President, what is the position of the President in these times of trouble that have fallen upon him? With the fortunes, destinies, honor, and flag of the great Republic in his keeping in this trying ordeal he has borne himself with great poise. This burden has rested upon him for months, and he has spoken. After assembling all the facts, he has reached a conclusion and embodied it in his message. I sustain his position with all my heart. In his message, on page 10, he says:

Nor from the standpoint of expediency do I think it would be wise or prudent for this Government to recognize, at the present time, the independence of the so-called Cuban Republic. Such recognition is not necessary in order to enable the United States to intervene and pacify the island. To commit this country now to the recognition of any particular government in Cuba might subject us to embarrassing conditions of international obligation toward the organization so recognized.

On page 13, he further declares:

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

His position, in brief, is that the war must stop in the Island of Cuba and a government set up stable in form, one that can perform its international obligations. This means an independent government. It means a free government. It means a republican government, and that means the freedom of Cuba. If we had trusted the President, in my judgment, he would have accomplished all these things through peace, with honor to the country, and have averted war. I think we should have left the case in his hands. The most ardent Cuban sympathizers would have had the independence of Cuba in due season and in a proper way.

On so momentous a question we should go to the world united, not divided in Congress and opposed to the President. We can not afford to be divided. On the House resolution, for which I will vote, we would have a united Congress, all parties and the President together. What has the President done to forfeit our confidence? Why should he be attacked in the press and on this floor? In this, however, he is only suffering what has fallen to the lot of the most illustrious names in our history. Washington was attacked, Lincoln was attacked, Grant was abused, and McKinley can not hope to escape. Lincoln's emancipation proclamation was asked and demanded for two years, but it did not come a day too early nor a day too late. If we had left this case in the hands of the President, in my opinion Cuba would have gotten her independence not one day too late, and without war.

I have not time to reply to the speech of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, but it shows what a warm heart and heated imagination will do when fired by impassioned zeal in a cause that has him for an advocate. He has given the insurgents a government as good as any in the world, and hardly surpassed by Moore's Utopia. His legal proposition that war and change of sovereignty in the island would not extinguish all Spanish bonds, whether secured by the revenues of Cuba or not, is indefensible. All bonds and obligations would be burnt out in the hot flame of war. If the United States should take Cuba by war no Spanish collector would ever supervise the collection of revenues on the island, and all claims by Spain for the payment of such bonds would be resisted.

When the Senator's speech was being delivered a friend remarked, "That speech will make him President." I said, "Not now; we need him in the Senate." But what becomes of the claims of other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations? What becomes of the claims of my conservative, thoughtful, and judicial-minded friend from Illinois [Mr. MASON]? He has led the fight for Cuba and urged war from the beginning. But let me remind Senators, as I read history, the heroes of wars are made in the field and not in the Senate and House. I have no idea that a thought of the Presidency was in the mind of the Senator from Ohio. I want to acquit him of anything of the kind.

Now, Mr. President, one word about the freedom of Cuba. I have always desired the independence of the Cuban people. I so stated in the Senate a year ago, and I have believed that in the end they would obtain it, but I have opposed the United States going to war to establish this independence. Better a bold declaration of war on account of the Maine disaster and other differences with Spain than the entangling resolutions before the Senate. The Maine and thirty years of misrule on the Island of Cuba furnish a clean-cut case. It is the Maine that stirs the American people.

Under the resolutions difficult questions are raised as to what debts will be assumed in case of war, what are the actual conditions on the Island of Cuba, and many others. But above and beyond all this these resolutions commit us to recognizing the independence of Cuba at this time. Contrary to all precedent and the American doctrine, they make Congress declare that Cuba is free and independent when it is not true and all admit it is not. They go further and make Congress usurp the legislative functions and prerogatives of the Chief Executive in the matter of recognition of independence—a violation of the Constitution which we are sworn to obey. Better war, yes, many wars, than this, because when the violation of the Constitution begins the end of the Republic is near at hand.

Now, that we are about to have war, I am willing that the Senators from Ohio, Illinois, and Minnesota and other States may have the credit and responsibility of the agitation of the Cuban question against the President's plan, but from the moment war is declared it becomes the war of the American people, under the American flag, and I favor making it swift, decisive, and destructive, taking Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, then on to Cadiz and Barcelona with our squadrons and on our banners inscribed the legend, "Remember the Maine." I desire the war to be a memorable and lasting example to the world of the power of the Great Republic on sea and land.

Mr. President, the message of the President may be disregarded and ignored by Congress. He may be abused and misrepresented in the press and on the floor of the Senate. But this can not take from him the affection, loyalty, and confidence of his countrymen. The message will go down the centuries as a living force and power. It will stand as the flower and fruit of the highest and broadest statesmanship, and be a mighty influence to direct future peoples and governments toward the haven of peace with honor, and, failing that, the making of war in the interest of humanity and liberty. President McKinley's place in history is made; it is secure beyond the reach of abuse and calumny. He will be remembered as a great American soldier, statesman, and President. He is enrolled among the list of those the country can not forget.

Mr. President, this is a time of serious concern—a supreme moment in the life and affairs of this nation. We are making history rapidly, but are we making it wisely? We are in danger not from foreign foes. These we can conquer. We are in danger from ourselves, from passion, from teaching a lesson, establishing a precedent, that may be used some day against us, and doing an act that will not have the approval of the national conscience nor the sanction of the civilized world. A great Republic can not afford to make such a record. Conscious of our great strength, we should be patient, temperate, just, and fair in all our dealings with the peoples and nations of the world. Varying the words of the rising poet, we should say, in the trials through which we are passing:

God of our fathers, guide us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to attempt to make a speech, because I have occupied nearly an hour heretofore in giving the views that I entertain upon this subject. I simply ask a few minutes of the time of the Senate in order that I may explain the vote that I shall soon be called upon to cast.

I am one of those Senators, I believe I can truthfully say, who have been conservative and exceedingly anxious to see this trouble settled without a war. I have waited patiently and I have been anxious to see it adjusted without our going to war, for the people of the South know what war means. I believe to-day that a majority of the people of my State are opposed to war if it could honorably be avoided. But standing here, in part representing the State of Georgia, I have a duty to perform. I realize now that the adoption of either of these resolutions necessarily means war. There are three resolutions pending here, and I believe it to be my duty to vote for the one that in my judgment is direct and positive and that will meet the issue and use the most effective means to accomplish the desired result.

For one, Mr. President, I say that the President himself deserves credit for endeavoring to adjust this matter without war, if possible. I was anxious to give him my support, to see him adjust it without war. I do not agree with him, however, in the message that he has sent to us. It is not essential that I should say why I do not. I simply desire to read the three pending resolutions and give briefly the reasons that induce me to vote in favor of the minority report.

I want to say, Mr. President, that the President of the United States in his message has said that the war existing between Spain and Cuba must stop. The House of Representatives has said that the war must stop. Every Senator upon the floor of the Senate says the war must stop. The great heart of the American people says that the war must stop. Then, if the war must stop, it has been my observation that when a crisis comes, and you can not meet the crisis any other way than by a positive and effective remedy, it is our duty to use the one that will be the most effective and end the war between Spain and the Cuban people, and give to the people of Cuba a free government, one that will enable them to govern themselves.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read the first resolution which came from the House:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba, to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba—

Now, mark you, the President is directed to intervene and stop the war—and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

Now, my objection to the House resolution is simply this: It authorizes and empowers the President, in his discretion, to use the Army and Navy of the United States for the purpose of ending the war. In other words, it says that the President can act as he sees fit and proper; that he can have war or he can stop it if he wants to, by using the Navy and Army, or he can let it alone. In my judgment that power ought not to be delegated to the President, and I shall vote against that resolution and could not give it my support.

There is another resolution pending before us—the majority resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have before me the resolution from the Committee on Foreign Relations—that is, a majority of that committee. That resolution, or the part of it which I wish to read, is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

That is the resolution of the majority of the committee. When the resolution of the minority is adopted, that sentence will be completed as follows:

That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

In my judgment that is the most effective remedy that has been presented to the Senate. We are going to war with Spain. The circumstances and facts are such that the President of the nation has said we must have war; that the war there must stop. Now, what did he say? In his message he says:

The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.

The President has said that the war must stop. Then how ought we to stop it? In my judgment, the way to stop it is to resort to the means that will be most effective in driving the Spanish soldiers from Cuban soil. I say to-day that we need the assistance of the Cubans in this contest. They have fought for three years, and if we are determined to have war and to meet the crisis, in my judgment the only way to do it is to use every resource that we possibly can to meet the emergency.

I have been troubled in regard to the condition of affairs in Cuba on one point, and that was the government existing in Cuba. If an intelligent man will sit down and read the constitution framed by the Cuban insurgents and now in operation in Cuba, he will necessarily come to the conclusion that the hand of a statesman drafted that instrument. Mr. President, it shows that it represents an intelligent and thoughtful constituency. I have been fully satisfied from reading the document that they are capable of forming a government and that it is our duty to recognize them, and if we are going to have war, to cooperate with them in this struggle.

I ask permission to have inserted as a part of my remarks the constitution of the provisional government of Cuba. It commences on page 31 of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations and embraces pages 31, 32, 33, 34, and part of page 35.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Georgia does not ask to have it read?

Mr. CLAY. I do not ask to have it read; I simply ask that it be inserted as a part of my remarks. [See Appendix.]

One word more and I am done. I simply say that in casting my vote in favor of the minority report I believe that an emergency has arisen that no longer can be met by vacillation or equivocation. I believe that a crisis is on us, and it will require brave as well as zealous, courageous action to meet it, and we ought to do it, and do it at once, and not delay any longer. If we are determined to have war, let us use the most effective means to accomplish our purposes.

APPENDIX.

CONSTITUTION OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF CUBA.

The revolution for the independence and creation in Cuba of a democratic republic in its new period of war, initiated on February 24 last, solemnly declares the separation of Cuba from the Spanish monarchy, and its constitution as a free and independent state, with its own Government and supreme authority, under the name of the Republic of Cuba, and confirms its existence among the political divisions of the world.

The elected representatives of the revolution, in convention assembled, acting in its name and by the delegation which for that purpose has been conferred upon them by the Cubans in arms, and previously declaring before the country the purity of their thoughts, their freedom from violence, anger, or prejudice, and inspired only by the desire of interpreting the popular voice in favor of Cuba, have now formed a compact between Cuba and the world, pledging their honor for the fulfillment of said compact in the following articles of the constitution:

ARTICLE I. The supreme powers of the republic shall be vested in a government council composed of a president, vice-president, and four secretaries of state, for the dispatch of the business of war, of the interior, of foreign affairs, and of the treasury.

ART. II. Every secretary shall have a subsecretary of state, in order to supply any vacancies.

ART. III. The government council shall have the following powers:

1. To dictate all measures relative to the civil and political life of the revolution.

2. To impose and collect taxes, to contract public loans, to issue paper money, to invest the funds collected in the island, from whatever source, and also those which may be raised abroad by loan.

3. To arm vessels, to raise and maintain troops, to declare reprisals with respect to the enemy, and to ratify treaties.

4. To grant authority, when it is deemed convenient, to order the trial by the judicial power of the president or other members of the council, if he be accused.

5. To decide all matters, of whatsoever description, which may be brought before them by any citizen, except those judicial in character.

6. To approve the law of military organization and the ordinances of the army, which may be proposed by the general in chief.

7. To grant military commissions from that of colonel upward, previously hearing and considering the reports of the immediate superior officer and of the general in chief, and to designate the appointment of the latter and of the lieutenant-general in case of the vacancy of either.

8. To order the election of four representatives for each army corps whenever in conformity with this constitution it may be necessary to convene an assembly.

ART. IV. The Government council shall intervene in the direction of military operations only when in their judgment it shall be absolutely necessary to do so to realize high political ends.

ART. V. As a requisite for the validity of the decrees of the council, at least two-thirds of the members of the same must have taken part in the deliberations of the council, and the decrees must have been voted by the majority of those present.

ART. VI. The office of councilor is incompatible with any other of the republic, and requires the age of 25 years.

ART. VII. The executive power is vested in the president, and, in case of disability, in the vice-president.

ART. VIII. The resolutions of the government council shall be sanctioned and promulgated by the president, who shall take all necessary steps for their execution within ten days.

ART. IX. The president may enter into treaties with the ratification of the government council.

ART. X. The president shall receive all diplomatic representatives and issue the respective commissions to the public functionaries.

ART. XI. The treaty of peace with Spain, which must necessarily have for its basis the absolute independence of the Island of Cuba, must be ratified by the government council and by an assembly of representatives convened expressly for this purpose.

ART. XII. The vice-president shall substitute the president in the case of a vacancy.

ART. XIII. In case of the vacancy in the offices of both president and vice-president on account of resignation, deposition, or death of both, or from any other cause, an assembly of representatives for the election to the vacant offices shall be convened, the senior secretaries in the meanwhile occupying the positions.

ART. XIV. The secretaries shall have voice and vote in the deliberations of resolutions of whatever nature.

ART. XV. The secretaries shall have the right to appoint all the employees of their respective offices.

ART. XVI. The subsecretaries in cases of vacancy shall substitute the secretaries of state and shall then have voice and vote in the deliberations.

ART. XVII. All the armed forces of the republic and the direction of the military operations shall be under the control of the general in chief, who shall have under his orders as second in command a lieutenant-general, who will substitute him in case of vacancy.

ART. XVIII. All public functionaries of whatever class shall aid one another in the execution of the resolutions of the government council.

ART. XIX. All Cubans are bound to serve the revolution with their persons and interests, each one according to his ability.

ART. XX. The plantations and property of whatever description belonging to foreigners are subject to the payment of taxes for the revolution while their respective governments do not recognize the rights of belligerency of Cuba.

ART. XXI. All debts and obligations contracted since the beginning of the present period of war until the promulgation of this constitution by the chiefs of the army corps, for the benefit of the revolution, shall be valid as well as those which henceforth the government council may contract.

ART. XXII. A government council may depose any of its members for cause justifiable in the judgment of two-thirds of the councilors, and shall report to the first assembly convening.

ART. XXIII. The judicial power shall act with entire independence of all the others. Its organization and regulation will be provided for by the government council.

ART. XXIV. The present constitution shall be in force in Cuba for two years from the date of its promulgation, unless the war for independence shall terminate before. After the expiration of the two years an assembly of representatives shall be convened which may modify it, and will proceed to the election of a new government council, and which will pass upon the last council. So it has been agreed upon and resolved in the name of the Republic by the constituent assembly in Jimaguayu on the 18th day of September, 1895, and in witness thereof we, the representatives delegated by the Cuban people in arms, signed the present instrument. Salvador Cisneros, president; Rafael Manduley, vice-president; Pedro Pinan de Villegas, Lope Recio, Fermin Valdes Dominguez, Francisco Diaz Silveira, Dr. Santiago Garcia, Rafael Perez, F. Lopez Leyva, Enrique Cespedes, Marcos Padilla, Raimundo Sanchez, J. D. Castillo, Mariano Sanchez, Pedro Aguilera, Rafael M. Pontuondo, Orencio Nodarse, José Clemente Vivanco, Enrique Loynaz Del Castillo, Severo Pina.

ELECTION OF GOVERNMENT.

The constituent assembly met again on the 18th of the said month and year, all the said representatives being present. They proceeded to the election of members who are to occupy the offices of the Government council, the general in chief of the army of liberation, the lieutenant-general, and the diplomatic agent abroad. The secret voting commenced, each representative depositing his ballot in the urn placed on the chairman's table, after which the count was proceeded with, the following being the result:

President: Salvador Cisneros, 12; Bartolome Maso, 8.

Vice-president: Bartolome Maso, 12; Salvador Cisneros, 8.

Secretary of war: Carlos Roloff, 18; Lope Recio Loinaz, 1; Rafael Manduley, 1.

Secretary of the treasury: Severo Pina, 19; Rafael Manduley, 1.

Secretary of the interior: Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares, 19; Carlos Dubois, 1.

Secretary of the foreign relations: Rafael Portuondo, 18; Armando Menocal, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of war: Mario Menocal, 18; Francisco Diaz Silveira, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of the treasury: Dr. Joaquin Castillo, 7; Francisco Diaz Silveira, 5; José C. Vivanco, 3; Armando Menocal, 3; Carlos Dubois, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of the interior: Carlos Dubois, 13; Orencio Nodarse, 5; Armando Menocal, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of foreign relations: Fermin Valdes Dominguez, 18; Rafael Manduley, 1; blank, 1.

Therefore, the following were elected by a majority of votes:

President, Salvador Cisneros; vice-president, Bartolome Maso; secretary of war, Carlos Roloff; secretary of the treasury, Severo Pina; secretary of the interior, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares; secretary of foreign relations, Rafael M. Portuondo; subsecretary of war, Mario Menocal; subsecretary of the treasury, Dr. Joaquin Castillo; subsecretary of the interior, Carlos Dubois; subsecretary of foreign relations, Dr. Fermin Valdes Dominguez.

The vice-president of the assembly immediately installed the president in the office of the government council that had been conferred upon him; the latter in turn installed those of the other members elected who were present, all entering on the full exercise of their functions after previously taking the oath.

On proceeding to the election of those who were to occupy the positions of general in chief of the army, lieutenant-general, and diplomatic agent abroad, the following citizens were unanimously elected by the assembly for the respective places: Major-General Maximo Gomez, Major-General Antonio Maceo, and Citizen Tomas Estrada Palma—all these appointments being recognized from that moment.

LAWS FOR THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE REPUBLIC.

CHAPTER I.—TERRITORIAL DIVISION.

ARTICLE I. The Republic of Cuba comprises the territory occupied by the Island of Cuba from Cape San Antonio to Point Maisi and the adjacent islands and keys.

ART. II. This territory shall be divided into four portions, or states, which will be called Oriente, Camaguey, Las Villas or Cabanacan, and Occidente.

ART. III. The State of Oriente includes the territory from the Point Maisi to Port Manati and the river Jobabo in all its course.

ART. IV. The State of Camaguey includes all the territory from the boundary of Oriente to the line which starts in the north from Laguna Blanca through the Esteros to Moron, passing by Ciego de Avila, follows the military trocha to El Jucaro in the southern coast, it being understood that the towns of Moron and Ciego de Avila belong to this State.

ART. V. The State of Las Villas has for boundary on the east Camaguey, on the west the river Palmas, Palmillas, Santa Rosa, Rodas, the Hannabana River, and the bay of Cochinos.

ART. VI. The State of Occidente is bordered on the Las Villas, extending to the west to Cape San Antonio.

ART. VII. The islands and adjacent keys will form part of the states to which they geographically belong.

ART. VIII. The State of Oriente will be divided into ten districts, which shall be as follows: Baracoa, Guantanamo, Sagua de Tanamo, Mayari, Santiago, Jiguani, Manzanillo, Bayamo, and Tunas.

Camaguey comprises two—the eastern district and the western district.

Las Villas comprises seven—Sancti-Espiritus, Trinidad, Remedios, Santa Clara, Sagua, Cienfuegos, and Colon.

That of Occidente comprises sixteen—Cardenas, Matanzas, Union, Jaruco, Guines, Santa Maria del Rosario, Guanabacoa, Havana, Santiago de las Vegas, Bejucal, San Antonio, Bahia Honda, Pina del Rio, and Mantua.

ART. IX. Each of these districts will be divided into prefectures, and these in their turn into as many subprefectures as may be considered necessary.

ART. X. For the vigilance of the coasts there will be inspectors and watchmen appointed in each State according to the extent of the coasts and the number of ports, bays, gulfs, and salt works that there may be.

ART. XI. On establishing the limits of the districts and prefectures, the direction of the coast, rivers, and other natural boundaries shall be kept in mind.

CHAPTER II.—OF THE GOVERNMENT AND ITS ADMINISTRATION.

ART. XII. The civil government, the administration, and the service of communications devolve upon the department of the interior.

ART. XIII. The secretary of the interior is the head of the department; he will appoint the employees and will remove them whenever there will be justifiable cause, and will have a department chief to aid him in the work of the department.

ART. XIV. The department chief will keep the books of the department, take care of the archives, will be the manager of the office, and will furnish certifications when requested to do so.

ART. XV. The department of the interior will compile from the data collected by the civil governors the general statistics of the republic.

ART. XVI. The civil governor will inform the department of the interior as to the necessities of his state, will order the measures and instructions necessary for compliance with the general laws of the republic and the orders given by that department, will distribute to the lieutenant-governors the articles of prime necessity which will be delivered to them for that purpose, will communicate to his subordinates the necessary instructions for the compilation of statistics, and will have a subsecretary who will help him in the discharge of his functions.

ART. XVII. The lieutenant-governor will see that the orders of the governors are obeyed in the district, and will have the powers incident to his position as intermediary between the civil governors and the prefects. In case of absolute breach of communication with the civil governors, they will have the same powers as the latter.

ART. XVIII. The prefect shall see that the laws and regulations communicated to him by his superior authorities are complied with. All residents and travelers are under his authority, and, being the highest official in his territory, he in his turn is bound to prevent all abuses and crimes which may be committed.

He will inform the lieutenant-governor as to the necessities of the prefecture; will divide these into as many subprefectures as he may consider necessary for the good conduct of his administration; he will watch the conduct of the subprefects; he will distribute among them with equity the articles delivered to him, and he will have all the other powers incident to him in his character of intermediary between the lieutenant-governor and the subprefects.

ART. XIX. The prefect will also have the following duties: He will harass the enemy whenever possible for him to do so; will hear the preliminary information as to crimes and misdemeanors which may be committed in his territory, passing the said information to the nearest military chief, together with the accused and all that is necessary for the better understanding of the hearing. He will not proceed thus with spies, guides, couriers, and others who are declared by our laws as traitors and considered as such, for these, on account of the difficulty of confining them or conducting them with security, shall be tried as soon as captured by a court consisting of three persons, the most capable in his judgment in the prefecture, one acting as president and the others as members of the court. He will also appoint a prosecuting officer, and the accused may appoint some one to defend him at his pleasure.

After the court is assembled in this form, and after all the formalities are complied with, it will in private judge and give its sentence, which will be final and without appeal; but those who form the said court and who do not proceed according to our laws and to natural reason will be held responsible by the superior government. Nevertheless, if in the immediate territory there be any armed force, the accused shall be sent to it with the facts, in order that they shall be properly tried.

The prefects will take the statistics of his prefecture, setting down every person who is found therein, noting if he is the head of a family, the number of the same, his age, his nationality and occupation, if he is a farmer the nature of his farm, and if he has no occupation the prefect will indicate in what he should be employed. He will also keep a book of civil register in which he will set down the births, deaths, and marriages which may occur.

He will establish in the prefecture all the factories that he can or may consider necessary in order to well provide the army, as it is the primary obligation of all employees of the Republic to do all possible so that the hides shall not be lost, and organizing in the best manner, and as quickly as may be, tanneries, factories of shoes, rope, blankets, and carpenter and blacksmith shops.

He will not permit any individual of his district to be without occupation. He will see that everyone works, having the instruments of labor at hand in proportion to the inhabitants of his territory. He will protect and raise bees, he will take care of abandoned farms, and will extend as far as possible the zones of agriculture.

As soon as the prefect learns that the secretary of the interior or any delegate of this authority is in his district he will place himself under the latter's orders. This he will also do on the arrival of armed forces, presenting himself to their chief in order to facilitate the needed supplies and to serve him in every possible manner. He will have a bugle to warn the inhabitants of the enemy's approach; he will inform the nearest armed force when his territory is invaded. He will collect all horses and other animals suitable for the war and lead them to a secure place, so that when the army may need them or they may be required by the civil authorities to whom they may appertain.

He will provide the forces that may be in or pass through his territory with whatever they may need, which may be within his power, and especially shall he provide guides and beeves and vegetables which the chief may require to maintain the said forces. He will also deliver the articles manufactured in the shops under his immediate inspection, demanding always the proper receipts therefor.

He will also provide the necessary means for the maintenance of all the families of the territory, especially those of the soldiers of the army of liberation.

Until otherwise decreed he will celebrate civil marriages and other contracts entered into by the residents of his prefecture; he will act in cases of ordinary complaints and in the execution of powers and wills, registering the same in a clear and definite manner, and issuing to the interested parties the certificates which they may require.

ART. XX. The subprefects will see that the laws and orders communicated to him by his superior authorities are obeyed in territory under his command; he will inform the prefect as to the necessities of the subprefecture and will see to the security and order of the public, arresting and sending to the prefects those who may travel without safe-conduct, seeing that no violation of law whatsoever is perpetrated, and will demand the signed authority of the civil or military chief who has ordered a commission to be executed.

ART. XXI. The subprefects will compile a census in which the number of inhabitants of a subprefecture will be stated and their personal description; he will keep a book of the births and deaths which will occur in his territory, and of all this he will give account at the end of the year. He will invest the means provided by the prefect to pay the public charges, and if the said resources are insufficient he will collect the deficit from the inhabitants; he will not authorize the destruction of abandoned farms, whether they belong to friends or enemies of the republic, and he will inform the prefect of the farms which are thus abandoned.

ART. XXII. For the organization and better operation of the states' manufactories a chief of factories shall be appointed in each district, who will be authorized to establish such factories which he may deem convenient, employing all citizens who, on account of their abilities, can serve, and collecting in the prefectures of his district all the instruments he can utilize in his work. These chiefs will be careful to frequently inspect the factories, to report any defects which they may notice, and to provide the superintendents with whatever they may need, that the work may not be interrupted.

Together with the prefect he will send to the department of the interior the names of the individuals he considers most adapted to open new shops, and on the 1st day of each month he will send to that department a statement of the objects manufactured in each shop of his district, indicating the place of manufacture, what remains on deposit, what has been delivered, with the names of commanders of forces, civil authorities, or individuals to whom they were delivered.

ART. XXIII. The coast inspectors will have under their immediate orders an inspector, who will be his secretary, who will occupy his place in his absence or sickness, and as many auxiliaries as he may deem convenient. He may demand the aid of the prefects and armed forces whenever he may consider it necessary for the better exercise of his functions. The duties of the inspectors will be to watch the coasts and prevent the landing of the enemy, to be always ready to receive disembarkments and place in safety the expeditions which may come from abroad, to establish all the salt works possible, to capture the Spanish vessels which frequent the coasts on his guard, and to attend with special care to the punctual service of communications between his coast and foreign countries.

ART. XXIV. The coast guards will acknowledge the inspector as their superior, will watch the places designated to them, and will execute the orders given.

ART. XXV. The lieutenant-governors, as well as the inspectors of whatever class, will have their residence, wherever the necessity of their office does not prohibit it, in the general headquarters, so that they can move easily, furnish the necessary aid to the army, and carry out the orders of the military chief.

Country and liberty.

OCTOBER 17, 1895.

The secretary of the interior, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares, being satisfied with the preceding law, I sanction it in all respects.

Let it be promulgated in the legal form.

SALVADOR CISNEROS BETANCOURT,
The President.

OCTOBER 18, 1895.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I should not have said a word on this matter except for the fact that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] challenged my statement in regard to the strength of the insurgent army, and, unkindest cut of all, he challenged it on the strength of what Mr. Atkins, of Boston, said. In regard to Mr. Atkins, I will refer any Senators who wish to inquire as to him to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who knows him well.

My statement in regard to the strength of that army was derived from the reports of our consuls and from a great many other sources, and from the statement of certainly the first and I think two of the largest bankers in Havana, who have their correspondents in every town and city of the island, and who told me as near as they could judge of the strength of the two armies.

I went to Cienfuegos, near which Mr. Atkins's plantation is situated. I saw before I got there, and I learned from various sources after I reached that city, that Mr. Atkins had had special favors from the Spanish Government. It was evident, even in going along in the cars, that there was much larger force guarding his mills than those in other sections. His sugar mills, and others in his vicinity, were running, although all the way from there to Havana there was hardly one. He had had the opportunity to run his mills while others were destroyed. I learned also, to speak plainly, that Mr. Atkins had our consul, Mr. McGarr, at Cienfuegos, in his pocket.

Mr. McGarr was appointed from Tennessee, and I am confident that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] will not object to anything I say in reference to him. I was told that Mr. Atkins was very generous with certain stimulating beverages which had a lubricating effect upon the consul's mind and tongue.

I wish now to state, Mr. President, precisely what conversation took place. I will state it in three minutes, though the conversation with our consul, Mr. McGarr, occupied an hour. The first inquiry I made was about Mr. Atkins. I told him that Mr. Atkins was from my own vicinity in New England.

Mr. McGarr told me that Mr. Atkins was the finest man in the world; he could not say too much for him. I then asked him about the condition of the reconcentrados and the deaths. He told me that the statements were greatly exaggerated, and he also said "this trouble would have been ended long ago if it had not been for the United States." Those were his exact words. I should say that Miss Clara Barton and Colonel Parker, of this city; Dr. Eagan, of Boston; and Mr. Elwell, of Kansas, were present.

We were sitting about a table in a restaurant. I asked him how many of the reconcentrados in the whole island he thought had died in consequence of the reconcentration order of Weyler's. I thought that his views would be very low, and I suggested a very low number, and asked if it was from five to ten thousand. "Oh, no," he said, "not near as many as that; from one to two thousand." Said I, "In the whole island?" "Yes; in the whole island."

He went on to say that they were in very bad condition when they were driven in. They had been out in the swamps and were half starved. I said to him, "I suppose they were fed by the municipalities and by citizens." "Oh, yes," said he; "they were well supplied when they came in." Said I, "I suppose that this munificent bounty was mainly from Spanish citizens." He said it was, certainly. Said I, "Is it not probable"—I admit I asked leading questions [laughter]—"is it not probable that, coming in in such a half-starved condition, this munificent bounty was the cause of killing a great many of them?" He said, "There is not a doubt of that." [Laughter.] I am willing to leave Mr. McGarr with that statement.

I trust, Mr. President, that the report of the majority of the committee will be adopted striking out the words "are and," in the first resolution; so that it will read:

That the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free and independent.

I could personally vote for the resolution as it stands, because there is a very strange and peculiar condition there. Every house and every family in Cuba, so far as I could see—and I believe it is strictly true—is just as free and independent as we are here, except those who are within the range of a Spanish rifle and inside of a Spanish fortification, and are virtually prisoners of war.

But, Mr. President, it is important that our action be harmonious and prompt. It is not the time to divide, but to concentrate forces when preparing for battle. The effect of united action here will be good in every way; upon our own people, upon the Cubans, upon Spain, and upon European nations. The resolutions differ in policy more than in principle. I should be willing to vote for either the minority resolutions or those of the House, if it seemed the wisest and best policy, but believe the same end will be accomplished by the resolutions of the majority in a manner better for all parties.

And it is from that standpoint of agreement with the purpose of the minority report that I trust for the public good it will not be pressed. Cuba may well rest her case on the highest plane of patriotism—that the present government has no personal aim. It is the freedom of the people they ask. I believe they prefer, for the good of their cause, united agreement upon the majority report rather than divided action.

General Lee and Captain Barker, our consuls, also advise earnestly against formal recognition of the present government. Many prominent Cubans, unfitted for field service, have left the island. Some have been obliged to leave to gain a subsistence. Some have been sent away by the Spanish authorities. When peace is established these men will return, and should be allowed to take part in the formation of the government which the Cuban people will accept. There can be little doubt that it will be practically the government which they have acknowledged and sustained for three years.

And the other wing of this body, who have labored so assiduously for peace, must recognize that further effort in that direction or further delay is harmful to the cause they have at heart. The time for action has come. It is too late to talk or think of peace unless Spain yields. She will be more likely to do so if she sees a united front here. Other nations will be less ready to encourage her. Union of sentiment and celerity of action are of the utmost importance in war. A unanimous vote here to-day would probably be accepted by the other House, and may save thousands of lives and millions of money. The majority resolutions recognize no government, but leave us free to exercise our influence; and our aid in giving Cuba freedom will make this controlling.

If we aid the Cuban people to achieve their independence, we shall, of course, hold the fortifications of Havana, and any others, if it is for their good and ours that we should do so. Our vessels of war and commerce will be at home in their ports with no danger of being blown up. Americans will furnish them lines of transportation by land and water, will sell them their food and wares and merchandise, will rebuild their mills, restore and people the solitude Spain has made and called peace.

In short, full commercial annexation will come quickly. If political annexation ever comes, it should not be until the island is sufficiently Americanized to fully warrant it.

And in my opinion there will be such a development of American ideas and American interests as no part of our country has seen for many years, and in this I know I agree with our consuls and others who are best acquainted with the conditions and capabilities of that wonderful land.

Is it good policy, Mr. President, at the very first step to fail to offer some friendly expression to the men who will be our allies and fight shoulder to shoulder with us?

We know but little of their sacrifices and hardships, but we do know that they are without a parallel in any struggle for liberty in modern times.

I may say that the letter part of which was read by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], was one written to me by a major in Gomez's army whom I met there. I rode over 200 miles with him and stayed over night one night at a hotel where he was. He was an American, a Southern man, and had lived some eight years there. He was engaged in most perilous service. He belonged to a Havana brigade in that province and was engaged in carrying reports from the western province to Gomez and transmitting orders.

All the time I was in the seat with him in the railroad car I thought at any place he might be taken out and shot. Of course it would have been according to the laws of war if he had been tried by a drumhead court-martial; but in Cuba they would have dispensed with that little formality. Of course he was liable to be shot as a spy because he was within the Spanish lines. General Lee and all our consuls knew him. He had been in this confidential service for a long time.

I have just about one minute more, Mr. President, I believe?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORMAN in the chair). The Senator has just a minute and a half more.

Mr. PROCTOR. The statement of this man in regard to the hardships suffered I have no doubt is absolutely accurate. He told me that many of the infantry were entirely naked above the waist, except for a straw hat, and had been sleeping on the ground all winter without blankets and only a covering of grass and twigs.

Either resolution, Mr. President, must accomplish the great result, but that of the majority is but simple justice to these people who have fought and suffered and seen their families starved and subjected to darker wrongs without weakening in their purpose to achieve their freedom. And, Mr. President, what better memorial can we give the sailors of the Maine than to see to it promptly that the flag of their murderers no longer floats over the water where they went down or over the soil in which they are buried? [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Applause in the galleries is forbidden by the rules of the Senate, and can not be permitted.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, it is impossible for me within the time allotted to speakers to intelligently discuss either one of the issues raised by the resolution and the various amendments which are intended to be proposed. While I have sympathized all the time with the Cubans in their struggle for liberty and home rule, I have remained quiet and listened to what others have had to say with respect to this great question, which, in my judgment, is the most important question that has confronted this country since 1860.

Inasmuch as I will not be able to submit an argument in support of the position I occupy, I shall content myself with the statement that I heartily concur in the views expressed by the Senators from Delaware and Wisconsin. They have presented in a masterful manner what I conceive to be the policy which should be pursued by this body. We can not afford to establish a precedent on this occasion which is in flagrant violation of the principles enunciated by this Government during the late war, and which will in all probability return to plague us in the near future. I am greatly surprised to hear Senators on this floor criticise the conduct of the President, in view of the fact that he has acted in a fair, impartial, and patriotic manner in his treatment of this subject.

The American people are well acquainted with the life and character of William McKinley, and I feel sure that unfounded assertions and insinuations, prompted by a desire to make political capital, will not find successful lodgment in the minds of our people. The time for argument has passed and the hour for action is at hand. The people of this country are anxiously awaiting a final vote on the resolution under consideration.

The President stands ready and willing to obey the mandate of Congress. Let our action be such as to convince the world that we are the descendants of the men who led the American forces at Bunker Hill and Kings Mountain. While the people of the South realize the fact that a war will be detrimental to their interests, at the same time the State of North Carolina is ready and willing to contribute her full quota of brave men in the defense of humanity, and to maintain the dignity and honor of this nation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any part in the debate on this question. The spirit to speak did not come upon me until last evening, when listening to the very able and interesting discussion of the question by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and after listening to other Senators who followed in his wake.

Somehow it has been in the air on this side of the Chamber that we who intended to vote for the recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic were not loyal to the President and were not the friends of the President. Mr. President, I repel any such idea or insinuation. I think that the best friends of the President of the United States at this juncture are the men who aim to keep him in harmony and in touch with the spirit and sympathy and affections of the American people. No one who is at all conversant with the sentiment of the American people, as it appears in the newspapers and as it appears in public meetings and elsewhere, will doubt for a moment that the heart of the American people is with the Cuban Republic. So, Mr. President, with all due respect to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber with whom I differ, I think we who aim to keep the President in touch with that sentiment are as good friends as those who seek to put him in an ice box and keep him away from the hearts of our people.

Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the able argument of the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday, and after listening to it I could not help but come to the conclusion that he did not discuss the real question at issue in this controversy. In order that I may not do any injustice to the position of the honorable Senator, I will briefly state the grounds of his contention.

The two propositions chiefly discussed by the Senator were, first, as to whether the recognition of Cuba was purely an Executive function, beyond the pale of the legislative department; and, second, as to whether, under the principles of international law, it was proper to recognize the Republic.

These propositions, though highly interesting, are not strictly relevant to the issue before us and the issue presented to us by the President—the question of intervention. The President has the right, independent of our authority, to intervene through diplomacy—to peaceably intervene. What he has asked of us, and the issue before us, is the right and power to intervene by force of arms. If the only question presented to us for consideration and determination were the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Cuba, the, nunder those conditions, the question would be one of international law; then it might be pertinent to discuss the question whether the President had the exclusive power of recognition, or whether the power was vested in the legislative department of the Government. And it would then also be pertinent to discuss the question as to whether the recognition of Cuba was justified by the principles of international law. But that is not the question of international law involved. The question of international law presented here to-day is the right and duty of forcible intervention.

Have we the right to intervene by force of arms and expel the Spaniards from Cuba, and to set up an independent government in place of the existing Spanish government? That is the true question of international law involved; that is the political question. If such a right of intervention exists under the principles of international law, if we are justified to intervene by force of arms, then it is not a question of international law whether we accept the republican government now existing in Cuba, or set up another in its place. In either event it will be an anti-Spanish government, a government of our own recognition. The right of forcible intervention being conceded, as it seems to be on all hands, the right to accept the existing republic, or to establish another, can in no wise be a matter of international law, for it is all merged in the greater question—the right and duty of forcible intervention.

Mr. President, if we have the right to forcibly intervene in Cuba, to drive the Spaniards out and set up another government, the question whether we take the republican government that is now existing and ready-made, so to speak, or set up a new one, is not in any sense a question of international law. The question of annexation might be, for that might be construed as bearing on the question of the balance of power; but we all disavow annexation, so that point is not material. If we have the right of forcible intervention, and the right to establish an independent government in Cuba, manifestly the right of the legislative department to take a ready-made republican government is as broad and well-grounded as the right to create such a government. If we have the right to create a republican form of government, we have a right to say that the government that is now existing is such a government. That is not a question of international law.

Forcible intervention and the expulsion of the Spaniards is war, inaugurated under the war-making power of Congress, and Congress, in resorting to war, in declaring war, has full jurisdiction of the entire subject until peace is restored; and in declaring and making such war Congress has the right to say that it will recognize and avail itself as an ally of the Republic of Cuba. And whether war shall come with the recognition of the existing government or the creation of another government is clearly within the war-making power, the power of peace and war, vested in Congress.

The Senator from Wisconsin will not contend that if we intervene by force of arms in Cuba and take possession of the country without a preliminary recognition of independence that the executive department has the exclusive right to set up a new government in Cuba and to determine the manner in which it shall be done, and the character of the same. That is manifestly a matter for the legislative department of the Government. The legislative department can say if it goes to war that it will do so with the Cuban Republic as an existing fact, as a friend and ally. To deny that is to curtail and abridge the war-making power of the legislative department of the Government. The executive department has no right to prescribe the conditions under which Congress shall make war. That is utterly foreign to our system of government.

In any aspect, then, waiving the mere technical, theoretical questions discussed by the Senator from Wisconsin, upon the facts of this case, Congress, under the war-making power, has full and ample jurisdiction of the whole subject-matter of intervention and of all subsidiary questions connected with it, including the recognition or establishment of a government in Cuba. The President has asked us to give him the right to make war to expel the Spaniards from Cuba. He has asked us to put that power in his hands; and when we are asked to grant that power—the highest power given under the Constitution—we have the right, the intrinsic right, vested in us by the Constitution, to say how and under what conditions and with what allies that war-making power shall be exercised.

Mr. President, Spanish rule in Cuba from its inception has been a rule of cruelty, tyranny, and oppression. Within fifty years after the island was first colonized the three or four hundred thousand natives were entirely exterminated. The people of that island, except those who are Spanish Government officials, have been treated as serfs and vassals, have been taxed with the most burdensome taxes, and have been held in a quasi military vassalage. There have been frequent rebellions. I can not enumerate them all; I will simply refer to the great rebellion from 1868 to 1878—the ten years' war. That ten years' war was terminated by a compromise, by which the Spanish Government agreed to give the people of Cuba the same liberty as the people had in Puerto Rico and in Spain; to treat them as Spanish citizens, to give to the slaves who had gone into the insurrection their freedom, and to protect them in all their rights and privileges as Spanish citizens. But what has been the result? That compromise was never carried out in good faith by Spain. Many of the men who surrendered were made captives and transported to distant prisons in distant islands; many of the men who surrendered were slaughtered and assassinated, and the poor people of Cuba, instead of being relieved of the burdens of taxation, instead of being accorded the rights of Spanish citizens, were oppressed worse than ever.

The result of this treachery and oppression was that in 1895 another uprising took place, another rebellion broke out, and this rebellion has been carried on by the insurgents for the last three years in a brave, patriotic, and heroic manner, such as to meet with the approval of all patriotic and good citizens.

No fair and unbiased minds can question the integrity of the Cuban Republic. The Cuban Republic has maintained its ground and has occupied, to the exclusion of the Spaniards, during all this period, the two eastern provinces, which constitute half of the island. They have had exclusive control of that. There has been a good and orderly government. In the western part of the island—the four western provinces—the only government most of the time has been a military government, and the Spaniards have only occupied and held the seaports and larger towns, and have laid the balance of the country waste, and driven the people—chiefly women, children, and the old and feeble—into camps near the posts and towns held by the Spaniards, and there kept them in a state of cruel want and starvation.

Let me read the testimony of one who has visited Cuba, and speaks from knowledge and observation. I read from Flint, "Marching with Gomez," page 239:

Take it all in all, these two provinces of Camaguey and Oriente are peaceful.

These are the provinces generally called "Santiago de Cuba" and "Puerto Principe."

The small farms are fruitful and undisturbed. Smoke does not tinge the brilliant blueness of the tropical sky. The peasants live in their clearings on the mountain trails as if there were no such thing as war, making their cheese and honey—a contrast to the starving, homeless refugees of the western provinces.

As for traveling, the country is safe as it never was under the old rule; for the insurgents, as I wrote in another chapter, have systematically suppressed outlaws of every description. The prefects are in full sway, each in his district, under surveillance of the civil governors and lieutenant-governors, and in Oriente there are actually schools for the children. To these public schools each citizen is required by law to send his children, despite any notion he may have of his own for their private instruction.

I have before me a little blue-covered pamphlet, the very first primer of free Cuba. It was written by order of the government.

Mr. President, the insurgents have a more stable government, a bigger army, and a better organized administration than the government of the colonies had during the Revolutionary war. This is a matter of history. The only government the colonies had during the Revolutionary war was the Continental Congress, and this was helpless, unpopular, and well-nigh without any power. It was little more than a mere advisory body. In fact, the only substantial head of the government was George Washington and his personality. Gomez has had a bigger army and more of a government at his back than Washington had. There are better and stronger grounds for our recognizing the Cuban Republic than there was for recognizing the United States by France in 1778. To ignore Gomez and the Cuban Republic seems to me to be cold, icy heartlessness, unworthy a great nation and a great people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I am deeply impressed with the responsibility which rests upon me in casting my vote in what appears to be a crisis in the history of our country. I believe it to be a religious duty for every Senator to carefully consider and duly weigh the various issues which have been here presented, so that when he shall have cast his vote he will have the conscientious satisfaction of knowing that he has done so with a motive as pure as snow; that he has been influenced by no desires but those which will promote and advance the welfare and prosperity of our common country.

It is an individual responsibility which each Senator must take upon himself. He can not delegate it to another, and as he votes so his record must stand. There is not a Senator upon this floor that will probably live long enough to ever again be called upon to vote upon a question fraught with so much importance to the people of our common country!

The very able report which has been presented to us by the Committee on Foreign Relations, a report which for all time will be preserved in the archives of the nation as a memorial of the research of the statesmanship of that committee and reflects the highest credit upon its author, says, among other things, in the resolution, that the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent.

They make this declaration, and if they, the people of Cuba, are free and independent, ought we not to acknowledge it by our vote for the resolution which shall become a law upon our statute books? The three great political parties of this country, in its last Presidential campaign, in their respective conventions embodied in platforms the declaration that by right the people of the Island of Cuba should be free and independent and their independence acknowledged. This is not a party question. It is a great American, a great national question. But I only refer to it at this time to justify my course, for in voting as I do I not only carry out the wishes of the people as expressed by them in conventions, but I also certainly act in accordance with my own convictions of duty.

The people of Cuba ought to be free. For three years they have fought, they have sacrificed home and family, they have suffered privations and cruelties the like of which have never been known in the present generation in any country of the world. We ought to acknowledge their independence because Spain has done so by indirection in issuing the edict that hostilities shall be suspended and an armistice granted. If the Cubans are not in revolution, if they have not been making a fight for liberty, why should they grant them an armistice? We should acknowledge the independence of Cuba, because then we are divorced from the charge by any European power that we are influenced by motives of acquisition, of conquest, or other ulterior purposes. Our motive is a pure one. It is a true one. We do not want the island; but we want this savage war to cease. We want peace to reign there, and we want those people who have been fighting for all that is dear to them finally to reap the reward to which they are justly entitled.

I have received many telegrams and letters asking me well to consider before I vote for a measure that brings war upon the country. They ask me if I wish to give my boy, my friend, a sacrifice to the demon war. I might have answered them, Mr. President, if that spirit had prevailed with our Revolutionary fathers, we would have had no country; we would not have had the religious and civil liberties enjoyed by 70,000,000 people in a country where every man is equal before the law, where every man has open to him every avenue to fame, every avenue to honor, every avenue to the highest position in the land.

But I will answer them from my seat here in this august body, I am ready and willing to fight as I vote; that when I vote for this resolution I enroll my name among those who believe that our country is greater than any man or any combination of men; that our country is next to our Creator, and that my life is at the service of my country when she calls either in the field or upon the waters.

But I do not intend to boast, for I remember the Good Book says, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

I remember the story of a friend of mine who went to battle when it raged thick and fast. He was a nervous man. His companion was physically brave, physically strong; he knew no fear; and as the engagement was about to commence he looked at him and said: "You are afraid; you are frightened." He looked at him a moment and said: "Yes; I am afraid; I am frightened; and if you were half so frightened as I am you would run away." This was high moral courage. It is that spirit which should inspire us as we approach this great crisis.

I can not forget the Maine. I can not blot out from my memory the recollection of those 266 gallant American sailors, blown into eternity without warning, who were assassinated in their sleep, who went down on that night of terror without being awakened to say a prayer, to lisp a word asking their Maker's blessing. I can not forget that tragic event here at the close of the nineteenth century, which has so deeply impressed everyone with its awful solemnity. Who were those 266 men? Had they brothers? Had they fathers or mothers or children? If they had not, there are millions of American citizens who cry out that that murder shall be avenged.

Mr. President, that of itself, I believe, is sufficient warrant for us to go to war, sufficient warrant for us to say that the Spaniards are not capable of governing Cuba, and therefore they should leave the island. There was not a cartridge, not one pound of high explosive that Spain imported into that island for three years that was not under the surveillance, the espionage of the authorities of the island. The people knew that to possess such material meant death. One of those liberal laws made by that Spanish patriot, Weyler, was that if there was found in the possession of anyone without a government permit a pound of any high explosive the penalty was death.

Mr. President, Spain is responsible for that great catastrophe.

I do not wish to be placed in a position in voting for the independence of Cuba where it can be said that I am not voting to support the Administration. All honor to President McKinley. All honor to his name. When the history of this country shall be written not only will its pages be illuminated by his heroic acts, for he won his spurs and his epaulets upon the battlefield, but one of the brightest pages will recite that in this great pressure which has been brought to bear upon him, in this great hour of his trial, when a God-fearing and a God-loving people have been beseeching him to avert war, he has used every honorable means to do so. He has resisted the importunities of those who urged him to haste, he has waited prayerfully, patiently, hoping against hope. He has spared no effort. He has neglected nothing that he could do to give peace to this country. But in his message he says, "I have exhausted every effort, and I refer it now to Congress, the representatives of the people." So, acting upon those instructions, I shall vote in accordance with what I believe to be my duty, and what I believe he would do if he stood in my place.

On April 18, 1775, two lights hung out on the old church at South Boston, and when those lights were seen sparkling across the water Paul Revere came to the front and rode from Lexington, through Concord, saying, "To arms! To arms! Liberty is assailed, and the foe is upon us!" He was carrying the signal for independence. I believe that on Monday next, the 18th of April, 1898, when the House of Representatives shall have concurred in the joint resolution which we shall pass to-night, some Paul Revere will leave Key West, or some other port on the Atlantic, in an American-built vessel, manned by an American crew, with the Stars and Stripes flying at its peak, while at its fore truck there will be two lights, one red and the other white—the red signifying we press forward with zeal and fortitude against oppression and cruelty, your cause is just; the white light signifying we are a messenger of peace, and the great heart, the great sympathies of the American people that have been with you all these years of struggle, all these dark hours of suffering, these long nights of pain and agony are now ended in fruition, and we have come as a messenger of peace to give you our right hand of fellowship and to declare that Cuba shall be a free and independent people.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I shall vote to recognize the independence of the Cuban Republic, and quietly and dispassionately, in the briefest possible time, I feel it my duty to present the principal reasons that guide my action.

I am a Republican and I have been urged by every consideration of the welfare of my party to vote against this resolution because it is alleged to be of Democratic origin. No man has ever questioned my Republicanism, and no man can, but in a case of this kind I am something better than a Republican, I am an American; and my duty as an American citizen places me above the clouds and the fogs of party discipline or party decision. I aim to stand in the clear sunlight of the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship.

No man upon this floor or elsewhere shall outdo me in eulogium of the President of the United States. I helped to raise the standard of William McKinley and I helped to carry it to success in convention and at the polls. I am ready to stand by him for the honor of my country, and I repudiate here the suggestions made to the public ear that the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States can be divided by any mere difference in the terms of resolutions that are to be adopted by the Senate and the House.

There is, there can be, there will be no division between the Congress and the President. He has advised us that he has exhausted his powers and responsibilities of diplomacy, and he has asked us to exercise our judgment, not his. For our judgment we answer to our own consciences, to our own high ideals of public duty.

Mr. President, in the message from the President of the United State he states clearly and specifically and rightfully the three alternative forms of intervention possible in the Island of Cuba. He says:

> There remain the alternative forms of intervention to end the war, either as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants or as the active ally of the one party or the other.

He is right. There are but three methods of intervention possible. As to the first he further properly and rightfully says:

> It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Mr. President, I am opposed "to intervention as an impartial neutral by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants." We have declared that there is no compromise possible between Spain and the people of Cuba. We will declare in our resolutions that the people of that island have a right to be free, and the only action which we can sanction as a nation is the removal of the Spanish sovereignty from Cuba.

Mr. President, I am opposed to intervention which imposes "hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement." The dispatches from foreign countries every morning bring to our ears the deliberate opinions of the people of those governments that through the intervention of the United States an end is to be put to the war and Cuba made free upon the condition of the guaranteeing or assumption in some form or another of the obligation of the Spanish debt. Mr. President, God forbid. When the deed of Cuban freedom is signed by the powers of the world, let there be no stain of blood money upon it, and let it not be sealed by a dollar mark.

Mr. President, when we intervene in Cuba we know it means war—war on the sea, war on the land. When we enter a Cuban port, when we raise our flag, when we establish a base of military movement and supply, I do not want the American youth to go down there by the hundreds and the thousands, to take the chances of fever and of disease and of bullets and of battle, unless it is absolutely necessary. If we recognize the Cuban Republic, if we intervene as the friend of that government, which already has an army, not one American youth will ever have to march by land upon Havana. The Cuban Republic has an army. Give it recognition, give it arms, give it munitions, give it a base of supply at a port held under the guns of American battle ships, and it will do the fighting. It will drive Spain into the sea.

Mr. President, I am done. When the Stars and Stripes go up on Cuban soil, I want our flag to share equally the free air of Cuba with another flag that bears a single star. Under the flags of two Republics, acknowledged before all the world, humanity and liberty will be safe and secure.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I suppose from the fact that the list of speakers is about exhausted, we are approaching the time when a vote is to be taken. The question before the Senate, as I understand, according to parliamentary law, is the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to amend the resolution brought in by the committee. The same language which the Senator proposes in his amendment was in the resolution when it was first offered in the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. It was in the resolution as it was adopted by the committee on two or three distinct votes, and I voted for it, there being no question made about its propriety.

When, however, we came to the final vote to report the resolution to the Senate, a motion was made by some Senator—I forget who it was, and if I knew, I would not name him—to strike out that part of the resolution. I voted against striking out that part of the resolution. After it was stricken out, a roll call was had, and the resolution was adopted by the unanimous vote of the committee, each member in his place and voting on the roll call, some of them, however, saying that they would reserve the right to offer in the Senate that branch of the resolution which had just been stricken out. The resolution is therefore properly before the Senate with the understanding of the committee, and would be properly before the Senate without any such understanding, on the right of any Senator to propose it.

The views of the minority, as it is called, were drawn up by the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] in the following words:

> The undersigned members of the said committee cordially concur in the report made upon the Cuban resolutions—

That was after we had adopted them—

> The undersigned members of the said committee cordially concur in the report made upon the Cuban resolutions, but we favor the immediate recognition of the Republic of Cuba, as organized in that island, as a free, independent, and sovereign power among the nations of the world.

I declined to sign that report. That declaration, in my judgment, does not comport with the meaning of the part of the resolution stricken out, which is as follows:

> That the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

That part of the resolution which was stricken out, and which I have just read, did not say that we recognize "the Republic of Cuba as organized in that island as a free, independent, sovereign power among the nations of the world."

When I came to think over this subject I became alarmed at the idea that we were about to leave that part of the resolution in the body of it, and I will state my reasons for being alarmed at it. Before doing so, I will say, however, that I think I can appeal to the Senate of the United States, to the people of the United States, and more especially to the people of Cuba, that they have never had a firmer friend on this floor or anywhere else than I have been for quite three years, and they do not misunderstand me now, and they will never misunderstand a word I say. On the contrary, my views have been submitted to Mr. Estrada Palma, fully discussed, and he concurs in my views as being absolutely correct on this subject. So, sir, I am not taking any ground different from what I have always occupied upon this subject.

Why do I object to that? First of all, if my brother were the president of the Cuban Republic or the leader of the Cuban army, I would not trust him with the power that is conferred upon him by the amendment, especially by the declaration, which departs from the amendment really contained there, that he is the leader of the armies of a free, sovereign, and independent republic. Why would I not do that? Because I would not trust the welfare of my own people in the hands of any man who lives, the power to be exercised at his arbitrary discretion.

I have great admiration for General Gomez. I am not a man worshiper or a hero worshiper, but if there were a man whom I would pick, from my understanding and knowledge of men in the world, as a conspicuous example of high virtues, civic and military, as a man entitled to stand as the most majestic person in the eyes of the world, with the sword of liberty drawn in his hand, it is General Gomez. So in regard to President Masó, so in regard to his cabinet, and so in regard to the brave and splendid people they represent. I have an intense admiration and a warm, genuine, honest affection for every one of them, and I expect, old as I am, to live to see the day when the single star of the flag of Cuba will float in triumph on the Castle Morro. I have not any doubt of it.

But, sir, from the beginning, in all my advocacy of belligerency, I have always said I was acting for the American people, for their interests, their honor, and their welfare, praying God that that action might redound to the advantage of the Cuban Republic. But, sir, on the floor of the Senate we act for nobody but the people of the United States. I have no commission to do anything myself.

We have but one example in history on this subject. It has been loosely referred to here on the floor of the Senate in such a manner as to inspire the belief that Senators have not read the history of their country. It has been said often here that France recognized the independence of the United States. Oh, what a blunder there is upon the facts!

Our independence was declared on the 4th day of July, 1776. We went on in that war unassisted by any foreign power, and almost without the recognition of our existence as a nation except by little Holland, until 1778. Then Franklin went to Paris for the purpose of negotiating for money to conduct the war, and he got it. In conducting that negotiation he made first a preliminary and secret agreement with the French Crown. Then he made the treaty, offensive and defensive, which we had so much trouble in getting rid of twenty years later, and had to resort to an act of Congress to repeal it. That treaty was signed by Gerard, Ben Franklin, Silas Deane, and Arthur Lee. Did that recognize our independence? Let me read the eighth article and see whether it did.

Neither of the two parties—

That is, the United States and France—

shall conclude either truce or peace with Great Britain without the formal consent of the other first obtained, and they mutually engage not to lay down their arms until the independence of the United States shall have been formally or tacitly assured by the treaty or treaties that shall terminate the war.

That is the only precedent we have. That is what you call a declaration of independence. That bound us to fight the battles of France and it bound France to fight our battles. We were not independent enough to make a treaty of peace or a truce without the consent of France. That is what you call the independence recognized by France.

Mr. DANIEL. The treaty itself was a recognition of independence.

Mr. MORGAN. It might be so inferred.

Mr. GRAY. They did not dare do it without a stipulation.

Mr. MORGAN. They did not dare do it, as the Senator from Delaware suggests, without that stipulation. That is the only precedent we have. Why did our fathers require that of France? Because she might make a treaty with Great Britain and leave us in the lurch. Why did France, who had not then declared war against Great Britain, but was providing for it in that very treaty, require it of us? Because we might make a treaty with Great Britain, our mother, and leave her in the lurch.

If the people of the United States in the Revolutionary war were not willing to trust the French people, who had been lending them money to conduct their war, without a stipulation of this sort, I, sir, can not be willing to trust General Gomez or President Masó or any other of those noble and splendid men in Cuba without some arrangement at some time that they shall not go and make a treaty with Spain and leave us with the bag to hold.

Mr. DANIEL. Will my honorable friend let me ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator if he does not recognize that there is now a civil, established, republican government in Cuba?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; in a part of it. Do you recognize that there is a civil government of a republic in Havana?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. Sir, it is the treaty-making power that has got that to handle, not the Congress of the United States. We can not by a statute here make a treaty with them. It is not a power of Congress. When we make this declaration, it is a legislative declaration.

Mr. DANIEL. I will ask my honorable friend——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. DANIEL. Will my honorable friend yield to another question?

Mr. MORGAN. I had better yield the floor, I find.

Mr. DANIEL. It is only by his permission, and it is for him to say whether he yields to a question or not.

Mr. MORGAN. I can not yield out of my time. I have a few words more to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if my remarks raise suggestions in the mind of the Senator from Virginia it is because they are potent and need the attention of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. It is very nice for the Senator to answer me without permitting me to ask a question.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator spoke here for three hours, or very nearly so, the other day, on this question, and I have abstained from saying one word in this great debate.

Mr. DANIEL. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that I spoke in advocacy in the main of the views for which he had spoken for three months.

Mr. MORGAN. I never in the Senate announced my purpose or wish to declare the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. DANIEL. But for the recognition of the republic.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators are requested to address the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir. The recognition of belligerent rights of the republic; that is all.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes; but we can not recognize belligerent rights without recognizing the republic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. When I have no liberty to ask the courtesy of the Senator from Virginia, I will insist upon my rights.

Now, I presented that. Let some of the gentlemen answer it who have more time than I have to do it. That is what alarmed me. Another thing alarmed me. We are laying down here a precedent of international law. We are recognizing a republic as a free, sovereign, and independent power amongst the nations of the earth. It is subject to the difficulty that it does not possess the control of the entire island, and yet we recognize it for the entire island and not for a part of it. They do not possess it. That is not true. No mere academic declaration can make it true. No declaration of ours can make it true in point of fact.

When we lay down in this very important, grave, and momentous case the doctrine that we will feel authorized as a great Republic to recognize a nation as being sovereign, free, and independent, and one of the powers of the earth, when there is no higher qualification for that honor and that power than the Republic of Cuba at this moment possesses, we will find that the powers of Europe necessarily will question our right to put such a feature in the international law, and they will make an application of it to us that will be extremely embarrassing, to say the least of it.

That will be this—that whenever an insurrection of any kind shall spring up in one of their colonies in or about the Western Hemisphere, all that we expect to do is that an insurrection shall be organized and have an army in the field, and although they have not accomplished the reduction of the country to the sway of their military or their civil power, and although they have never before had any such power to which they could recur as being restored by the revolution, we declare that they are entitled to our support with the Army and Navy of the United States, if they are fighting in what we esteem to be the cause of liberty. Mr. President, I do not wish to inscribe that upon the laws of nations as a precedent. It goes too far. It is extremely dangerous. That is all I will say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. MORGAN. Has my time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to delay the Senate in further debate upon this question. I desire only to refer to the vote which I shall cast upon the resolutions that are now before us.

I base my action wholly upon the remarks that I have made heretofore. I shall vote for the resolution that has been offered from the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] for the reason that it is my duty, as far as I am able, to prevent bloodshed of American citizens, and I believe if that resolution is adopted and the President acts in accordance therewith there will be in the Island of Cuba an army of insurgents able to make the fight for the complete liberty of the Cuban Government without the aid or the sacrifice of a soldier of this country. I shall therefore most heartily and earnestly support the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment to come in as an additional section to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has offered an amendment that has been pending in the afternoon.

Mr. MORGAN. My amendment is, I understand, in order now, unless the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] chooses to press his amendment, he having a right, as I concede, to perfect the resolution of the committee before any substitute is offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands the order of the amendments, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] should be first submitted, because it proposes to amend the text of the joint resolution that is before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I think is right.

Mr. TURPIE. I appeal to the Senator from Minnesota——

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TURPIE. I appeal to the Senator from Minnesota to allow me to offer this amendment and have a vote upon it.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought it had been offered.

Mr. TURPIE. It has been offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "independent,' insert:

And that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that a direct vote may be taken upon that amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I desire that the resolution be read and the amendment pending to it, so that we may know exactly what we are to vote upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the original joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations and then the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The joint resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

At the end of the first paragraph, after the word "independent," Mr. TURPIE moves to insert the words:

And that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

So that if amended the first paragraph would read:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. He is absent from the Senate, seriously ill, and has been for some days. He sent to me a message by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] informing me that the matters pending upon this subject are of such consequence that under the circumstances he did not feel it to be fair that I should be precluded from voting because of the pair, and therefore releasing me from the pair. I ask unanimous consent to say what every Senator here knows, that this considerateness upon his part is altogether characteristic of him as we have all known him. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if I do not state correctly his message?

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Wisconsin has stated the exact words of the Senator from Mississippi. He said that he did not think it was fair to the Senator from Wisconsin that that Senator should be deprived of his vote on these important questions and, therefore, as he was not able to be here, the Senator from Wisconsin was at entire liberty to vote as he saw proper. He so stated to me and requested me to communicate the message to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 51, nays 37; as follows:

So Mr. TURPIE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment to the pending joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution add the following paragraph:

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out in line 1 of the joint resolution the words "are, and;" so that, if amended, the paragraph would read:

First. That the people of the Island of Cuba of right ought to be free and independent, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] upon the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 55, nays 33; as follows:

Walthall.

So Mr. FRYE'S amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I call up the substitute offered by me, and I ask that it may be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the preamble and all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution, and insert the following:

That the United States of America, without fault on their part, being involved in hostilities with Spain, on account of the war that is being waged by that power against the people of Cuba; the conduct of which is inhuman in its character; has long disturbed the peace of the United States; has greatly injured our commerce; has violated the rights of our people, guaranteed by treaties; has destroyed their lives by assassination and their property with the torch, and has culminated in the loss of the lives of our officers and sailors through the criminal destruction of the battle ship Maine while it was at anchor in the bay of Havana, on a visit of courtesy; and also for other well-known causes.

First. The Congress of the United States declares that a state of war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government and people of the United States.

Second. The foregoing declaration does not apply to the government of the Republic of Cuba or to the people who are included in its citizenship.

Third. The President of the United States is empowered and required to use the land and naval forces of the United States in executing and maintaining this declaration of war until an honorable peace is concluded and the future safety and welfare of the people of the United States and the independence of Cuba are secured by the expulsion of the armed forces and the dominion of the Spanish Government from the Island of Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the amendment lie upon the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 83, nays 5; as follows:

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So Mr. MORGAN'S amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. If there are no other amendments to the Senate joint resolution, I now move to take from the table House joint resolution 233 and lay the Senate resolution aside informally. I will state that I make this motion for the purpose of substituting the Senate resolution as now formulated for the House resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Chair kindly state the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the motion to be to take from the table House joint resolution No. 233, in order that a motion for the substitution of the Senate resolution may be made. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the joint resolution be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 233), as follows:

Whereas the Government of Spain for three years past has been waging war on the Island of Cuba against a revolution by the inhabitants thereof without making any substantial progress toward the suppression of said revolution, and has conducted the warfare in a manner contrary to the laws of nations by methods inhuman and uncivilized, causing the death by starvation of more than 200,000 innocent noncombatants, the victims being for the most part helpless women and children, inflicting intolerable injury to the commercial interests of the United States, involving the destruction of the lives and property of many of our citizens, entailing the expenditure of millions of money in patrolling our coast and policing the high seas in order to maintain our neutrality; and

Whereas this long series of losses, injuries, and burdens for which Spain is responsible has culminated in the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine in the harbor of Havana and in the death of 200 of our seamen:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and directed to intervene at once to stop the war in Cuba to the end and with the purpose of securing permanent peace and order there and establishing by the free action of the people thereof a stable and independent government of their own in the Island of Cuba; and the President is hereby authorized and empowered to use the land and naval forces of the United States to execute the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert in lieu of what is stricken out the Senate joint resolution as it has been amended.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the substitute be reported.

Mr. HALE and Mr. PETTUS addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first recognize the Senator from Maine and afterwards recognize the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, if carried, brings the Senate into deadlock with the House of Representatives and with the President of the United States.

We present to-day a remarkable spectacle——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Maine, as that is a most serious statement to Republicans, some of whom expect to vote for the resolution, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if he is authorized by the President of the United States to say that those who vote for this resolution vote to establish a deadlock between Congress and the President of the United States?

Mr. HALE. I must select, Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado rose to a question of order, which he will state.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to submit to the Chair a question of order. It is out of order for the Senator from Maine or for any other Senator to refer to what may happen in the other House; it is also out of order to refer to what the Executive may do. It is a great breach of privilege to do that, as has been held many times.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. PETTUS. I want to make another point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. PETTUS. We have unanimously agreed that there shall be no further discussion.

Several SENATORS. No, no!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] is recognized.

Mr. TURPIE. The Senator from Alabama has made the point I wished to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that there has been any such agreement as that stated by the Senator from Alabama. He understands, after consulting the RECORD and the Senator who proposed the unanimous-consent agreement yesterday, that there were but two branches of the agreement; one was, that with the exception of the reservation of four hours to certain Senators, other speeches should be limited to fifteen minutes, and the other, that the final vote should be taken to-day. The Senator from Maine will proceed in order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Chair decide my point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has asked the Senator from Maine to proceed in order.

Mr. HALE. And I hope, Mr. President, that my service in the Senate has not been such that I shall proceed to violate any rule of the body. I shall endeavor to show briefly, as I must, the ground for the statement with which I opened my remarks, and in doing so I do not pretend to speak as the organ of the President of the United States or to know in any contingency in the future what will be his action; but I repeat, if the motion of the Senator from Minnesota prevails, it brings the Senate into deadlock with the President of the United States, as shown by communications from him that are now before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I again raise the question of order, that the Senator is not proceeding in order; and I ask a decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point made by the Senator from Colorado is quite new to the occupant of the chair; but by reference to page 94 of Jefferson's Manual, he finds it is stated that—

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

The Chair simply quotes that rule of procedure to the Senator from Maine, and asks him, if he will, to proceed in order.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. I think there is some misunderstanding as to what the pending motion is. My understanding is that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota is to strike out all after the resolving clause in the House joint resolution and substitute the resolution agreed to by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. BURROWS. There seems to be some misunderstanding about it.

Mr. HALE. I so understood, or I should not have stated that if the motion carries, and thereby substitutes an entirely different resolution from that which the other House has passed, it brings us into deadlock with them. I certainly should not have made that statement if the motion of the Senator from Minnesota did not carry with it that inevitable conclusion.

Now, I hope, Mr. President, I may be permitted, in the fifteen minutes I have, to go on, and I promise to keep within the rules of the Senate, which I certainly have not thus far violated.

We present, Mr. President, a very remarkble spectacle. We are not asked to legislate upon ordinary matters, but upon the gravest of grave subjects—that which involves war between the United States and a hitherto friendly power. That war must be conducted by the President of the United States as the head of all the military forces of the Republic.

The policy under which that war shall be carried on must be controlled by him, and he has not left us in doubt as to what he believes should be the lines of policy upon which we should enter upon, if needs must be, war with Spain. He has told us in his message that he does not believe the conditions are such that the United States should recognize the Republic of Cuba as a government established and worthy of recognition.

In this message he has also marked out clearly and as plainly as man can do that the time has come—and I quote his words—"that the war in Cuba must stop." Nothing can be plainer than that he is convinced that intervention must be resorted to, and he asks that he be instructed to use the armies and navies of the United States to that end. It is in the line of what he said to the deputations representing the foreign governments the day before he sent in his message that the conditions upon the Island of Cuba had become intolerable.

And now here to-day, with this policy marked out by him, carrying with it every essential thing that all of us desire, the freedom of Cuba; carrying with it intervention, if need be, by force of arms; carrying with it, as it must, if it shall come, war, we are then confronted with the purpose apparently of the majority in this Chamber to define another policy, after he has told us what is his policy and what he desires, which covers every essential point of freedom to Cuba, and we are called upon to thrust in his face a resolution which he has declared that he does not believe in and that he does not need.

Mr. President, such a thing has never occurred here or elsewhere, that the President of the Republic, the nearest approach in this country to a ruler, representing all executive functions, shall be opposed, and another policy put in the place of that which he has enunciated, which carries with it, as I have said, everything essential.

Now, Mr. President, why is this? Some of us have seen remarkable things happen within the last ten days. We have seen melting away gradually here what I may call the conservative sentiment upon this subject. Senators who have been counted upon and reckoned as opposed to the immediate recognition of the insurgents in Cuba and in favor of armed intervention—instead of that, as a safer measure, as a more politic measure, as a wiser measure, we have seen those Senators day by day falling off and joining the ranks of those who propose to thrust in the President's face another policy in the place of his.

I have wondered why it is that this is so. I have found when I read the morning papers that the initiation of this matter took place at a banquet that was given the Hon. William J. Bryan Wednesday, April 13, and at that banquet Mr. Bryan, in the eloquent and impressive fashion of which he is master, said this:

> The Cubans have earned their right to be free. Our right to recognize the independence of the Cuban government can be defended upon the ground that our interests are involved, as well as upon the ground of humanity.

After his speech, the account of the banquet proceeds:

> Amid the din of applause that followed Mr. Bryan's closing remarks, Mr. DINSMORE, of Arkansas, secured the floor, and stated that while the banquet assemblage was not a deliberative body, it was a body representing 6,000,000 voters, who cast their ballots for William Jennings Bryan. Mr. DINSMORE therefore asked that the people present vote upon the resolutions he was about to offer, which were to the effect that the United States Government recognizes the independence of Cuba, and stands ready to enforce it with arms if necessary. Toastmaster JONES called for the ayes, and there was a mighty response. When the noes were called for there was not a sound. The Senator from Arkansas then declared the resolutions passed unanimously.

And we are told to-day that the animus not only of this intrusion upon the President of another policy—not better, but worse—but the epithets and the abuse which have been visited upon the President have their basis in a higher spirit of patriotism and love of liberty than have Senators upon this side of the Chamber or upon the other side who opposed the resolutions which have just been adopted.

Mr. President, the union which has come about, the almost solidification of the Democratic party on this question, had its origin, not in a Democratic caucus, but in a Democratic symposium given to the last candidate of the Democratic party for the Presidency, and presumably its next candidate.

Mr. LINDSAY. Will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. HALE. I can not. I have only fifteen minutes, and I hope the Senator will not interrupt me.

Mr. LINDSAY. All right.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the whole country is going to know this. Republicans see it; Democrats see it; everybody sees it. It has been declared and repeated that there is no politics in this, but nothing can be plainer than that the present attitude in the Senate is a political movement. It will not succeed, Mr. President. If war must needs come, its conduct will not be in the hands of the Democratic party; if war must needs come, the country will not turn to the Democratic party for the conduct of that war; if war must needs come, it will not be by the Democratic party that the flag of the United States will be borne.

The war will be conducted—and, I hope and pray, to a speedy termination—by that great soldier and statesman, the President of the United States, and the people will rally to him. He will conduct the war and bring it to a successful end, and Senators, many of whom to-day have been free with their comments and criticisms of the President, when we are found in the situation that war is upon us, will be found opposing and impeding and obstructing the march of the President and the Republican party and of all good, conservative citizens in carrying on that war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to enter into the discussion of this question or to consume a single moment of the time of the Senate, although I have very decided views upon this question. I have believed all along, as I believe now and as I have voted, that we ought to pursue a temperate but firm policy which would insure the freedom of the people of Cuba. I have believed, as the President states, that the time has arrived when this inhuman warfare should cease on that island, and I have been prepared to give the President of the United States all the power necessary to enforce that decree when made by the American Congress.

I have noted with regret that not only here, but elsewhere in this great crisis, in this hour when we ought to have calm deliberation, our Commander in Chief has been taunted and criticised. I regard denunciation of him at this time, when I believe we are on the verge of war, as injudicious and unwise. I say to the Senator from Maine that politics can not and ought not to enter into the determination of this question. I am confident that no such party advantage has been sought, and I do not believe that either of the great parties of the nation would tolerate a leader or leaders who on such an occasion as this would combine for purely partisan purposes, unmindful of the interests of our common country.

It is true, sir, that in every war we have had there has grown up a division of opinion, partly upon political lines, as to the mode and method of conducting war; but now we have reached a final stage. Personally I believe we have gone too far, but that is my personal opinion, and I bow to the will of the great majority of this body, who are as patriotic and as earnest and as honest as I am.

When the President's message was read at the desk, to me it had but one import. That was that the President, who had been anxious and careful—overcareful, if you please—had terminated his negotiations, and he sought aid and authorization of Congress to strike the blow in which every American will sustain him; and when it does come, every loyal Democrat will stand behind the President and support him, not as Democrats, but as Americans.

Mr. ALLEN. Populists, too.

Mr. GORMAN. I regret exceedingly, and I think the time will soon come when we all will regret, that in this crisis, in this hour of the nation's trouble, and for the first time in the history of the country, this great body should incorporate in a declaration of war, which I consider it, a power which has been disputed by every Executive from Washington down—the right of Congress by law to provide for the recognition of a state. By my vote and by my voice I protest against it. But the majority of this body think otherwise, and their wisdom is greater than mine.

From now on until the end of the controversy with Spain parties will be forgotten, and Populists, Silver Republicans, Republicans, and Democrats will be the loyal supporters of an American President, and all alike will share in the honor and triumph of their country.

Mr. President, I think it is a great misfortune that on an occasion so solemn as this we do not follow the precedents, and that both Houses of Congress on this, as they did upon the only other occasion when such a question was before them, resolve themselves into secret session and there discuss matters which affect our relations with a foreign nation. This exhibition of division as to method and the criticism of the man who commands our Army and Navy and presides over our destinies ought never to have been made in open session. It would be well if the record could be blotted out. It can only now be atoned for by the firm resolve of the people, as I pledge myself here, to forget that William McKinley was elected by the Republican party, to forget that he had a fault in conducting the negotiations, whatever they were, because I believe and know that he is the President of a united people and will bear his country's flag aloft, and no nation will receive from him aught else but the manly, firm, and brave treatment of an American President.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Maine——

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Nevada has spoken, under the agreement.

Mr. STEWART. I have not spoken to-day. I desire to call attention to a mistake of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] which does great injustice to everybody concerned, and which I think he will be very glad to——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the unanimous-consent agreement ought to be strictly observed. Each Senator was by the understanding to speak once, and the Senate remained in session to give the Senator from Nevada opportunity to speak last evening, without the limitation of the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think myself that it can be contended for a moment that the Senators who spoke last night are precluded from speaking to-night. There was no such understanding on the part of the Senate, certainly not on my part. I have refrained from speaking to-day simply because I did not choose to take up the time of the Senate, believing, however, that I had the right to speak, although I spoke last night. I am willing, and always have been, to live up to the rules. I insist that the rule does not include the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I will not occupy more than five minutes. I ask five minutes now——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless the Senate shall direct otherwise, the Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I do not undertake to construe the agreement; I suppose it is as the Senator from Colorado has stated, but I wish to have it understood whether the Senator from Nevada is speaking in his right or is speaking by the indulgence of the Senate. Does the Chair rule that the Senator has a right to speak? I make no point on it. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the motion to strike out all after the resolving clause of House resolution 233 and insert Senate joint resolution 149 as amended. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I desire to say a few words, and I shall not occupy the fifteen minutes assigned to me. I have not spoken to-day nor last night nor during the debate, although I have been interested deeply in the topics discussed.

I do not agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in all that he has said. I think the proposition now made by the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is a proper one, although the statement made by the Senator from Maine can not be gainsaid, that the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Indiana, from the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is in contravention of the well-settled principles and rules of international law, proposing and injecting the recognition of a state into a declaration here that the people of the United States will enter upon the grave question by force of arms if need be, using the Army and the Navy for the purpose of establishing an independent and a free government in Cuba by the people thereof.

I have heard but one argument in defense of the proposition that we should inaugurate proceedings by the immediate and present recognition of the Republic of Cuba by the Congress of the United States, which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has shown so well is without precedent in our history. He has shown that the precedent so often cited here in debate is a precedent that does not apply at all, because in this way the recognition of the independence of the United Colonies was not made by France. There is no pretense or pretext here that there is a government in Cuba which is within the pale of international law, as exploited in all the books and as exploited by our own history from the beginning of our Government down to the present time.

Now, this amendment is forced into the joint resolution and made a part of it in face of the fact that the President of the United States has over and over again, especially when he was discharging his public duty as the President of the United States, in his last message, warned us against it; and there is no man on this floor who has had the opportunity to know the facts as the President has and has had.

I have information which I regard as without doubt correct that there is not a statement by an American consul, or a statement in any of our consular reports or by General Lee, who has been there all through, or nearly all, the Cuban revolution, in any paper, at any time or under any circumstances, that there is anything more than a skeleton government there. Yet, in the face of all that and in the face of the acknowledged facts and the opinions over and over again expressed by Senators on this floor, we find that within a few days it has come to be a reason and a primary reason, as stated by the Senator from Indiana, that there should be placed in the forefront of this resolution a recognition of the present government of Cuba.

I am glad to say, from the reading I have just heard of that resolution quoted by the Senator from Maine, that this great conclave passed a unanimous resolution for no such thing. They passed simply a resolution that the people of Cuba should be free; that there should be an independent government there. Every resolution lying upon our table, every amendment which has been offered here, falls to come up to the standard of the Senator from Indiana, declaring that this skeleton government shall have the control of the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, and the Navy and Army of the United States, with our sons and our brothers, and that those who may take charge there shall do so under the Cuban government, which, as the Senator from Alabama has so pertinently said, may, by treaty at any time, make a new convention with the parent Government of Spain, or make a convention with any of the other European governments, against the policy and interests of the people of the United States. France took good care to make no such recognition. They bound by treaty the colonies of the United States to unite with them in an offensive and defensive war against a country with which they were at war at that time.

So, Mr. President, if we are to recognize this government, let us do it in an undisputed way, by the treaty-making power, that come who may or come what will hereafter, this government which we place in the constellation of national states shall have a treaty with us whereby we shall know our relations with it. But that has passed, a majority of the Senate having voted this amendment into the joint resolution.

The object of the Senator from Minnesota, as I understand it, is to bring these great powers of this Government into accord, if possible, not upon the extreme and radical policy or principle as laid down by the Senator from Indiana, but that we shall meet the House of Representatives, take up the joint resolution which they have sent to us, and amend it as in our judgment seems wise, and see whether or not the House of Representatives will agree to the declaration of extreme policy which was placed upon this resolution by the vote of the Senate a few moments ago. There is scarcely a Senator on this floor and there are few people in the United States who are not in favor of seeing Cuba free and independent, and of using the Army and Navy, if need be, to make it a free and independent state, establishing upon our borders a government that shall not only be republican in form and essence, but which shall be a stable and a permanent one, by the people thereof.

I yield to none in my sympathy for that soldier whose letter was read here to-day, but it is one thing to have sympathy with him and his followers, and it is another to violate international law, which we are bound to support, which the President of the United States is bound to execute under his oath of office, because international law has become a part of the great body of our laws which govern this civilized State as it governs other civilized states.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not despair. I believe and hope, indeed I have no doubt but that elsewhere there will be better deliberation, if not more, and that in the end, when the joint resolution passes the two Houses, it will pass in accordance with the principles of international law as laid down and established for centuries, and that we are not now to engage in a new policy as applied to the little Republic of Cuba with a million and a half of people as against all the civilized nations of the world.

I have not heretofore spoken upon this subject. I did not believe, until the votes were counted at the desk, that it was possible for us to make this departure at the present time when we know that as soon as the government of Cuba is worthy of recognition, it will be recognized by that authority which can recognize it, and that our laws and resolutions here will be ineffectual until they are followed by that recognition which the Constitution prescribes—the Executive power—which alone can deal with this question in its final aspects.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I regret extremely, and I am sure the regret is shared by a vast majority of the Senate, that we approach the final vote upon this momentous question with divided councils. With war inevitable, with our ships on the sea and our forces on the land simply waiting for the final word of command, it is more important that the American Senate and the American Congress should be unanimous in their action than that any particular form of resolution should be adopted.

Every member of the Senate, I am sure, approaches the solution of the question with devotion to the country paramount in his heart and with a patriotic spirit, and it is unfortunate that the vote soon to be taken will disclose such radical differences.

It is, however, fortunate that the vote soon to be recorded is not to be the final action of the Senate, although the Senate has incorporated in these resolutions a recognition of the so-called Republic of Cuba against the recommendation of the President of the United States and against the judgment of the House of Representatives and of a large minority of the Senate.

I can not help believing, with the natural desire that all must feel, that Congress and the President should certainly act together in a declaration to the people of the world of our motives and purposes, that we shall within the next forty-eight hours be able to secure an agreement upon a resolution. I have too much confidence in the judgment of those who are associated with us in the great responsibilities of this hour to believe that any other result is possible. I feel very certain that in some manner and at some time we shall secure practical unanimity for the resolution which shall be finally adopted.

Speaking for myself, I can not vote for a resolution at this stage which contains a recognition of the Cuban Republic, as I believe such action would be very unwise, for reasons so forcibly stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on yesterday. When I say this I do not mean to suggest that Senators who have arrived at a different conclusion are not controlled by patriotic motives.

I was very glad to hear the allusion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to the duty of Senators on both sides of this Chamber to support the President of the United States in this emergency. This does not mean, I assume, that any member of this body is bound to vote on matters clearly within the control of Congress according to the opinions or suggestions of the President. It is the will of the majority of Congress, properly expressed, upon such matters, including the concurrence of the President of the United States, that will fix the policy of this great nation in the present emergency.

Each man is entitled to his own opinion. But we have no right at such a time to exercise functions that belong to the Executive, or which are doubtful, and to force our views on the President. I believe that it is unwise to put into the pending joint resolutions a proposition upon a matter which the President of the United States, acting in accordance with his view of the Constitution, believes to be rightfully under his control and upon which he has reached a different conclusion. I hope that when the joint resolution comes back to us, as it will within a very short time, from the committee of conference, this objectionable feature will be eliminated, and that, Democrats and Republicans alike, we shall be able to vote unanimously for the resolution which will then be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the wish expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] a moment ago induces me to ask the Senate to listen for a moment to what occurs to me as being the facts in this case, which have been overlooked by some of the gentlemen on the other side.

For weeks the country and Congress have been expecting a declaration from the President, a declaration of policy as to what should be done in Cuba. One of three things was necessary to be done. Either the island was to be held by Spain on some sort of conditions, or it was to be attached to the United States, or it was to be recognized as an independent power.

On last Monday, after this matter had been discussed among Senators here and everywhere, and after a number of us had expressed the opinion that there should be a clear and distinct declaration on the part of Congress that we intended to establish an independent government in Cuba, that there was no intention either to restore the domination of Spain or to attach that island to this country, the President's message came in, and there was a sense of disappointment that the word "independent" was not mentioned in the recommendation made by the President, and that the only recommendation made by him about the establishment of a government in the island was that there should be a stable government. Stable seemed to imply that the Government of the United States should exercise the power of supervision there to prevent an overthrow, to maintain, to uphold, or sustain whatever government might be established in the island. That was precisely what many of us did not believe ought to be said.

I for one up to that time was willing to avoid any direct and positive expression as to absolute independence, but when the President of the United States recommended a policy which failed to say that we intended to maintain the independence there, it seemed to me then to become the duty of all of us who had no disposition to be induced to engage in a war of conquest, all of us who did not intend to have the Government of the United States used as an instrument by the Government of Spain to restore the domination of that country in the Island of Cuba, to express ourselves positively on this question and to insist on independence.

Hence I was ready to vote for it. Hence the vote cast in the House of Representatives on that question by a political party. Simply because a man happened to be a Democrat certainly was no reason why he should not be allowed to say by his vote that he wanted an independent government in Cuba and did not want to acquire the island by conquest. This vote was cast in the House before the meeting to which the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa have seen fit to refer.

There had been an expression by Democrats in the House as a reply to the President's message that they were not willing to accept a proposition for a stable government without understanding what sort of a government it was to be that was to be made stable. They expressed themselves for an independent government, and that I believe is the wish of a large majority of both branches of Congress. We have a right to know what we are entering into this intervention for. We have a right to understand whether we are going to accomplish something which we approve or whether we are to intervene for the purpose of accomplishing something which we do not approve.

I beg the pardon of the Senate for interposing thus far, but I was not willing to allow the facts to go unstated, especially as the Senator from Maine, as it seems to me, was undertaking to make a little political capital out of a situation that could not be criticised at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to strike out all after the enacting clause of House joint resolution 233 and insert Senate joint resolution 149 as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted in—yeas 60, nays 28; as follows:

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So Mr. DAVIS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to strike out the preamble of House joint resolution 233 and insert the preamble of Senate joint resolution 149 in lieu thereof.

Mr. HOAR. Is that in order until the joint resolution itself has passed? I understand that an amendment has been adopted as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point is well taken.

Mr. HOAR. The vote has not yet been taken on the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to know whether it is the custom to amend the preamble before the vote is taken on the passage of a bill or resolution as amended or afterwards. I wish to address the Senate before the final passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw for the present the motion to amend the preamble.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I can not give my vote for this resolution upon its final passage for several reasons, which I desire to state.

First. It contains an affirmation contrary to the fact when it affirms that the Republic of Cuba is now free and independent in the face of what I conceive to be the fact, in the face of the declaration, as I understand it, of the person high in command in the troops of the insurgents, who has declared he could prolong the struggle to obtain that independence for twelve years.

Second. It undertakes to take from the Executive his constitutional power, a power affirmed by every Executive from the beginning, a power affirmed by our great authorities on constitutional law from Alexander Hamilton down to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who within three years, and I think also within three hours, has strongly reaffirmed that that power belongs to the Executive and can not be constitutionally exercised by Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken in quoting me. I do not care about correcting it now, but at a later day in the session I will try to point out to the Senator, as I have done heretofore, that he mistakes my statement on the subject.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I have read in the RECORD within a short time a declaration of the Senator from Alabama which I so understand.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is still mistaken, no matter what he read.

Mr. HOAR. Well, whether I am mistaken in imputing this particular opinion to my honorable friend or not, I am not mistaken in saying that he is a high authority on constitutional law, and in coupling his name with that of Alexander Hamilton as entitled to the respect of his countrymen. I hope he will not rise to correct me again.

Mr. President, I can not vote for the joint resolution because it introduces, and I believe was meant to introduce, discord and divided counsels in what ought to be the act of a united country.

I can not vote for it because it undertakes to direct, contrary to all our legislative precedents, a coordinate branch of the Government, the Executive, ordering him to proceed at once when his constitutional and legal duties are defined by the Constitution, and not by the law-making power.

I can not vote for it because it is contrary to the courtesies which prevail between the legislative and Executive and undertakes to take from the discretion of the Executive what ought to belong to him under the Constitution itself.

I will not vote for it because if it pass and the government of Cuba be now free and independent, the forces of the Army of the United States on Cuban land and the Navy of the United States in Cuban waters must be under the command of the insurgent leader or their presence there is a war against him.

Gentlemen have tried by refined and deluding arguments to torture a sentence of the President of the United States, separated from its context, into a suggestion that possibly he might be expecting to make war upon these insurgents. And yet, and you can not escape from it, you are undertaking, in your eager passion, to do something which will be unpleasant to those of your associates who support the President. You are making an affirmation, I repeat, which will put the Army and the Navy of the United States under the command of Maximo Gomez the moment they get into Cuban waters or onto Cuban soil, or their presence there is war upon the recognized and established government of the country which you say is his.

Sixth. I will not vote for it because it violates international law, and thereby in this great transaction sets the sympathy of the nations of the world against us.

Mr. President, I am not alarmed or disturbed because in the vote I am about to give I am to encounter the dissent of an excited, inflated, and angered majority.

I am old enough to remember another transaction to which this is a parallel. In the beginning of the Mexican war—a war in regard to which the feeling of the people of the United States was deeply stirred—it was attempted to coerce the minority in the two Houses of Congress by putting into the law which provided for raising troops, and supplying them, a preamble, "Whereas war exists by the act of Mexico;" and some weak Whigs of that day, fearing that their action would be unpopular, bowed the knee and affirmed by their votes what they knew and believed to be an untruth. Fourteen members of the House of Representatives, with the approval of Henry Clay, voted against that lying preamble, and to his immortal honor be it said the great commoner, though he was ready and eager for the war, declared that he would rather have his tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth than to utter, by an affirmative vote, what he knew to be an untruth.

The men who yielded in that hour of weakness and of temptation returned to their constituents. One of the most eminent and brilliant citizens of my own State, who was afterwards Speaker of the House, went home to a doom of defeat and popular disapprobation. The men who recorded their votes on the side of truth in the face of that excited majority are known to-day in our political history as the immortal fourteen.

I am willing to trust myself, my reputation, my political character, with the people of Massachusetts when I stand up here and vote against what I know, or think I know, to be untrue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed to the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the joint resolution be read at length as amended.

The joint resolution was read the third time as amended, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 239) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent, and that the Government of the United States hereby recognizes the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful Government of that island.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 67, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—67.

ABSENT—1.

Walthall.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out from House joint resolution 233 its preamble and insert therein the preamble of Senate joint resolution 149.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to strike out the preamble of House joint resolution 233 and insert the preamble of Senate joint resolution 149.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the title by substituting for the title of House joint resolution 233 the title of the Senate joint resolution 149, with this amendment: Insert, after the word "people," in the first line of the title of the Senate joint resolution, the words "and Republic;" so as to read, "for the recognition of the independence of the people and Republic of Cuba."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the title was amended so as to read:

A joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people and Republic of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. STEWART. I object.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (to Mr. DAVIS). Do not do that.

Mr. DAVIS. I insist on the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate insist on its amendments made to the joint resolution.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think it is according to parliamentary usage for the Senate at this time to do that. The House has a right to concur in the amendments if it chooses to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. That is true; but nothing is more usual than for a motion of this kind to be made.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall insist upon following the rule of the Senate, and that is that the joint resolution as amended shall go to the House.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 18, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 16, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The patriotic expressions which have come to me in numerous letters from the people of Alabama and other Southern States impelled me——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his question of personal privilege?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will state it. I felt it my duty to write a letter, which I hold in my hand——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt the House would indulge the gentleman in a personal explanation or statement, but we ought not to allow questions of personal privilege to be brought up when there are none.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House will be quite willing to grant the gentleman permission to make a statement, but it ought not to be called a question of personal privilege.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for ten minutes to present a statement. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, on the 8th of this month, impelled by a sense of duty and admiration for the noble and chivalrous spirit which had been expressed to me by many citizens of Alabama, I addressed a letter to the governor of that State, which is in these words:

MY DEAR SIR: It looks very much as though we would now become involved in war with Spain, and it would not surprise me for the President to call for volunteers in a very short time.

I am convinced that the men who could most safely go to Cuba at this time would be those from the Gulf coast, and I have so stated to the Secretary of War.

I feel it the duty of every man who has had experience in military affairs to tender his services, and I want to say that I am at your service to perform any duty you may direct.

With very high regard, your obedient servant,

JOS. WHEELER.

His Excellency Hon. JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON,
Montgomery, Ala.

Two papers of that State, without my agency or knowledge, obtained and published the letter, and the articles they have published regarding it, unless refuted, will tend to place the people of Alabama and myself in a very wrong attitude.

It will be observed that my letter simply expresses an opinion that—

The men who could most safely go to Cuba at this time would be those from the Gulf coast.

This innocent paragraph is sought to be construed by the articles in these journals as a contention that Southern people would be expected to bear the brunt of the pending war.

One of the papers, the Birmingham Age-Herald, of April 14, published an article signed by a man named Ball, which contains expressions some of which I will read. It says:

But has General WHEELER a right to suggest to Governor Johnston or the Secretary of War that the fighting should be done by men from the Gulf States? Why should Southern men be expected to bear the brunt of the trouble?

The article also, in referring to Southern men, says:

Why should they be chosen as the only suitable men to furnish targets for the Spanish bullets and Spanish torpedoes? If there is one section of the country in which the masses of the people have taken little part in forcing this issue it is the South, and it appears the height of absurdity and injustice to have General Wheeler at Washington instructing the War Secretary as to the propriety of fighting the war.

The article then states:

Southern men stand ready to do their duty at all times and in all emergencies, but that should not furnish a reason to General Wheeler or any other Congressman to insist that they and they only should do all the fighting in a war they are entirely innocent of bringing about.

These and other expressions, none of which have any warrant whatever from my letter or anything else which I have said or done, are being construed by papers throughout the country as an indication that there exists a sentiment in Alabama which, to say the least, lacks an enthusiastic desire to engage in military service. Even with such a construction it does the brave and patriotic men of Alabama great injustice.

Letters which I received from Alabama this morning insist that the expressions contained in the Birmingham Age-Herald, and the other paper, the Montgomery Advertiser, only voiced the sentiments of the writers of these articles, and they utterly repudiate the effort on the part of the writers of the articles, who seem to desire to create an impression that such feelings are general in that State.

I know the editors of the Birmingham Age-Herald and the Montgomery Advertiser. They are chivalrous men, sons of chivalrous sires, and I am confident that these communications do not express their sentiments; not only that, but I feel certain that they will meet their hearty disapproval.

They feel as I do, that we must show to the world that American blood and American wealth will be poured forth freely in the defense of American honor.

I desire, in one word, to say that that noble State, with its healthy, salubrious, and delightful climate, its fertile soil, and its rich minerals, limitless in quantity, and the industry and enterprise of its people, have placed it in the front rank of progression; but these material blessings have not lessened the undaunted chivalry and noble patriotism and devotion to country of these people—a people who regard the maintenance of our honor and prestige of our country as far above material progress as the heavens are above the earth; and I am unwilling that they should rest for a single moment under the reflection which can be drawn and which has been drawn from the articles to which I refer.

I know the people of Alabama. I have seen their dauntless courage exhibited on hundreds of fields of battle. I am one of those who still hope and pray that we may have an honorable peace, but if war comes upon us, and I fear that it will, the question will not be, Who shall go? but it will be, Who shall be given this highest honor and greatest privilege to fight for our country, its safety and its honor? and I know that when the call to arms is sounded the brave men of Alabama will be in the front rank of the foremost volunteers to fight the battles of our great Republic.

During the last month my mail has been filled with evidences of their devotion to our country and our country's cause, and in speaking for the people of Alabama I will say that the chivalrous men who fought in that terrible conflict from 1861 to 1865, and their equally noble sons, inspired as they are by the fame earned by their sires, all stand ready to place their lives and treasure on the altar of duty. They are ready to meet any foe; they are ready to encounter the diseases of any clime, and in the defense of the honor, prestige, and safety of their country, they stand eager to lead where any dare to follow. [Applause.]

MRS. CHRISTINE C. BARNARD.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 504, "An act granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. F. STALLINGS,
J. R. HOWE,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
JNO. L. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Senate bill 504 granted a pension to Christine C. Barnard at the rate of $40 a month, which was amended by the House to $30. The adoption of the conference report herewith presented allows the bill to become a law as amended by the House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GLEN ECHO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 924) on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. This comes up as unfinished business. This bill has been read three or four times, and I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill and that it be taken up in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is it?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is a bill relating to a railroad company.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the present parliamentary situation of the bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. It is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know anything about the bill.

Mr. LOUD. We discussed it very thoroughly one whole day and did not touch it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, what is the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill in which the Senate disagrees to the House amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to make some request about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman requested that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that the matter be now considered in the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments to the bill and agree to the conference requested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

MARY J. DAY.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent No. 20694 to Mary J. Day, inventor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to grant an extension for seven years on letters patent No. 20694 to Mary J. Day, inventor, Orange County, N. Y.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the report accompanying the bill states the matter quite fully.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read, reserving the right to object after we see what the nature of it is.

The SPEAKER. All rights are reserved. The Chair desires to say that all these proceedings are by unanimous consent.

The report (by Mr. HICKS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent to Mrs. Mary J. Day, submit the following report:

Mrs. Mary J. Day, the beneficiary under this bill, obtained April 23, 1891, letters patent No. 20694, for a period of seven years, for a new and useful invention and design for a pressing board. She was led to believe at the time she filed her application that she could not obtain a patent for a longer term than the period designated. She now seeks by this bill to have her patent extended for the term to which she was entitled, under the statute, and which, except for mistake of the law and her adviser, she would have originally obtained. The patent is for an ironing or pressing board, and the petitioner for relief is a poor woman, who is just now beginning to reap the benefits of her skill and genius in her useful invention.

Your committee are satisfied of the merits of the claim, as well as its justice, and unanimously recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one or two questions of the gentleman in charge of the bill. If I understand the report correctly, it does not seek to extend this patent beyond the life of an ordinary patent?

Mr. HICKS. That is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. It seems there was an application for only seven years, which was granted, at that time under a misapprehension of her right to petition for a longer term?

Mr. HICKS. That is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. And this does not extend beyond the life of an ordinary patent?

Mr. HICKS. That is so.

Mr. McMILLIN. While I am opposed to an extension of a patent beyond seventeen years, I do not know that I have any objection to this bill.

A MEMBER. Does the Secretary of the Interior recommend this bill?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. ODELL, who introduced the bill, informed me that he had investigated the facts and that they were entirely satisfactory.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the Commissioner of Patents or the Secretary of the Interior recommended the bill?

Mr. HICKS. I can not say about that. The device is a simple device, an ironing board, patented by a washerwoman. She was deceived at the time she made her application, and it was only made for seven years instead of the ordinary time for which it should have been made. Within the last few years she has just begun to realize on the patent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not know there was any law under which a patent could be secured for less than the ordinary term of years.

Mr. HICKS. I did not know it until this case disclosed it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand that the committee reported the bill without any opinion from the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Patents?

Mr. HICKS. The committee investigated the facts thoroughly and decided that it was a case of extraordinary merit, and unanimously voted to vote for an increase or extension of the length of time to which she would have been entitled under the law.

Mr. DOCKERY. My sympathies are very strongly with the washerwoman, the beneficiary of the patent, but they are equally strong in behalf of the people who are compelled to use the device patented. Of course the effect of the continuance of this patent is to increase the price of the article patented.

Mr. HICKS. I regret that I have not here a copy of the device in my possession, so that I might show it to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not believe the bill ought to pass, although I shall make no objection to it. I think the committee is subject to some censure and criticism for not taking the opinion of the proper officers.

Mr. HICKS. The committee is willing to submit to the censure if my friend from Missouri will not oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has a report of the Committee on Printing which I would like to have him make.

BRIDGE ACROSS PORTAGE LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. SHELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3154, to amend an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new section, to stand as section 7, as follows:

"SEC. 7. That all railroad companies desiring to use that portion of said bridge constructed for railroad purposes shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passing over the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation, to be paid to the owner or owners thereof; and if the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or either or any of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid under the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using the same, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties, of which hearing each party shall have due notice, and the determination of the Secretary of War thereof shall be binding upon the parties to such controversy."

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the report will be read. This is a very important measure.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. CORLISS), as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3154) amending an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the cities of Houghton and Hancock," approved March 3, 1891, report the same back, and recommend its passage.

This measure amends the original act by granting authority to permit the use of the bridge by such other railway companies as may desire the same, upon a just and fair compensation.

This measure is heartily indorsed by the Chief of Engineers, whose report thereon in herewith submitted and made a part hereof.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, January 19, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter, dated the 14th instant, from the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, inclosing for the views of the War Department thereon S. 3154, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across Portage Lake, Houghton County, Mich., between the villages of Houghton and Hancock,' approved March 3, 1891."

The act of March 3, 1891, authorized the construction by the county of Houghton, Mich., of a free bridge, with roadways and footways, and it appears from a reading of the whole act that what is known as a wagon and foot bridge, and not a railroad bridge, was contemplated by Congress. The plans for this bridge were not submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval as required by the act, and it appears that the bridge was built as a wagon-road bridge overhead, with a railroad through bridge underneath. It is understood that the lower story of the bridge has been leased by the county of Houghton to a corporation known as the Mineral Range Railroad Company.

The object of the bill under consideration is to make it possible for any railroad company desiring to use the bridge for the passage of trains to do so upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use. The effect of this would be to lessen the demand for other bridges across this important waterway, and in this way the navigation interests would be benefited.

I know of no objection, therefore, to the passage of the bill by Congress, so far as those interests are concerned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will inform the House whether the bridge is located on Portage Lake, where it will obstruct navigation. It is an important waterway and many vessels go up to the copper mines there, and I think it ought to be understood.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, as I reported the bill to the House, I will state that this bridge was built twenty years ago by the county of Houghton and has been used a number of years both as a highway and a railroad bridge. The object of this bill is to prevent the construction of another railroad bridge across this lake and important navigable water. The object of the bill is to give the use of this bridge already built, at the option of the county, to other railroads as well as the one now using it. It is in the interest of navigation, and there can be no objection to it.

Mr. LOUD. Was the other bridge built under a statute?

Mr. SHELDEN. It was.

Mr. LOUD. Why, if it was built as the result of a statute, did it not conform to the usual requirements?

Mr. SHELDEN. It did.

Mr. LOUD. The report emphatically states that the plans of this bridge were never submitted to the Chief of Engineers. Now, may it not be possible that the bridge obstructs navigation and the effect of this subsequent legislation may be to validate it?

Mr. SHELDEN. No, sir.

Mr. CORLISS. Let me answer the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] by informing him that this bridge, though not originally constructed under an act of Congress, is now in operation in accordance with the requirements of the War Department and the needs of navigation.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the report of the committee state to the contrary?

Mr. CORLISS. It does not. It states that the bridge was originally constructed without the authority of Congress twenty-odd years ago, but that it complies with all the requirements of navigation and is maintained in accordance with the legal regulations with reference to navigable streams. The object of this bill is that people who might otherwise desire to build bridges may be induced to use this one instead of obstructing navigation further. The bill is heartily indorsed by the Department and the engineers.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMPILATION OF PARLIAMENTARY PRECEDENTS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 237) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed the usual number of copies of a compilation of parliamentary precedents of the United States House of Representatives, and that in addition to the said usual number there be printed and bound 500 copies, 1 copy for each member and each committee of the House, the residue to be deposited in the library of the House, said compilation to be made by Asher C. Hinds, clerk at the Speaker's table, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, the said clerk to be paid on the completion of the work, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $3,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, and is to be in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the report of the Committee on Printing, which very fully explains the purpose of this resolution, may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing have considered House resolution 227, providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives, and direct me to report the same to the House of Representatives with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment as follows: After the word "work," in line 11, add the following words: "with a proper index."

This compilation has been made by Asher C. Hinds, the present clerk at the Speaker's table.

The estimated cost of printing and binding this document is $3,091.

The compilation was begun prior to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the purpose of facilitating the parliamentary work of the clerk at the Speaker's table by having in a classified and convenient form the rulings of the Speakers and the Chairmen of the Committees of the Whole. Scattered as they are through scores of volumes of RECORDS, Globes, and Journals, it is a matter of considerable trouble to get together the precedents bearing upon any particular point, especially if they are required during the transaction of the business of the House. It is the aim of the work to present each precedent in the light of the rules which governed the House at the time it was made, and for the statements of all the earlier precedents the Journals and the RECORDS of the debates have been compared. As much of the compilation as is completed has been in daily use in the House, and has been enlarged, corrected, and verified by the investigations that have gone on from time to time in regard to points of order arising in the House and in the Committee of the Whole.

It will be the aim of the work when completed to include all the precedents in use under the practice of the House. The collection at present amounts to 1,200 or 1,300. Before it is completed for publication it will probably amount to more than 1,600. It is impossible to give the number exactly, as about fifty years of the earlier history of the House have not been fully examined. The work will include precedents from the First Congress to and including the present session (second) of the Fifty-fifth. It is not expected that the work will contain all the precedents of the House, many of which are obsolete, but such as are in use and such as have been collected in the investigation of questions before the House. The rulings of the Speakers for the last eight years have been collected and classified with particular care. The rulings of Chairmen of Committees of the Whole, not heretofore collected and classified in large numbers, quite fully cover the principles involved in the proceedings of those committees.

The index of the work will aim to meet the wants of members examining particular as well as general features of the parliamentary practice of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This joint resolution, as gentlemen have observed from the reading, provides for printing a compilation which has been prepared of parliamentary precedents of this House. Quite a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House have examined this compilation so far as it has proceeded, and they all think the work possesses great merit and should be printed for the use of the House.

This resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], a very old and experienced member, as we all know; and it meets not only his approval, but that of every other gentleman on this as well as the other side of the House who has examined it. I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, there is one portion of this resolution in which I heartily concur, and that is in the omission it makes. I approve of it because it does not include all of the decisions heretofore rendered. I suppose that omission refers to decisions in Committee of the Whole; for if some of these decisions were photographed, they would present most shining examples. [Laughter.] I heartily concur in that part of the resolution, therefore, that leaves out some of the decisions.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be considered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 11, after the word "work," insert the words "with a proper index."

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Is it proposed to embody this whole publication in one volume?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HARBOR OF SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 175) for the survey of the harbor of Sheboygan, Wis.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested and directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wis., to ascertain the best method and expense of preventing the injurious effects of the northeast seas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire some explanation of this matter.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment proposed to the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution:

"And that the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to report as to the advisability of the project."

Mr. BARNEY. I will explain to the gentleman from Texas the reason for making this request at this time.

This has been, I will state, unanimously reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the circumstances which make necessary the application at this time are these: This is, in the first place, one of the most important harbors on Lake Michigan. Last fall an immense amount of damage was done to the shipping in that harbor, and to the docks, by a heavy northeast storm, and, in order to prevent the recurrence of such a disaster, it is desirable that we shall have an estimate for erecting this protecting work in the harbor. In fact, it should have been done very long ago; and this is only a request for a survey to determine as to the best plan in the future.

Of course, this work is preliminary, and it is anticipated that an appropriation will be asked for hereafter. But all we desire now is information as to the best plan to protect the harbor, and for that reason we ask to have this survey made, if possible, this summer, by the engineers who are now employed by the Government there, so that the plans can be prepared and the matter brought to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at the next session of Congress, or when a river and harbor appropriation bill shall be presented.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me ask the gentleman if this does not necessarily involve an appropriation?

Mr. BARNEY. No, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. But how can the work be done without money?

Mr. BARNEY. Well, there is a board of engineers there, employed by the Government.

Mr. TALBERT. And already paid?

Mr. BARNEY. Yes.

Mr. MINOR. Already employed by the Government.

Mr. SIMPSON. What is the purpose hereafter? To build a breakwater?

Mr. BARNEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. And that, of course, will involve an appropriation.

Mr. BARNEY. Of course it will involve an appropriation, but that will be a matter to be considered hereafter, when this survey is made. This harbor is, of course, entitled to its proper share in any river and harbor bill that may be passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. What makes the harbor of Sheboygan so important?

Mr. MINOR. It is one of the largest coal-distributing harbors on the lakes.

Mr. BARNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that this is a city of somewhere about 30,000 inhabitants, one of the largest and most important manufacturing towns in Wisconsin, and I believe is the largest coal-distributing point on the lakes, except, perhaps, Milwaukee. It has not only an immense trade in coal, but in other commodities as well.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is, coal shipped in there and distributed from that point?

Mr. BARNEY. Yes; shipped there by water and sent by rail from there to all portions of the Northwest.

Mr. SIMPSON. Have you any knowledge as to the number of tons shipped per annum?

Mr. BARNEY. I have not personally, but my friend who sits on my left [Mr. STEVENS] assures me that it amounts to about 2,000,000 tons; and I can state to the gentleman that the States of Minnesota and Dakota and other parts of the Northwest are supplied almost entirely with coal from Sheboygan.

Mr. LOUD. About how long has this been a considerable shipping point?

Mr. MINOR. For twenty years.

Mr. SIMPSON. Oh, yes; for thirty-five years.

Mr. BARNEY. As the gentleman says, for a great many years; but it has grown to very great importance within the last ten or twelve years.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman for information if there is anybody on the River and Harbor Committee who is familiar with this matter and can tell about how many of these bills have been thus far passed? I would like to ask also about how much money is involved in the various bills that have been passed? It seems to me that we have new surveys enough now to make a river and harbor bill aggregating sixty, seventy, or even a hundred millions of dollars, without including the old works.

Mr. BARNEY. The question here is whether we have or have not, under the circumstances, a right to ask this. This harbor is one of the most important ones, as I have said, and we are certainly entitled to some consideration. This is a reasonable request; it asks for no appropriation until the matter has been determined by the engineers of the Government, when an effort will be made to secure a proper appropriation in the next river and harbor bill, if the work is reported upon favorably; and it is particularly desirable, in view of the disaster that recently happened there, that some steps should be taken to secure this particular improvement.

Mr. LOUD. You have waited twenty or thirty years. Can you not wait the same as all the rest of us have to wait now?

Mr. BARNEY. We have had from year to year some appropriations for this harbor, and this is a particular kind of improvement which I should like to have investigated, so that the River and Harbor Committee at its next session can act advisedly and with proper information before it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is it not a fact that this is desirable now on account of the very large increase in the larger vessels over what we have had heretofore—vessels having a much greater draft of water?

Mr. BARNEY. I am not an expert in such matters, but I am told that the fact that it is a deep-water harbor has perhaps made a difference in the damage which these northeast storms have done. It is on account of its being a deep-water harbor that it is such a large coal-shipping port.

Mr. SIMPSON. Owing to the fact that in the last twenty-five years the size of vessels has increased. Of course, before that time a vessel drawing 12 feet was the average, and now they draw 20 feet. Therefore is it not desirable that this harbor should be deepened?

Mr. BARNEY. That is not the purpose of this resolution. I think it now has a depth of 18 feet, and a survey has been already made to secure a depth of 21 feet.

Mr. MINOR. About that depth, but really that is involved.

Mr. BARNEY. That may be involved hereafter, but it is desired to have this breakwater to prevent the great damage to the vessels in the harbor and at the dock and to the works already constructed by the city and the Government.

Mr. MINOR. Is it not a fact that it did become necessary to widen the entrance to the Sheboygan River, and that the city purchased a strip of land in order to give it more width, and straightened that channel, and that it ceded that land to the Government, and the Government has built a new pier and dredged out the channel so that it makes a straight course for the sea to roll in, and that is what causes the destruction of the shipping in the river?

Mr. BARNEY. That is the fact, that the Government, by widening the channel and building the pier in the way it has, has made a straight course for the northeast seas to sweep in and do this damage. And it is also a fact that the city of Sheboygan has heretofore ceded to the Government a large amount of very valuable property, as stated.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I should like to suggest the position that I myself occupy in this matter. My associate counsel [Mr. CANNON] gave notice here the other day that he should object to the next one of these cases that came up. That was his statement, made after consultation with me, with the understanding that I was to bear one-half of the odium. Now, I made my statement public the other day. I wish the gentleman would allow this to go over until Monday or Tuesday. Then I can have an opportunity to consult with my associate [laughter] until we can determine who shall take the responsibility of objecting to the first case.

Mr. PERKINS. One-half of the odium will not count.

Mr. BARNEY. I have already consulted with the gentleman's associate and laid this matter before him, and he thought that it was peculiar in its circumstances, and he also took into consideration the fact that it did not involve any appropriation at the present time. The Government employees are there, and the information is necessary to lay before the River and Harbor Committee at the next session of this body, when it is expected that that committee will act. They ought to have this information before them, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I feel sure thought there was no reason why they should not have it.

Mr. LOUD. I am very sorry my associate is not here. I wish somebody would look him up. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from California——

Mr. BARNEY. I would not be at all afraid to have him here, for the reasons already given.

Mr. LOUD. I think he is around the House somewhere. Perhaps he has been induced to quit.

Mr. SIMPSON. Perhaps it would be as well for the gentleman from California to go out and hunt him up. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. I think that would be the best thing I could do.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from California that I am sure he could not rely with safety upon his associate in this case in the event the gentleman from California desires to object to the bill, because the gentleman who now offers the bill [Mr. BARNEY] is an exceedingly efficient member of the Committee on Appropriations, over which his associate [Mr. CANNON] presides as chairman.

Mr. LOUD. I understand that, but the next case that is coming up, I understand, is in charge of an associate of mine on my committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Leave that to me. I will attend to that.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps I had better determine this.

Mr. SIMPSON. You had better pair them. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. I hope the House can see the condition to which we have arrived. You have opened the doors to unanimous consent to the passage of bills of this kind, and there can be no possible end to that until somebody shall make himself obnoxious enough to stop further inroads upon the public Treasury. It is true you do not propose to put your arms into the Treasury today, but by this act you propose to get four years nearer to it than you would by pursuing the proper, legitimate, and lawful course. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. What has that course to be?

Mr. LOUD. Why, first, to apply for a preliminary examination is required of all men, I suppose, who have a sense of modesty, which takes two years; then a survey, which takes two more years.

Mr. DALZELL. Who told you that?

Mr. LOUD. Why, I have had that experience, permit me to say.
Mr. RICHARDSON. In other men's cases?
Mr. LOUD. As I said the other day, with that experience going over six years, until I had succeeded in getting some work probably as necessary as that at Sheboygan, or wherever it is, Wisconsin or Michigan——
Mr. BARNEY. Wisconsin.
Mr. LOUD. Ready for an appropriation; when lo and behold, the House determined that they will pass no river and harbor bill; and my successor will probably derive great credit for having secured a very large appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of San Francisco, which harbor, by the way, has never had any money out of the Government, and we are particularly modest over there. Perhaps you might not think so by the action of some members from that State on this floor; but we proceed in a regular, orderly manner, a manner which was broken into at the last session of Congress the first time, I believe, it had ever been broken into since we had river and harbor bills. Well, one session more, perhaps, and you will have reports singly upon cases of this kind for the improvement of harbors——
Mr. SIMPSON. And in the meantime all these improvements will be destroyed, because all the work that has been done there had to wait these six years before further improvement could be made.
Mr. LOUD. What work has gone on there?
Mr. SIMPSON. What advantage will it be to the Government?
Mr. LOUD. What work has been done there?
Mr. BARNEY. They have had a full survey for general improvements, and this asks for a survey where a further improvement is needed.
Mr. LOUD. Something more than you have already obtained. You have not got enough.
Mr. BARNEY. Because the improvement already made has not turned out as expected, and this asks for it in only one particular place, which will be the breakwater of the mouth of the river and prevent inroads from the northeast sea.
Mr. LOUD. I can not object to this, because I see a colleague of the gentleman from Wisconsin looking anxiously if not angrily at me.
Mr. MINOR. You do not refer to me?
Mr. LOUD. No; it is a colleague of yours who brought up a bill here four or five years ago, to which I objected, and I do not think he has forgotten it; and when I consider both gentlemen I shall not object.
Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman asks what work the Government has done at Sheboygan Harbor. They have built a pier, and the waves are now destroying it for want of new work.
Mr. LOUD. That is simply the understanding of the gentleman.
Mr. SIMPSON. No; the gentleman so stated.
Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman from California a single question.
Mr. LOUD. It is not my bill.
Mr. HILL. The gentleman has spoken about his partner or associate. I would like to understand if any Democratic member has entered into this partnership by which unanimous consents are to be objected to.
Mr. LOUD. My associate is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].
Mr. HILL. I have noticed that three or four bills have been brought up by the Democratic side to which no objection has been made, and I would like to have an understanding so as to know on what line to proceed.
Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman had been here he would not have put himself in the ridiculous position that he has before this House. I am a Republican member—as good a Republican as he is.
Mr. HILL. I do not raise any question about the gentleman's Republicanism. I simply ask if there is any Democratic partner in this partnership of which he has spoken. I make no criticism of the gentleman's Republicanism and do not accept any criticism upon mine either. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SIMS. Now, I have a river already surveyed and I want to get the good results that are to accrue from its improvement.
Mr. RICHARDSON. Why should this river require another survey?
Mr. SIMS. And we can not get any river and harbor bill, but we may get all the benefits of a river and harbor bill in particular localities by following up these cases, and if that is done I do not suppose we will ever have another bill.
Mr. BARNEY. This is preliminary to the river and harbor bill.
Mr. SIMS. My preliminaries are all gone through and we are ready for the bill.
Mr. BARNEY. If we get enough preliminaries we may have a bill this session; but we will certainly get it at the next session of this House.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GRIGGS. I object, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made.
Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report.
Mr. LOUD. Now the pressure begins. I object to the pressure.
Mr. GRIGGS. I withdraw my objection.
The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his proposition?
Mr. PERKINS. I withhold my proposition.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which the Clerk will report.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 175) for the survey of the harbor of Sheboygan, Wis.

Mr. SIMS. Now, I object unless we can get a new partnership by which we can get through several of these bills.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SIMS. I do object positively for the present.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE OF APRIL 11, 1898.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration for a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with Senate Report 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba, 6,500 for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 33, to print 20,000 copies of the message of the President of April 11, 1898, together with Senate Report 885, being the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of printing under this resolution at $6,165.

The resolution was agreed to.

HARBOR OF SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] will withdraw the objection that he just made.
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have been assured that I will meet with the same kind of treatment in support of a similar measure, and I now withdraw my objection.
The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Where two objections are made, the Chair desires to have the House take the responsibility of this matter. The Clerk will report the title again of the act for which unanimous request for consideration is made.
The Clerk again read the title.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Missouri?
Mr. BARNEY. I yield, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. DOCKERY. I do not object to this bill, but I avail myself of the present occasion to say that under the present method of disposing of these matters coming from the River and Harbor Committee it seems to me that the next river and harbor bill will reach tremendous proportions. If these measures continue to be approved by the House, it does seem to me that there should be some sort of classification made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We have such a classification in relation to light-houses. They are classed in the estimates under three heads—"indispensable," "necessary," and "desirable."
Now, I beg to suggest to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or the members of that committee who may be present, that some classification similar to the one that has heretofore obtained in respect to light-houses should be applied to these works reported from the committee day by day.
Mr. LOUD. They are all indispensable.
Mr. DOCKERY. They may be from certain standpoints, but I am speaking, if the gentleman from California will understand me, from the standpoint only of the public interest and the public service.
Mr. LOUD. I think I have got some indispensable to my representation in Congress.
Mr. DOCKERY. That may be; it may involve your right to a seat on the floor; but, in all seriousness, it does seem to me that if we are to continue daily to repeal the existing statutes by special provisions for surveys, so as to secure recognition in the next river and harbor bill, that bill, instead of carrying liabilities of about seventy-eight millions, as the last one did in direct appropriations and contract liabilities, will considerably surpass the stupendous total of one hundred millions.
I again suggest to the committee the propriety of classifying

the works, so that when the Secretary of War submits estimates to the next Congress it shall be not only on the question of the desirability of certain works, but he shall also submit reports grouping the works, so that Congress may provide, first, for those classed as "indispensable;" second, those classed as "necessary," and last, those classed as "desirable."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to say that I agree with him in the importance of his suggestion; but I want to suggest to him that there is an inherent difficulty in this whole business—one that makes it impossible to carry it out.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I catch the gentleman's idea from the language of the withdrawal of a certain objection made a moment since. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to this particular measure.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report as to the advisability of the project.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, if any member of the River and Harbor Committee is present to answer, why they have reported every bill for a survey, so far as my memory serves me, without this provision?

Mr. BARNEY. The gentleman from Ohio is here, and can answer that question.

Mr. BURTON. I will say that the law provides that the report of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers shall state the facts with reference to the project and report as to the desirability.

Mr. LOUD. Does the law require him to report to Congress regarding the desirability after you have directed him to make a survey and estimate the cost?

Mr. BURTON. What is the amendment you propose to make? I did not hear it.

Mr. LOUD. The usual amendment, whether in the opinion of the Secretary of War the improvement is desirable or necessary. Here you go on and direct the Secretary of War to make a survey, to estimate the cost; and do you say, representing the committee, that the engineer making the survey must report to Congress as to the desirability of the project that you have directed him to submit an estimate of cost upon?

Mr. BURTON. An estimate is made of the cost and a report is made as to whether the work is a desirable improvement or not. I concede, most decidedly, that it is best such a provision should be inserted.

Mr. LOUD. If there is a general provision of law on the subject, that would, of course, apply in the first instance to the preliminary examination, and there would necessarily be a report upon the desirability of the work. But when we direct the Secretary of War to make a survey and submit to Congress an estimate of the cost of the proposed improvement, does the gentleman undertake to say that the Secretary of War must report upon the desirability of the work?

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from California will discover on examination of these resolutions that in general—there may possibly be exceptions—they pertain to improvements already reported upon and reported to be desirable. In this case, for instance, the harbor has been improved already; the lines of improvement suggested here have been completed in part; so that we may regard the desirability of the improvement as a matter already settled. I believe that in practically all these instances (though, as I have stated, there may be exceptions) that state of affairs will be found to appear.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the assumption of the gentleman is correct, because I believe some of the reports here have referred to absolutely new work. But, as an illustration, suppose that a portion of a harbor had been surveyed, does the gentleman assume that that survey, that preliminary examination, could be accepted as applying to another portion of the harbor, an entirely different character of work?

Mr. BURTON. No; not an entirely different project.

Mr. LOUD. I can not understand, then, why a committee that has not had any great amount of work to do during this Congress should flood this House with resolutions ordering surveys, but not including this precautionary provision which appears to be very necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from California will allow me to suggest that the amendment usually adopted in these cases was born of a certain fact or condition, and that was that the last river and harbor appropriation bill carried appropriations or liabilities amounting in round numbers to $10,696,000, upon which neither the Chief of Engineers nor the Secretary of War had expressed an opinion.

Mr. BURTON. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; I have made that statement over and over again, and it is as true as Holy Writ.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman does not assume that the statement is true because he has made it "over and over again?"

Mr. DOCKERY. That statement, which I have repeated here frequently, can not be successfully challenged. It was made upon official information. That is the reason this amendment has been added to all the other bills; and I am glad the gentleman from California has now invited the attention of my friend from Ohio to the necessity of the amendment, so that in reporting bills of this character hereafter, if such bills are to be reported, the amendment may come from the committee.

I repeat the statement that the necessity for such an amendment arose from a condition of affairs which upon information from official reports was found to exist—that the last river and harbor appropriation bill recognized projects amounting to more than $10,000,000 where neither the Chief of Engineers (I am not speaking of the local engineer) nor the Secretary of War had passed upon the propriety of the works. I do not say that they were improper projects; I want gentlemen to understand me in that respect. They may have been worthy objects for all that I know. But I simply say they did not have the sanction of either the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War.

Mr. LOUD. And under those circumstances you will not give them your indorsement?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not want to give an impromptu indorsement.

Mr. BURTON. I am satisfied the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in the statement he has just made, just as President Cleveland was mistaken in many statements contained in his veto message. At any rate, this House should not abdicate to the War Department its right to determine what harbors should or should not be improved. If we are going to do that, we might just as well appropriate a lump sum and leave its disposition entirely in the hands of that Department.

Mr. LOUD. When we are passing these propositions by unanimous consent, would it not be best to have an opinion from the War Department as to whether the proposed improvement is advisable or not?

Mr. BURTON. Precisely; and we have had such an opinion in each case where the committee has acted favorably.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF ARANSAS PASS HARBOR, TEXAS.

Mr. KLEBERG. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House concurrent resolution No. 27, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates, and to direct and make a survey, if deemed necessary, for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, and especially to make plans and estimates for the removal of the sand bar at Aransas Pass and the deepening of the channel across said bar to a depth of at least 20 feet and a width of at least 150 feet at the bottom, so as to furnish an inlet for the passage of vessels from the Gulf of Mexico into Aransas Harbor; and in preparing said plans, specifications, and estimates the Secretary of War, or such Government engineers as he may designate to do the work, may consider the feasibility of utilizing such breakwaters now at said pass, constructed by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, or the utilizing of any part of the same, and the value such use of such breakwater or material may be to the United States in deepening said channel; and in the estimate of such valuation any permanent damage which, in the opinion of the Government engineers, may have occurred by reason of the construction of said breakwater to said harbor or pass, or additional expense to the United States made necessary by reason of said attempted improvements in future improvements of said harbor or pass, shall also be considered by said engineers and reported by them.

That the Secretary of War is further directed to report to Congress at its next session; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of such plans, specifications, estimates, or survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman from California will not object until he hears an explanation from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to enter into a little controversy with my friend here from Texas. After that the gentleman from Iowa can object if he desires to do so.

I would like to hear, before consent is given, a most thorough and comprehensive explanation of this bill. I have a grave suspicion that there is something about this Aransas Pass matter that has been here before, and therefore I would like to have an accurate explanation, which of course the gentleman from Texas can and will give. There is more in this proposition, it seems, or something that goes at least beyond what has been done heretofore with reference to this improvement, and I should be very glad to know from him the exact facts to determine whether I am justified in making the objection that I have heretofore thought proper to make on nearly all of these matters.

Mr. KLEBERG. I will be very glad to respond fully to the request of the gentleman from California.

In 1890 the Congress of the United States authorized the Aransas Pass Harbor Company to improve the harbor of Aransas Pass at its own private expense, under certain conditions specified in the granting act. That company has proceeded and attempted to construct certain breakwaters at the pass. It has been at work for some length of time, and then for a considerable period of time the work lapsed, the company doing no work whatever upon the breakwater. The act has been extended from time to time, and under the law will terminate in January next. At that time the right of the company expires.

There is nothing in the act itself which compels, either morally or legally, the Government to assume these breakwaters and pay the expense of their construction—nothing whatever. And there is nothing in it that will authorize the company to have a monopoly there, either, in case it shall complete the work.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to proceed with an explanation of this matter. This company has been at work for a considerable period, I say, whether in good faith or not I do not know, to construct the breakwater. It has failed and virtually given up the work at the pass.

In the Fifty-fourth Congress a board of engineers was authorized, by an act then passed, to ascertain the amount of the work done by the company and the cost of the same to them, as well as the value of the work for the improvement of the harbor to the Government. That board consisted of three army engineers—an entirely impartial board. They were sent down by the Secretary of War, and they made a thorough examination of the breakwater, and also a thorough examination of the harbor and its requirements.

They have been there, I believe, two or three times in connection with that work, and made a report to this Congress, in which they stated that the breakwater is absolutely worthless to the Government and that it is of no value. They say at the same time that this harbor—the importance of which the Government can not ignore—should be improved, and that the Government should improve it, and speak of the necessity for the work being done promptly.

Mr. LOUD. Not to interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask how far Aransas Pass is from Sabine Pass or Galveston?

Mr. KLEBERG. About 150 or 200 miles from Galveston, and I suppose 300 or 350 miles from Sabine Pass.

The importance of this harbor is conceded, Mr. Speaker, and the necessity for its improvement will not be questioned. This is especially emphasized by the report of the engineers, who say that the Government should not ignore this harbor, that the work is indispensable, while that done by the private company is worthless and worse than worthless, because of the fact that it will possibly involve an expenditure on the part of the Government to remove what they have done.

Mr. LOUD. Then why ask the Government to acquire the right to this work if it is worthless?

Mr. KLEBERG. Let me continue, and I think I will fully answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman asked a full explanation, and I wish to make it.

Now, upon that report I introduced the bill for the improvement of the harbor by the Government, and in that bill I provided that this company should not receive one single cent pay for the work they have done, and that the Government should not proceed until they have filed a perfect and complete release or until some court of justice has recognized their claim and which shall determine how much they are entitled to. Or, in other words, if they do not release their claim, that they must go to court on condemnation proceedings.

Now, when the bill came before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the question necessarily arose as to the value of the work done by this company, and whether they are not entitled to some compensation, and if entitled to pay, how much? I say, frankly, I do not think they are entitled to anything. The issue between myself and the company is made up. I will say that the Government ought not to have to pay a single solitary cent. They claim something, and are insisting upon it before the committee. When we were before the committee it was suggested that nothing could be done until plans and estimates were made of the cost required for the improvement of the harbor, and also the extent of the breakwater placed there by this company and the cost of it, and all of the facts whatever, with reference to which appropriations should be made.

It was then ascertained that the Secretary of War could make this estimate. In fact, the same engineers who have made this other report can make it without any survey and can make it without any expense, so that an intelligent basis can be arrived at if there should be any disposition on the part of this Congress or of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report a river and harbor bill, so that this harbor will stand on an equal footing with other harbors and can receive an appropriation.

Now, all that is required here is simply an estimate of what the harbor will cost and an estimate of the cost of these breakwaters. Now, the gentleman will perceive that in that estimate I want this same board of engineers, or the Secretary of War, to see what damage, if any, has been inflicted upon the Government in the construction of these breakwaters by this private company, or what additional expense may be required, so that if they should report that this company's breakwater is entitled to some consideration and should place any estimate upon it, that then we can have an estimate of the damage, if any, that has been done to that harbor. That would give us a correct estimate of the cost of the improvement of that harbor.

Mr. LOUD. But the gentleman says that this bill will permit us to be put in possession of information as to how much this company have damaged the harbor.

Mr. KLEBERG. If they have damaged it at all.

Mr. LOUD. What good will that information be to us?

Mr. KLEBERG. It would simply form an intelligent basis of the cost of the opening and improvement of that harbor.

Mr. LOUD. I can not see the connection between the two.

Mr. KLEBERG. I think I can state it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask the gentleman if this is also in the mind of the framer of the resolution: That if it is found that the breakwater built by this company is of any value, and that they have damaged the harbor, there may be a set-off between the two?

Mr. KLEBERG. Exactly; that is the position I take, and I say we can not arrive at any intelligent estimate until we find the damage, if any, that has been done.

Mr. TALBERT. Does this bill carry any appropriation?

Mr. KLEBERG. None at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is stricken out, is it?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question. If the engineers should report no damage to the Government, but should report in favor of paying the company for their breakwater, then the Government would be liable, would it not?

Mr. KLEBERG. No; they do not sit as a jury at all. They will report the facts. They have already reported that the work is worse than worthless and is of no value to the Government.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It is really expected that the company will be paid for their property, is it not?

Mr. KLEBERG. It is not my expectation, and I shall stand here and oppose it.

Mr. HENDERSON. This resolution does not settle anything, except to get the information?

Mr. KLEBERG. That is all. It simply gets the facts.

Mr. HENDERSON. It does not bind the Government in any way?

Mr. KLEBERG. Not at all.

Mr. TALBERT. Is not this one of those bills that are coming in from the fact that we are to have no river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. KLEBERG. I am not here to criticise the River and Harbor Committee at all.

Mr. TALBERT. But I ask if this and other similar bills are not brought in here because we are to have no river and harbor bill?

Mr. KLEBERG. I think not. This is one of those measures that can be passed without expense to the Government.

Mr. LOUD. It is going to cost money to make the survey. It will either come out of an independent appropriation or out of the $250,000. What is the use of trying to fool ourselves? The making of a survey costs money.

Mr. BALL. The survey has already been made, but these are facts that the report of the engineers fails to give, and the Secretary of War says that without any additional survey or any additional expense this information can be furnished.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me? This proceeding is one that could be attached to a regular river and harbor bill, is it not?

Mr. BALL. It could be.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then why make haste in this case and leave everybody else out in the cold?

Mr. KLEBERG. This is just like the bill that was passed here a little while ago.

Mr. BALL. Gentlemen will understand that there is a difference between new projects and projects that have already been surveyed. This survey has been made. The board of engineers have reported it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then why not leave it for the regular river and harbor bill, and not hasten it?

Mr. BALL. Because they did not give us possession of certain information that we should have in order to obtain a settlement with this company. Now, I am satisfied that the specific information called for by this bill will show that there will not be one dollar coming to the company, and I will further state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] that the parties in interest have expressed themselves as being willing, in case the report of the engineers or of the Secretary of War shows that they are not entitled to receive anything—that they will quitclaim it to the Government and not ask any compensation. So that, to say the least, we do not commit Congress to the payment of one dollar, but we possibly avoid the expense of condemnation proceedings.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can you give us the name of this private company?

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly. The Aransas Pass Harbor Company.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is this legislation being pressed for them?

Mr. KLEBERG. No. If it is passed, of course they are anxious to have their claims settled also, and in that light it is pressed by them; but it is pressed by the people from my whole district. I represent that entire country, and it rests upon me. I am not representing that company. I am opposing it.

Mr. RIDGELY. Our whole State of Kansas is interested in promoting facilities for shipment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say in that connection that this harbor is of vast importance to the whole of the district I represent.

Mr. LOUD. How much of a city have you there?

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no town at the pass; it is about 15 miles out from the shore line, being a narrow strait between two islands, and there is no town there of any kind.

Mr. LOUD. And you want to make it a town?

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no expectation of that kind.

Mr. LOUD. How much commerce is there?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was about to explain to you. The city of Corpus Christi, which is about 15 miles away, has a population of about 6,000 people, if I recollect aright. Rockport, another town, has a population of 1,500 to 2,000; but both are some distance away, and neither one figures in this matter with me as to any improvement or as to being specially interested in the matter. But it is an outlet. It makes an outlet for the great grazing districts of west and northwestern Texas. No part of my district runs within 150 miles of this place. It is recognized as a port of importance to all the commerce of that section. There are two railroad lines. One is the line to the City of Mexico, via Laredo, and another, known as the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad, runs to——

Mr. LOUD. Is there a center of business there?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Both of them terminate near the pass.

Mr. LOUD. What do they terminate there for, when there is no town?

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is one. Both terminate at Corpus Christi, 15 miles away from the pass which we hope to have improved.

Mr. LOUD. Do you expect that you are going to improve up to Corpus Christi?

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is not in the interest of Corpus Christi, or Rockport, or of any town-lot scheme, or anything of that sort. This is a measure in which the people of that section have shown their interest by donating property estimated, I believe, at $600,000.

Mr. KLEBERG. Between $200,000 and $300,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have absolutely given $200,000 toward the benefit of that port. The engineers say it is easily feasible to make an important port there.

Mr. LOUD. How much would the improvement cost?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Ultimately to make a port? Well, it has been estimated all the way by optimists from $150,000 to $200,000 and up to a million and a half by practical men.

Mr. LOUD. I understand the gentleman to say that a survey has been made?

Mr. SLAYDEN. One has recently been made of Aransas Pass. The company which undertook the work and abandoned it for lack of funds—and I have never had any communication with any person connected with that particular company—only expects in the event that the stone in the breakwater is used that the Government will pay them the value of it.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if this were a plain survey, the same as the rest of them, I do not know that I would have any objection to it. Neither will I object to a plain survey; but I shall object to any reference in the bill to the work done by this company. The bill is really suspicious——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will explain to the gentleman from California that neither my colleague [Mr. KLEBERG] nor myself will object to your objection in that respect.

Mr. KLEBERG. You can not object too much for me in that regard.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We have both been recognized as rather in antagonism to that company, although both are merely inspired by a desire to see a port created at Aransas Pass.

Mr. KLEBERG. What does the gentleman wish expunged?

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object to an ordinary survey, although you have no harbor, no city, nor anything else; but I shall object to all this reference to this work which has been done by this private company.

Mr. KLEBERG. I can explain that. A survey has been made of that harbor. The harbor has been surveyed several times, and Major Ernst has placed an estimate of one million and six hundred and some odd thousand dollars upon it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object to the present bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. What is the gentleman's objection?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT GLOUCESTER, MASS.

Mr. MOODY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8881.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8881) to establish a life-saving station on the westerly side of the harbor of Gloucester, Mass.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a life-saving station on the westerly side of the harbor of Gloucester, Mass., at such a point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees.

Mr. MOODY. I trust the gentleman will permit me to explain that bill. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to explain that bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit me to explain this bill? It is a very simple and an easy one and will take no time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has demanded the regular order.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman from Texas might at least have given me his attention when I addressed to him a courteous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry. Pending that motion to adjourn, is it in order to move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks a recess is not privileged; but if the House declines to adjourn, then that may be done.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the suggestion to the gentleman from Texas with reference to taking a recess to 8 o'clock that I understand by inquiry at the Senate that it would be no object for the House to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, or even 10 o'clock, so far as that goes.

Mr. BAILEY. They have, I understand, arrived at no agreement as to the time at which a vote will be taken, but they have arrived at an agreement for closing what we would call general debate, and it is perhaps closed at this time, or, if not at this time, will be within the next hour, and then such debate as occurs upon the resolution after that will be under the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. My information is that there is no prospect of anything reaching the House at 8 o'clock or 10 o'clock to-night. If there was, I should have no objection to taking a recess until some time this evening. It hardly seems worth while to detain the House with that information, unless the gentleman has some other information.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought there was an understanding that we should take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suggest that we take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am perfectly willing to accede to that. That will meet with my wishes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I myself have little idea that the Senate would be ready to send us any matter earlier than 8 or 10 o'clock this evening, and, upon the statement that it will not probably be ready at that time, I am perfectly willing to take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am told that we are not likely to get anything this evening, and not even up to midnight. I will withdraw my motion to adjourn, and ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will not the gentleman modify his request and take a recess until some time this evening?

The Senate will vote to-day, and it would certainly be a good plan to take a recess until, say, 10 o'clock to-night, when we could receive the message from the Senate and appoint conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement, the Committee on Enrolled bills made the following report:

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3132. An act granting a pension to Plum P. Miner;

H. R. 639. An act increasing the pension of Charles B. Eades;

H. R. 7539. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha M. McCall;

H. R. 5994. An act to grant a pension to M. Louise Anderson; and

H. R. 2629. An act to grant a pension to John Thurston.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3517. An act granting a pension to Rhoda A. Van Niman;

S. 1450. An act granting a pension to Catharine Leary;

S. 668. An act granting a pension to Frances E. Pease;

S. 499. An act granting a pension to Sarah R. Frary;

S. 487. An act granting a pension to Delia Gilman; and

S. 157. An act to increase the pension of Gen. James W. McMillan.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. POWERS, for ten days, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce to the members of the House that, in accordance with the permission given by the House, the Chair will reinstate the rule of the House, temporarily adopted, for tickets for Monday morning.

The House is now in recess until 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

The recess having expired, the House, at 10 a. m., Monday, April 18, resumed its session.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that no message can be received from the Senate until both Houses are in session, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to inquire if it be true that no message can be received from the Senate unless both Houses are in session?

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I know that is the general legislative practice; and believing it to be a good one, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Maine to withhold his motion until I can present a request to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, do not do that——

Mr. DALZELL. Nothing can be done until 12 o'clock.

Mr. BROMWELL. I withdraw the demand for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The motion of Mr. DINGLEY was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a copy of a report made by Examiner W. B. De Pue as to the advisability of a change in the law governing the holding of terms of court at Bay City, Mich.—to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation "Contingent, Bureau of Equipment"—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MAHANY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6149) to authorize the Secretary of War to exercise a discretion in certain cases, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1106); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 486) granting a pension to Mary M. Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1101); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1119) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr., a citizen of Kentucky and a major-general in the Army of the United States in the war of the rebellion, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1102); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4283) for the relief of William B. Murray, of South Pittsburg, Marion County, Tenn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1103); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STURTEVANT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5385) granting a pension to A. C. Litchfield, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1104); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROWNLOW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4607) granting an honorable discharge to Charles Miller, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1105); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6453) granting a pension to Eliza Clark—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9899) for the relief of Ronald P. McDaniel—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 9913) to increase the pensions of widows of the Mexican war soldiers and sailors to $16 per month—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 9914) to provide for the organization of volunteer reserves to the land and naval forces of the United States of America—to the Committee on the Militia.

By Mr. MAHANY: A resolution (House Res. No. 291) requesting certain information from the Secretary of State—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 9915) for the relief of John W. Watterson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLEY: A bill (H. R. 9916) for the relief of David Misener, of Goodwin, S. Dak.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 9917) for the relief of Volney H. Scott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9918) for the relief of Elizabeth Craine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHANY: A bill (H. R. 9919) to correct the naval record of Thomas Walpole—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill H. R. 9920) to pension Martha E. Moeller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9921) to correct the military record of John W. T. Briggs—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9922) to grant an honorable discharge to William H. Bapst—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9923) to correct the military record of D. C. Van Brocklin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOODY: A bill (H. R. 9924) granting a pension to Lydia Woodman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 9925) granting a pension to William H. Hunter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9926) for the relief of Mrs. Ruth Hall—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WANGER: A bill (H. R. 9927) for the relief of the owner or owners of the barge Charlie—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a joint resolution (H. Res. 235) for the relief of ex-Naval Cadet S. A. W. Patterson—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWN: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Clarksville, Greenfield, and Yellow Springs, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches of Yellow Springs, Friends' Church of Clarksville, and citizens of Coshocton, in the State of Ohio, urging the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Greenfield, Clarksville, and Yellow Springs, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches of Yellow Springs, and Friends' Church of Clarksville, Ohio, favoring bills to raise the age of protection for girls, to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, and to protect State anticigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Athens, Ohio, asking for the passage of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BULL: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Baltimore, Md., indorsing the Bull bill to provide for the enrollment and organization of Naval Reserve forces—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: Papers to accompany House bill No. 2490, for the relief of A. U. Whiffen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5612, to increase the pension of Leroy S. Gordon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 6110, granting a pension to John D. Craig—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers in support of House bill No. 7775, granting a pension to Albert R. Kiser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 6109, granting an increase of pension to Christian J. Lidaker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 7774, granting an increase of pension to Frank Podon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5599, granting a pension to Thomas J. Windsor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5598, granting a pension to Michael Doyle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 2536, granting a pension to Florence Tate—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5604, granting an increase of pension to Elkana M. Hill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5603, relating to the claim of Albert Griffith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5605, to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas D. Wagnon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 2488, bearing upon the claim of William H. Blades—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of Bachman Post, No. 26, Grand Army of the Republic, of Indiana, and Green Clay Smith Camp, No. 3, Department of Indiana, Union Veterans' Union, in support of House bill No. 6593, to remove the charge of desertion against John Dickson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Petition of James Lunbuck and other citizens of Dyersville, Iowa, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. I also ask that letters from the War Department, which I have sent to the desk, be read in connection with the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with it?

Mr. LODGE. I have sent up letters from the War Department, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 11, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Chief Signal Officer, with draft of a joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to print in excess of the 1,000 copies authorized by the act of January 12, 1895, such extra number of copies of the military publications of the War Department as may be necessary for the instruction of the National Guard of the various States. A schedule showing the number of extra copies of publications urgently needed for immediate distribution is made a part of the proposed resolution. The matter is earnestly recommended as meriting the early favorable consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT LIBRARY,
Washington, April 5, 1898.

SIR: The War Department is receiving hundreds of applications from Senators, Representatives, and officers and men of the National Guard of the various States for Army Regulations and the various drill regulations. These publications can not be furnished by the War Department, which prints them from the fund especially appropriated for this Department, nor has the Public Printer these valuable publications on sale.

You were pleased to incorporate in your annual report of this year (page 50) my recommendation that the militia law be amended so that the National Guard could be furnished with the military publications of the War Department. I have the honor to suggest that you forward, with favorable recommendation, the inclosed resolution to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, which will provide the National Guard with military publications necessary for their proper instruction.

Very respectfully,

A. W. GREELY,
Brigadier-General and Chief Signal Officer,
In Charge Distribution War Department Documents.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me hear the first part of the joint resolution read. As I heard the joint resolution read it does not provide any copies for Congress at all.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized to print, in excess of the 1,000 copies authorized by the act of January 12, 1895, such extra number of copies of the military publications of the War Department as may be necessary for the instruction of the National Guard of the various States.

Resolved, That there be printed for immediate distribution by the Secretary of War to the National Guard of the various States the following manuals, regulations, and drill books.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution lie over for a few moments until I can have an opportunity to examine it. I shall desire to move an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie over.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported a bill (S. 4420) providing for the publication and distribution of a Supplement to the Revised Statutes; which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sufficient number of copies of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume 2, parts 1 to 7, containing the permanent and general legislation of the Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses, with notes, references, and a general index, be printed and bound, using the present plates, for distribution, and to be distributed to members of Congress, for themselves and for distribution by them to the Departments, libraries, public officers, and others, the same number to each as heretofore provided by Congress for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and such additional copies on the order of the Secretary of State as may be necessary from time to time to supply deficiencies and offices newly created, and for keeping for sale as required to be kept for sale by law.

SEC. 2. That the publication herein authorized shall be known as volume 2 of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, and shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained, but shall not change or alter any existing law, nor preclude reference to nor control in case of any discrepancy the effect of any original act passed by Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 16, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I submit for your consideration draft of a bill authorizing the printing of a second volume of supplements to the Revised Statutes. The public demand requires the publication of additional supplements and I deem it economy and in the interest of all concerned that all of the parts that have been printed of the supplements to the Revised Statutes should be embodied in one volume and printed as volume 2. I recommend that this be done.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is literally to print a supplement. There has been a pretense of a supplement printed now for a year or two, and we have half a dozen numbers of different kinds. Nobody can tell from the title that is handed to us from the folding room what it is. It is not like the first volume of the supplement. I am opposed to printing anything else until we get something that is in a decent form and shape. If this is to be a bound volume and is to contain all that has been published since the last supplement, it is all right; but if it is proposed that we shall have a supplement that contains only the laws of one or two Congresses and nothing else, I am opposed to it. I think it is time we should have a republication of a revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. It is the intention of this draft of a bill, which came from the State Department, to take in all the separate copies of statutes to make a supplement, including parts 1 to 7, containing the permanent and general legislation of the Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses, so as to have the compilation up to this Congress complete. That is the very purpose of the bill, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be nearly as easy to have a publication of a revised edition of the statutes, would it not?

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of State, Mr. Sherman, says:

The public demand requires the publication of additional supplements, and I deem it economy and in the interest of all concerned that all of the parts that have been printed of the supplements to the Revised Statutes should be embodied in one volume and printed as volume 2.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course. There is no question about that.

Mr. LODGE. The Secretary of State adds:

I recommend that this be done.

It is the purpose to get all the scattered supplements into one volume.

Mr. COCKRELL. That ought to be done, but ought we not to get a revised edition complete of the statutes of the United States?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question. Would not that be a work of such great magnitude that it ought to be carefully undertaken by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, which conducted the last revision? It is a work which takes place only in fifteen or twenty years, and it needs the labor of very good and careful lawyers. As I think the Senator will see, that is entirely outside of the scope of this bill. It merely proposes to gather together, as I understand it, for convenient reference all the statutes of three Congresses. Anybody can do that. A clerk can do it, and I presume that the call in this case comes from some clerk who wants to do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no, we have been paying a man a thousand dollars a session for it.

Mr. HALE. But the revision of the laws once in twenty years or so, with us as in the States, is a very important matter. Great lawyers participate in that work, and it is a work that has to be scrutinized. The Senator will remember that the last revision, which I think was under the direction in the Senate of the former Senator from New York, was discussed here for days by the lawyers of the body, provision by provision, and many things were found after the report that needed to be altered. At that time I know I was a member of the other House, and the revision was conducted under the charge of Judge Poland, then a member from Vermont, and a very good lawyer. But that is a great work. That work will take up a great deal of the time of Congress. I agree with the Senator that it is about time that it ought to be done, and that we should have a new revision of the laws of the United States in one volume so that we may know what is the law. I hope the Senator will move in that direction at some no distant day and set the Committee on the Revision of the Laws at work on the subject.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question to see if I understand this subject. It is true that the collation and preparation and the subsequent epitomizing of the laws of the United States is quite a large work, but as I understand the present proposition it is merely to add another supplement to the statutes. It seems to me that without going into the scrutinizing labor involved in making a new edition of the entire work we at least might have all the supplements put in one work. It would not involve any more than a mere compilation, which could be done by an ordinary, intelligent man, such as is employed in many of the offices of the city, at quite a moderate salary. I do not think it would involve any such examination as was necessary to go through and compile the statutes in 1878. That was a great work. All of the original statutes of the United States had to be gone over, and it required, as the Senator from Maine has well said, a vast amount of erudition.

But I am not altogether satisfied. Why could we not take the statutes of 1878 and have them brought down to date and include the proceedings of this Congress, so that they might be published in a year and bring all the matter into a convenient compass? It is twenty years since that work was gotten out, and it is time that all of the statutes should be put together. I would rather see this matter deferred so that the work might be thoroughly done and brought up to the end of this Congress, extending the statutes of 1878, or rather revising them and issuing a new edition, so as to cover the entire subject. I think that would be more satisfactory than to parcel out the work at this date.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt the work ought to be done as the Senator from California suggests, but this will not delay that work in the least. This is simply to bring together the existing supplements which are now scattered volumes and put them into one volume, to be known as volume 2, using the existing plates. It will not delay nor add to the expense of a general revision such as we ought to have.

Mr. WHITE. Is it intended to reindex the work and have one index to the whole of the statutes?

Mr. LODGE. It is so stated in the bill. Notes, references, and everything are to come in, and the work done on that will not interfere with the work of revision. On the contrary, it would help the reviser. The Secretary of State states that the volumes are very much needed for distribution; that there is a constant demand for them.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to the bill. I merely offered a suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. The revision was made up to 1874. In 1878 we published a revised edition. Then in 1881 or 1883 we published a supplement of the Revised Statutes, and a second edition of that, I believe, was published to come up to a later date. I understand it is now proposed to take the little annual or sessional digests or compilations and put them all into one volume.

Mr. LODGE. To be known as volume 2.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it be much additional expense to bind it with volume 1?

Mr. LODGE. It would make a volume too large and bulky.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the volume is to include all those publications, I hope the bill will be passed, although I think it is a work that ought to be superseded immediately by a revision of all the laws, bringing the work up to date.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope some member of the Committee on Revision of the Laws will take the matter in hand.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 4421) authorizing the appointment of Benjamin Wright ensign in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BAKER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4425) to amend the charter of the Brightwood Railway Company, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4426) to correct the military record of Harrison Defibaugh; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 4427) to authorize needed repairs of the graveled or macadamized road from the city of Newbern, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 4428) granting the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (S. 4429) granting a pension to Jennie P. Stover; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 4430) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Lee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4431) to define and prescribe the duties of the officers of the Inspector-General's Department of the Army, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 151) providing for the removal of the remains of the late Maj. Gen. John A. Rawlins from the Congressional Cemetery to the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., together with the base and granite shaft now marking the spot; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 152) relative to rights of way for railroads through forest reserves; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BERING SEA AWARDS.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a bill which I ask may be read at length.

The bill (S. 4423) to pay the Bering Sea awards was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $473,151.26 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and placed under the direction of the President of the United States, with which to pay to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty the amount awarded by the commissioners appointed pursuant to the stipulations of the convention of February 8, 1896, between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the settlement of the claims presented by the latter against the former in virtue of the convention of February 29, 1892.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say, on the question of the reference of the bill, that the message of the President of the United States communicating the report of the commissioners came to the Senate on the 14th of January, 1898. In the pressure of the great question which has been before the country the matter I suppose has been lost sight of. The bill simply embodies an appropriation to pay the award of the Bering Sea Commissioners, and that award was unanimous, our commissioner and the British commissioner agreeing in the report. Under our convention we are of course absolutely bound by the award. It is a debt of honor and good faith.

I merely say this much because I wish to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. The immediate payment of the award has, I know, the approval of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who are, of course, responsible for reporting the convention which was ratified by the Senate. I desire to call the bill to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, to whom, of course, it will be referred, and I venture to express the hope that that committee will report it at an early day and put it upon its passage.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I did not quite understand him. This matter being somewhat or perhaps entirely in the domain of our relations with a foreign power, as I understand the Senator it has the approval and indorsement of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. The President's message was not referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations; but I know that it is the desire of every member of the Committee on Foreign Relations that this award shall be paid. There may be some changes necessary in the terms of the bill which I have introduced. That, of course, can be provided for by the Committee on Appropriations. But that the award, to which we are absolutely bound by our treaty and action, should be immediately paid is, I know, the wish of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. I agree fully with the Senator from Massachusetts that the award ought to be paid, and paid forthwith. We are undoubtedly bound in honor as a business arrangement by the award, and it ought not to stand longer. If the measure goes upon the deficiency appropriation bill, I hope there will be no objection to it when it comes up.

Mr. MORGAN. Before this matter passes away from the attention of the Senate, I wish to say a word about it. I understood that the Committee on Appropriations had put a provision in the pending appropriation bill for the payment of the award. Is that correct? Is there not a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the payment of this award in favor of Great Britain?

Mr. ALLISON. There is not such a provision. I will say to the Senator from Alabama, that being for a past transaction it would be more germane to the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, it makes no difference——

Mr. ALLISON. The failure to embody it in the sundry civil bill was not on account of any hostility whatever.

Mr. MORGAN. It makes no difference when it comes up. The proper place for it is on the appropriation bill. At the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I drew a formula for the appropriation in which there is saved to us two questions, which it is very important we should reserve as against the principles announced in the award of the arbitrators. As to the sum awarded there is no objection whatever, but the arbitrators have expressly incorporated two principles of award in their findings, to which I think the Government of the United States ought not to accede as declarations of principle. I desire that there shall be no committal by the appropriation to all the principles that are stated in the award; that is the whole of it. I drew up a memorandum and handed it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with a view of making that statement. Is the bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. And also the message communicating the subject-matter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, which is supposed to be acceding to this bill, I desire to state for myself that I will expect to offer amendments to it unless the Committee on Appropriations shall see proper to adopt those that I have already suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the amendment proposed by him will be fully considered in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all I desire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment relative to the location of an elevator in the northeast corner of the Senate wing of the Capitol, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WORK OF THE PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have here an article which was taken from the Evening Star, of this city, of April 15, in reference to the work being accomplished in the Pension Bureau.

I will state that as chairman of the Committee on Pensions I am in receipt of a great many letters from all parts of the country complaining of the administration of the Pension Bureau, saying that under its present Commissioner the old soldiers are being discriminated against and are being very badly treated. My own knowledge leads me to an entirely different conclusion, and as this article gives a great many important facts in connection with that matter, showing the work the Bureau is accomplishing, I desire to ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a document, so that it may in certain cases be sent to those men who are uttering complaints against the administration of that great office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request to print as a public document the matter sent to the desk?

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is simply a statement of work done or whether it is in any sense a political article of any kind. I have not seen it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply shows how much money is being expended by the Bureau and how many cases have been adjudicated and are being adjudicated. It is a fair statement of the situation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

Mr. QUAY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 20,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States, dated March 28, 1898, together with the report of the naval court of inquiry upon the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898, and the testimony taken before the court, 6,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 13,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

CAPT. CHARLES D. SIGSBEE.

Mr. MASON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring therein). That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee for the courage, heroism, and devotion displayed by him upon the occasion of the terrible calamity which befell his command in the destruction of the United States battle ship Maine.

THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such testimony as may be taken by the committee or its subcommittees in connection with appropriation bills, and to have the same printed for its use, or the use of the Senate, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HON. WILKINSON CALL.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the 14th of April I asked for an order to print a memorial to the Senate from Hon. Wilkinson Call, late a Senator from Florida. I found the memorial in the committee room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, it having been referred to the committee when it was presented. I also found with it and laid before the committee a document entitled "A letter of Wilkinson Call to the people of Florida," which I included in the request for printing. My attention has been called to Mr. Call's letter as not being a document which could be properly printed and circulated by the Senate. I do not think I ought to have included it in the request to print. I therefore ask that Document No. 236 may be withdrawn from circulation and that the memorial may be printed separately for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from New Hampshire as to reprinting the public document which he has requested, leaving out the letter mentioned. Is there any objection?

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the request of the Senator from New Hampshire will be granted, and I also trust (because this is not the only instance where documents have been asked to be printed that contained matter that ought not to be in a public document) that hereafter the chairman of the Committee on Printing will see to it that all such requests for printing shall go to the Committee on Printing for examination. This is only one of many cases where requests of this sort have been made and matters entered into a document that should have no place in the public records. I think the only safe way when a request of this kind is made hereafter is that it shall be submitted to the Committee on Printing, so that it may be seen that no political matter whatever shall be included in the document. So far as I can I shall object hereafter to any printing unless it has had that supervision.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point I desire also to add a word.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he ought at this time to include in the order that the document be withdrawn from the files.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is practically the request I made.

Mr. GORMAN. I beg pardon of the Senator. I did not hear it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to its being put in that form, that the present document be withdrawn from the files and that the memorial alone be printed as a separate document. That I understand to be substantially the order which the Vice-President has directed to be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request in the form in which it is put by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. On a former occasion I said a word in opposition to the practice of printing documents indiscriminately by Congress at the public expense. During the present session of Congress several documents have been ordered printed which reflect very seriously and unjustly upon a committee of the Senate. I think it is high time that there shall be some revision of the documents we print and circulate over the country at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. We certainly ought not at public expense to print documents that reflect upon the integrity of committees of the body which is ordering them printed. I concur very heartily in the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland, that it might be a very good plan to refer these matters to the Committee on Printing for their consideration before they are ordered printed by Congress without any knowledge as to their contents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request made by the Senator from New Hampshire is to withdraw the document as now printed and that the memorial be reprinted. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

MRS. CHRISTINE C. BARNARD.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 504) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Christine C. Barnard having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
GEORGE L. SHOUP,
JOHN L. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. F. STALLINGS,
J. R. HOWE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ARKANSAS STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. BERRY. If the morning business is concluded, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon Senate bill No. 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 3) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas; which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
April 14, 1898.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 3) entitled "An act to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and State of Arkansas" do pass with the following amendment:

Page 2, line 16, after "law," insert: "upon the declarations and conditions hereinafter provided

"SEC. 2. That the amount of $362,971.35, with which the State is credited in said compromise and settlement for 132,594.27 acres of indemnity land, at the price of $5 an acre, be, and the same is hereby, reduced to the amount of $331,485.63, the value of said indemnity land at $2.50 an acre, the double minimum price of Government land; and the State of Arkansas is hereby credited with the sum of $331,485.68 for 265,188.54 acres of additional selected unadjusted swamp land, at $1.25 per acre, the minimum price of Government land, leaving the balance to be paid by the State of Arkansas to the United States under said compromise and settlement $160,572.

"SEC. 3. That the title of all persons who have purchased from the State of Arkansas any unconfirmed swamp land and hold deeds for the same be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and made valid as against any claim or right of the United States, and without the payment by said persons, their heirs or assigns, of any sum whatever to the United States or to the State of Arkansas.

"SEC. 4. That the State of Arkansas does hereby relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all lands heretofore confirmed, certified, or patented to the State which have been entered under the public land laws; and does hereby cede, relinquish, and quitclaim to the United States all right, title, and interest under the acts of September 28, 1850, March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, in and to all lands in the State which have been heretofore granted, confirmed, certified, or patented by the United States under any other acts, and the title to such lands is hereby confirmed in the grantees, their heirs, successors, or assigns, anything in this act or any other act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That this act shall be of no force or effect until the State of Arkansas shall have accepted and approved the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained by an act of the general assembly or by an instrument in writing duly executed by the governor under the authority conferred upon him by the legislature of said State and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the approval of this act: Provided further, That whereas the general assembly of the State of Arkansas did, on the 10th day of March, 1897, accept and approve the conditions, limitations, and provisions herein contained before the passage of this act, making the same effective and conclusive, therefore this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage."

Resolved, That the House request a conference with the Senate on the amendment of the House.

Ordered, That Mr. LACEY, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. SHAFROTH be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I would greatly have preferred that the House of Representatives should have passed the Senate bill without amendment; but the effort was made both in the last Congress and in this to pass the Senate bill, and I have become firmly convinced that it is absolutely impossible to have the Senate bill even considered by the House of Representatives and to have it passed there without amendment. The delegation from the State have made every possible effort to pass the bill without the amendment, and they agree with me that we must take the amendment or have no bill. And they agree with me, also, that it is best for the State that this controversy should be settled.

I want to state further that the amendment which has been proposed by the House of Representatives was during the winter of 1897 presented to the legislature of the State of Arkansas. After a contest a majority of that legislature agreed to accept the amendment which is now proposed by the House of Representatives.

In view of the fact that the legislature of Arkansas has agreed to accept the amendment, and thereby, in effect, instructed the delegation to vote for it, and in view of the further fact that I believe, notwithstanding the amendment, that the State will be largely the gainer by the settlement, I am going to agree to the House amendment.

The controversy has existed for fifty years. This settlement will quiet the title of thousands of our citizens to their homes. It relieves the State from a debt amounting, principal and interest if you count the interest to this date, of about $2,800,000, and relieves the Government from a claim of the State for several thousand acres of land. I am therefore instructed by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Public Lands to move to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to say that I cordially concur in all that has been said by my colleague; and I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the pivotal question in the existing situation in our relations with Spain and Cuba seems to be involved in the claim made that the power and right to decide the question of national independence rest exclusively with the President of the United States, and that no such power exists in the conjoint action of the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, or that, if by such joint action national independence may be recognized, it is a power which ought not now to be exercised.

As I may at this time without taxing the patience of the country or delaying action which may be regarded as urgent, I desire to discuss that question in the light of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, the power to recognize national independence is not conferred in express terms either upon the President or upon any other department of the Government. It necessarily, therefore, exists as an incidental or implied authority. It is claimed to exist in the President as an incident to his power to make treaties.

The power to make treaties is expressly vested by the Constitution in the Executive, "to be exercised by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," two-thirds of the Senate concurring. The Supreme Court of the United States has defined a treaty in the case of Edye vs. Robertson, reported in 112 United States Reports, where this subject was under consideration and the opinion was rendered by that eminent jurist, Mr. Justice Miller. On page 598 he says:

> A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it.

As a treaty is a compact between independent nations, whenever it is proposed to enter into a treaty the question necessarily arises as to whether the party proposing to become bound by it is an independent nation. The President, therefore, before he enters into the consideration of the subject-matter of a treaty necessarily must make inquiries as to whether the other party is a national sovereignty and has an independent existence.

So, whenever such question is presented to the President as incidental to the exercise of the treaty-making power, the President must determine that question of national independence, which involves the competency of the party proposing to enter into the contract; but when he has decided that question and enters into the treaty, it must be submitted to the Senate for its concurrence, as provided in the Constitution. The Senate of the United States must necessarily pass in review all the elements which are primarily to be considered by the Executive whenever the making of a treaty is involved, and among those elements is the question as to the competency of one of the parties to the contract.

The Senate must, therefore, make inquiry, in the exercise of its undoubted authority as an incident to its power to advise the President in respect to the making of a treaty, whether the opposite party is an independent nation competent to enter into the contract.

Mr. President, the Senate may differ with the President in his determination that the party proposing the treaty is an independent nation. It may decide that it is not possessed of national sovereignty, and upon that ground may refuse to concur in the treaty which has been sent to it by the President. Therefore, the Senate, in the exercise of that incidental authority, may decide for or may decide against national independence, notwithstanding the President himself has previously passed upon that question, because if the Senate decides that the party proposing the treaty is not an independent nation and not competent to make a contract, or to comply with its provisions if made, it is the end of controversy, and the decision first made by the President is overruled in effect by the power in whom the Constitution has vested the authority to concur or refuse to concur in a treaty.

Mr. President, suppose the President has decided in favor of national independence and the Senate has concurred in that decision by ratifying or confirming the treaty. Is that final? Is that a conclusive determination of the question of national independence which is thus exercised as an implied or incidental authority? I will endeavor to show that it is not conclusive; that there is another authority provided by the Constitution competent to review this action and this determination both of the Executive and of the Senate, and which may overrule that determination decisively and finally. That such is the case is no longer the subject of controversy or dispute if we are to follow the decisions of the highest tribunal in this nation.

The Supreme Court, in the case to which I have just referred, after setting forth that a treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations, decided that whenever this Government enters into such a compact, it necessarily recognizes the independent existence of the other party to the contract; but the Congress of the United States, by the conjoint action of the President, of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives, may modify or repeal that treaty; may wipe it out of existence by revocation; and when it is so repealed or revoked, it falls to the ground with all its implications, including that of the recognition of the competence of one of the parties to the contract, namely, its national independence.

The Supreme Court of the United States has in a number of cases decided that the treaty may be modified or may be revoked by the action of Congress. This question directly arose in the case to which I have referred, where Mr. Justice Miller used this language:

> We are of the opinion that, so far as the provisions in that act may be found to be in conflict with any treaty with a foreign nation, they must prevail in all the judicial courts of this country. We had supposed that the question here raised was set at rest in this court by the decision in the case of The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616.

Further on the court say:

> The precise question involved here, namely, a supposed conflict between an act of Congress imposing a customs duty and a treaty with Russia on that subject, in force when the act was passed, came before the circuit court for the district of Massachusetts in 1885.

After referring to that decision, which held that the act of Congress necessarily repealed pro tanto the treaty made by the Executive with the concurrence of the Senate, the court proceeds to decide in this case that this power of Congress is unquestioned. But I read further as bearing upon this same question, and the reasoning herein employed, it seems to me, is decisive of this entire question:

> A treaty is made by the President and the Senate. Statutes are made by the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. The addition of the latter body to the other two in making a law certainly does not render it less entitled to respect in the matter of its repeal or modification than a treaty made by the other two. If there be any difference in this regard, it would seem to be in favor of an act in which all three of the bodies participate. And such is, in fact, the case in a declaration of war, which must be made by Congress, and which, when made, usually suspends or destroys existing treaties between the nations thus at war.
> In short, we are of the opinion that, so far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation can become the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal.

It must follow, therefore, that in so far as the President and Senate have incidental authority to recognize national independence in the exercise of the treaty-making power, which is expressly conferred by the Constitution, such recognition may be wiped out and obliterated by the conjoint action of the President and the Senate and the House of Representatives in the exercise of legislative authority. It must follow, then, clearly, that in so far as the President is claimed to have authority to recognize the independence of a nation in the exercise of this treaty-making power his decision of that question is subject to review, first, by the Senate, which may nonconcur, which renders ineffectual his recognition; but if the Senate concur, there is still another ultimate tribunal by whom the question may be decided, namely, the Congress of the United States; and the language of the Supreme Court is not inapt when it says:

> If there be any difference in this regard, it would seem to be in favor of an act in which all three of the bodies participate.

Next, it is claimed, as I understand the argument of those opposed to the view of the question which has been entertained by the majority of the Senate, that the President has the authority to recognize national independence as an incident to his authority to receive foreign ambassadors or diplomatic representatives.

Mr. President, the power to receive ambassadors, as already pointed out, is not conferred upon the President in express terms anywhere in the Constitution. The Constitution in defining the jurisdiction of the courts makes reference to ambassadors. In the controversies relating to ambassadors, the Supreme Court of the United States is vested with original jurisdiction; and when a case comes up, and any question of ambassadorship arises in the court, the question as to whether the party claiming any privilege or right in virtue of that character which must be decided' Is the individual a foreign ambassador? The determination of that question is necessary in order to decide, first, whether the Supreme Court of the United States has original jurisdiction of the controversy. It may be necessary to decide it in order to determine whether the person is entitled to the privilege which pertains only to a foreign ambassador.

How is the court to decide that question? The Constitution has made no provision as to how it shall be determined. We can, therefore, not look to any express provision in order to determine that question. Who is to decide that fact? Mutuality and reciprocity are essential to the exercise of the power both to send and receive ambassadors. If some foreign government should send a diplomatic representative to the United States, and he should address himself to the President, undoubtedly the power of the President informally to receive him would be unquestioned, as he may receive any individual, irrespective of the official character of that individual.

Naturally, as has been frequently suggested, the President will, in the first instance, pass upon the question as to whether any particular individual presenting credentials from an alleged independent nation is entitled to be received; and in passing upon the question as to whether he shall be extended that official courtesy the President would undoubtedly be called upon to pass upon the question as to whether the authority undertaking to accredit him was possessed of national independence or sovereignty.

I readily concede, Mr. President, that here incidentally the President is called upon to determine whether or not national independence exists in respect of the power undertaking to accredit an ambassador to the United States, but the important question is whether his determination in such a case as that is final and conclusive and binding upon all the other departments of the Government, or binding upon him in his future action in respect to that Government.

A few considerations, it seems to me, will make it perfectly clear and conclusive that where the President thus incidentally passes upon the question as to whether a given power is an independent nation is not conclusive, because, before we can have complete relations with any foreign government, we must not only receive, but we must undertake to send diplomatic representatives from this Government to represent it in the matters pertaining to the power which it is proposed to recognize. It is a reciprocal duty. To receive the representative of a foreign government and to refuse to send one is an anomaly in the affairs of nations. The President undoubtedly, in the first instance, may receive, but he has no power to send a representative. He can not create the office of ambassador, he can not provide his salary, he can not determine his grade, unless some express authority be conferred upon him to that effect by the Congress of the United States.

Unquestionably the power is vested in Congress to determine whether or not we will send any representatives and what the grade and pay of its representatives shall be, and when Congress has so acted, the President, under his oath, in the execution of the power vested in him by the Constitution, must recognize that action of Congress as his exclusive guide in such matters. Then, although the President may incidentally determine that the nation is in existence to the extent necessary to enable him to extend the official courtesy of receiving its representatives, he has no power to determine as to whether the foreign relations with that government shall be made complete by the sending of a representative from this country.

Hence we find in this case that, while the President may be called upon to act, and may properly act, his action is subject to review by the Congress of the United States, by the conjoint action of the President, the representatives of the States, and the representatives of the people in the two branches of Congress, and the united action, the conjoint consent and direction, of these three departments of our Government, so to speak, are of far more efficacy and power than the determination of the President incidentally in undertaking to receive a diplomatic representative from abroad.

The Congress may overrule the action of the President and wipe it out, and not only that, but I next call attention to a power vested in Congress whose exercise may be destructive absolutely of diplomatic relations with foreign governments, and which can not by any possibility be questioned. The power to declare war is vested exclusively in the Congress of the United States, and the moment such a declaration is made by Congress the President has no authority to receive any diplomatic representative from the power or nation against whom the declaration of war is made. The language which is employed by the Supreme Court of the United States in direct application to the power of Congress in respect to treaties is equally applicable to the question of the exercise of the power of the President to receive ambassadors from foreign governments. This language is used:

> Such is, in fact, the case in a declaration of war, which must be made by Congress and which, when made, usually suspends or destroys existing treaties between the nations thus at war.

Usually, I believe universally, the diplomatic relations existing between the nations thus at war are destroyed by a declaration of war, and though the President may have decided to receive an ambassador from some foreign country, that power is wiped away. Although the President in the first instance has that power, Congress can take away that power by a simple declaration of war. It can wipe it out absolutely and eternally, and what it can do thus completely it can do in part if it see proper to do it.

Therefore the two grounds upon which it is claimed that the President of the United States alone can recognize the national independence of another power, government, or people and that such determination is finally conclusive, as it is claimed to relate to the power to make treaties, are destroyed, because the Supreme Court of the nation has decided that Congress may revoke, repeal, or wipe out treaties as it sees proper; and as to the power claimed to exist in the President by virtue of his right to receive foreign ambassadors, Congress can take away effectually that power. There is no ground, no foundation anywhere to be found in the Constitution, either in express authority or implied authority, by which it can be successfuly maintained that the President has the exclusive authority finally to determine the question of national existence.

Mr. President, it would seem to follow that, while the President has incidental authority in certain cases to recognize the independence of foreign governments, in the case of treaties his determination of it may be reviewed and overruled by the Senate of the United States. Where it is determined both by the President and the Senate, it may be overruled by the action of the Congress of the United States, composed of the President, Senate, and House. It also follows that, while the President incidentally may decide that a given government is a national sovereignty, in order that he may receive its accredited representatives, that may be reviewed and overthrown by the action of the Congress of the United States, and no provision of the Constitution and no other authority has been pointed out to which the authority of the President to recognize national independence can be claimed as an incident. It must follow that no such exclusive power exists in the President, and that in every case it is subject to be reviewed and overthrown by the conjoint action of the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives.

Having come to the conclusion, therefore, that this is a power which rests finally for the determination of the Congress of the United States whose action must receive the concurrence of the President in the method provided in the Constitution, so that in that case we have the conjoint action of the three departments passing upon the question, the next question which arises is whether under the existing circumstances in the present situation the Congress of the United States ought to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba.

In this connection, before proceeding to the discussion of the question of expediency, I desire to allude for a moment to a claim made by the distinguished and learned Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. It had been asserted that France recognized the independence of the colonies when the situation in regard to actual independence, national sovereignty, and ability to carry into effect provisions of treaties and perform international duties and obligations was less tenable than that which pertains to the Republic of Cuba. I understood the Senator from Alabama to deny that any such recognition had taken place, and he read from a treaty entered into between France and the colonies, whereby it was provided that neither should enter into any agreement for a cessation of hostilities with Great Britain without the consent of the other. When the Senator, as it seems to me, read from that treaty, he overthrew the very proposition which I understood him to seek to maintain; because when that treaty was made with France, France necessarily determined and decided that the other party to the treaty or contract was an independent nation. I read from the definitions as given by Mr. Justice Miller as to what a treaty is. He says:

> A treaty is a contract between independent nations.

And that is necessarily true. Hence, when France entered into a treaty with the colonies she entered into a compact or contract with an independent nation. When she entered into a contract with that independent nation, she recognized the existence of the colonies as an independent nation, a people occupying an equal station, possessed of sovereignty among the nations of the world. It is a shining example and an apt illustration of the duty of the people of the United States in relation to the Republic of Cuba.

Is it wise or is it expedient for Congress to recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba? In the course of the very able discussion of the different phases of this question during the last week some Senator deprecated with great earnestness that anyone in this body, that any member of either branch of Congress, should lack confidence in the President of the United States. If we had good reason to believe at this time that the President of the United States was in fact favorable to the independence of the Republic of Cuba, I for one would be disposed to leave the question of recognition of that independence to his determination, having full confidence that such recognition would take place within such time as would prevent any evil consequences arising which have been depicted as likely to result from a failure to recognize the independence of the island or its emancipation from the authority of Spain.

The President of the United States in all his representations to the Kingdom of Spain has never caused any suggestion to be made to that Government in favor of the absolute and complete independence of the Island of Cuba. In the two communications which he has made to the Congress of the United States relating to that subject we do not find any suggestion, any recommendation, to the Congress of the United States that the ultimate end in this case is the establishment of the independence of the Island of Cuba and its emancipation from Spanish authority. It is not a question of lack of confidence in the Executive.

There are Senators upon this floor with whom I differ in respect to questions of public policy in whom I have the utmost confidence, but for the reason that I am compelled to differ with those Senators in respect to some matter of public policy I must, so far as I am able, bring their purposes to naught. Every man who believes that the people of Cuba, who have during the past three years struggled to establish their independence and emancipate themselves from the tyranny of Spain, have established it, will do and must do, if he is true to his convictions, do legitimately, whatever he thinks is necessary in order to bring about that result.

If we find ourselves upon that question in opposition to the expressed desires of the President of the United States, and if we seek to bring to naught the purpose which he seems to have in view, which does not mean the complete independence of that island, it is not because we lack confidence in the personal integrity and honesty of the President, but it is because we believe in a policy and a purpose which essentially, and maybe radically, differs from that which he maintains; and if we would be true to our convictions, we must seek to defeat the purposes and policy of the President.

It is not necessary that we distrust the President. If I have read the purpose of the President as expressed in his message, if I may judge of it by his previous conduct in relation to this question, if we are to judge as to what may take place in the future by what has taken place in the past, we necessarily come to the conclusion that the end which the President seeks is peace in the Island of Cuba and some kind of stable government there, perhaps an autonomous government in which the sovereignty of Spain over the island remains, but in which there is tranquillity, in which we may proceed in peace to carry on our international commerce and perform our international relations and duties without the incidental disturbance and outrages which the conduct in respect to that island has entailed in the times which have passed. But that does not reach the end which, in my judgment, is desired by the American people. It is not the purpose entertained by a vast majority of the members of the Senate, and I do not believe it is entertained elsewhere. Our duty, then, in this emergency is, if we can, to carry into effect the purposes which a majority of the Senate entertains upon this question.

Mr. President, suppose we content ourselves with the direction to the President to intervene in the affairs of Cuba. Suppose we declare in connection with that that the people of Cuba ought to be a free and independent nation. Suppose we authorize and direct the President of the United States to employ the Army and Navy for the purpose of bringing about some result which we do not plainly and unequivocally declare in the resolution which we enact. We turn over to the Executive the Army and the Navy of the United States to be employed at his discretion.

We have confidence in the President. Judging by the past, we have reason to believe what his action is likely to be in the future. What will he do? It is not a question of personal integrity. It is not a question of Americanism. It is not a question of the respect which every citizen of the United States owes to the Chief Magistrate of the nation. What will he do with the Army and the Navy? To what end will he employ it? is the question which concerns the American people and the American Congress.

We should all be delighted if we had an explicit and direct assurance of the President that he would employ the Army and Navy decisively for the purpose of giving complete independence to the people of Cuba, but the misfortune of the situation is that the President has in no way intimated, either in terms or by act or conduct, that he would drive the Spaniards away from Cuba and leave the people of that island in a complete state of emancipation.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] held up his hand and with great earnestness and eloquence declared that he was not a partisan in respect to this question, but was an American, and I doubt not that the sentiment which he thus expressed is entertained perhaps by every member of the Senate. I agree with him fully when he declares that the question of national honor, the question of safety, the question of freedom, the question of public policy as it relates to that moral control which this Government has sought to maintain of affairs upon this continent rises far above partisan consideration. The sentiment which he thus expressed, while advocating the view that Congress ought to yield to the suggestions of the President on this occasion, is entertained, I believe, by everyone who entertains the opposite view and thinks that in order that the purpose which the majority of the Senate has in view may be carried into effect we are unable to conform to the suggestions of the President.

The difference between the Executive and the people and the Senate is not one of inexpediency. It is not a mere question of administration.

The President in his communication to the Senate has claimed not only that the Republic of Cuba ought not to be recognized, but the supporters of the President here have informed us that his contention is that he alone may exercise the power to determine whether any nation is independent or otherwise, and that his determination is final and exclusive—that there is no authority in this Government to pass in review and modify or repeal the determination which he thus makes.

In connection with that claim on his part it is also claimed that the conditions in Cuba are not such as to warrant any recognition of the organized government existing there and which has had control of the operations against Spain. If those conditions do not now exist there, I ask is there any reasonable probability that in the future any change in the condition is likely to take place which will convince the President, in the exercise of what he claims is his exclusive province and authority, that there should be a recognition of the independence of the people upon that island?

I will never consent by any vote which I shall cast to concede to the President of the United States that he can determine finally and without review by Congress whether any nation is free or independent or otherwise. See what that involves. The President of the United States might decide that Japan is not an independent nation; he might refuse to receive diplomatic representatives from that Government; he might undertake to intercept supplies sought to be delivered to that Government on the ground that it was under subjection to some other foreign government, such as Russia or Great Britain or some other power, as a mere dependency and not as an independent sovereignty.

The rights and duties of neutrality necessarily depend upon national sovereignty and national existence. It is only necessary to proceed further in order to see that the question of national independence may mean peace or war.

To abdicate the power which thus belongs to Congress to recognize the independence of a nation, to declare war, to prescribe the conditions upon which war may be carried on, to do those things which may be necessary to wage that war to success—to abdicate all this power to the President is too much for the President to ask and too much for any friend of the President to seek upon the mere pretense that every Senator owes it as a duty as a patriot to support every recommendation which the President may make.

I think the Senate ought to adhere to the position which it has taken and only concur in any action whereby the Republic of Cuba may be recognized as a separate and independent nation, that its forces may be utilized in conjunction with those of the United States, in order that the war which seems now to be impending against Spain may be waged to a successful conclusion, in order that by the precedent which we now establish in this great and critical emergency the question may be finally and forever settled. While the President has incidental authority, primarily, to recognize national independence in connection with the power to make treaties and receive ambassadors, the exercise of that power is always subject to revision, modification, or review by the Congress of the United States.

I believe there never has arisen any duty more important than the one which now devolves upon both branches of Congress upon this great question. For myself, I am unwilling to surrender it. I am unwilling to make any concession which implies its surrender. I am unwilling for a moment to concede to the present Executive or any other Executive that power which belongs, in my judgment, finally to the representatives of the States and of the people in the two branches of Congress. It is the power of peace or war, that power which is clearly and unequivocally vested here and not anywhere else.

FRANK LOYD.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the bill (H. R. 7318) for the relief of Frank Loyd, of Georgia, be taken up and placed on its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not rise to object, but only to give notice that after this bill shall be disposed of I shall be glad to call up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota for that purpose.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the immediate use of the Senate 30,000 copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Cuba, omitting the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence and the testimony.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. The last clause I did not hear distinctly.

The Secretary read as follows:

Omitting the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, and the testimony.

Mr. GRAY. What is to be printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply the report of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Just the report; the written report of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have it all?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Because, in the first place, it would require a concurrent resolution, as it would exceed the limit of authority to print. The cost would exceed $500 and this will not; and there is a great demand for the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know there is a great demand for the report. We ought to have the report printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That could be covered by a concurrent resolution. I think at least 100,000 copies ought to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much will this printing cost?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It will come within the limit of $500. Thirty thousand copies will cost about $250, I think, as near as it could be estimated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not add the message of the President to it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That has been printed separately. There are plenty of copies of the message.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will agree to make it a concurrent resolution and let us have the whole volume reprinted which we have had on our desks. There is a great demand for it. It is a very useful publication.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like very much to have it, but——

Mr. GRAY. That volume gives the consular reports; it gives the report of the committee and the President's message. It also gives the result of the testimony taken by our board of inquiry and by the Spanish board of inquiry. It gives just the information that intelligent people want. The American people want everything.

Mr. LINDSAY. There is a very extensive demand for it.

Mr. GRAY. A very extensive demand.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be glad to introduce another resolution covering the testimony and correspondence in connection with the report, but I am afraid that that would cause such delay as is hardly warranted. In view of the fact that this printing will cost only about $250, I hope the Senator will not object. I will state that I introduced the resolution at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and in this form because of the immediate demand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 100,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate relative to affairs in Cuba, including the message of the President of the United States, the correspondence, and the testimony, and reports of consuls, 40,000 for the use of the Senate and 60,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLS subsequently said: I desire to submit my individual views as my own report on the Cuban resolutions which were reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I ask that they may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I think that request ought to be granted; but we have just ordered a hundred thousand copies of the report of the committee, and it seems to me that we ought to have the benefit of the Senator's views also.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator propose that the views which I submit shall be printed with the report of the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I think that ought to be done. I have no doubt it will be a valuable contribution; and I ask that the order be made to print the views of the Senator from Texas with the report of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

GEORGE PEYTON.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the Senate to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2768) for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield in order to ascertain what the bill is. If it gives rise to debate, I hope the Senator will not press it now.

Mr. TURPIE. It is an unobjected House bill on the Private Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2768) for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion and to grant him an honorable discharge?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments; in line 8, after the word "War," to strike out "or other proper officials," and in line 7, after the word "and," to strike out the following:

And that the records be so amended as to show the said George Peyton to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States at the date of the discharge of the other members of his said company, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of said date; and no pay or emoluments shall be allowed by reason of the passage of this act.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Substitute therefor "absented himself on June 16, 1865, without proper authority, went to his home and remained so absent when his company was mustered out on August 5, 1865," and to issue to him a certificate accordingly: Provided, That no pay, bounty, allowance, or pension shall be granted or accrue to said Peyton by reason of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against George Peyton, late a private of Company I, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and substitute therefor "absented himself on June 6, 1865, without proper authority, went to his home and remained so absent when his company was mustered out on August 5, 1865," and to issue to him a certificate accordingly: Provided, That no pay, bounty, allowance, or pension shall be granted or accrue to said Peyton by reason of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of George Peyton from the charge of desertion."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8438) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that is taken up, I ask that the amendment beginning at the bottom of page 105, in italics, be taken from that clause and put at the end of line 7, page 106. It is wholly out of place there. It was a clerical error in putting it where it is.

Mr. ALLISON. It is simply at the wrong place.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; and it should be transposed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let amendment 23 be transferred from page 105 to page 106 after line 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the correction is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the pending amendment be read, so that the Senate may understand what is before it.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 27, after the word "retired," insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no portion of the sum authorized to be used for plate printing shall be used for any printing of notes, bonds, checks, or internal-revenue stamps other than for printing from hand-roller presses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would not occupy a further moment of the Senate in discussing this amendment were it not that during the preceding debate, unintentionally beyond a question, certain statements were made that are inaccurate, as I understand the matter; and as this may not be the end of the discussion, I feel it incumbent upon me to put in the RECORD what I conceive to be the precise facts connected with this contention, which commenced in the Forty-third Congress and which we supposed had ended ten years ago, but it is revived. For the purpose of having this matter in such shape that it may hereafter be referred to in conjunction with the views expressed by other Senators on this question, I have taken the trouble to put what I shall say to-day in writing, so that it will not be possibly full of the errors that sometimes creep into our remarks when we make them without having given them careful consideration.

In the course of the debate on the 11th instant relative to the use of hand or steam plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing several statements were made to which I desire to call brief attention. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stated that the patentees submitted to the payment of $500 as royalty and the rate of 1 cent per thousand sheets provided by the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1890, and "so the matter went on and the old presses gradually wore out and the Bureau ceased to use them."

This statement is surely not accurate. The patentees declined to accept the provisions hedging in the use of their presses, and it was, in fact, a foregone conclusion when the appropriation bill was passed that they could not and would not accept the conditions attached by Congress, and these conditions were attached with a thorough understanding by Congress that the legislation inaugurated prevented absolutely, for the then coming year at any rate, the use of the steam presses in the Bureau. The use of the presses which were then employed for internal-revenue work and the backs of notes was absolutely discontinued on June 30, 1889, as appears from a letter from Director Johnson dated March 31, and forming part of the speech of the Senator from Iowa. So it appears from the very authority invoked by the Senator from Iowa that the presses were discontinued, not because they were worn out, but because of the policy inaugurated by Congress.

In Mr. Johnson's letter of the date referred to he states that the adoption of the amendment above given would necessitate the execution of postage stamps on hand-roller presses. This statement is on its very face impossible, for the proviso suggested does not include stamps, and specifically designates the classes of plate printing to which it refers.

It is absolutely impossible to reconcile in any manner the various statements made by Mr. Johnson. In the letter in question he says that—

The necessity for the recent discharge of thirty plate printers from the Bureau is explained by the fact that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recently very largely reduced his orders, and as the Bureau is dependent upon the orders of the officers having charge of the work for authority to print the securities and stamps, it was necessary to reduce the force.

In his memorandum attached to the second letter to the Senator from Iowa he says that the purchase of the presses—will also enable the Bureau to accumulate a stock of finished work, thus making deliveries of seasoned in place of green printing, which never lasts as well as when it is seasoned. This it has never been able to do because of its want of printing capacity.

If there were a need for increasing the supply of notes so as to provide the Government with a seasoned stock, the men who were discharged because of a lack of internal-revenue work might readily have been employed on the production of United States notes. We may, therefore, fairly infer from the facts in the case that there is nothing whatever in the suggestion that a stock of seasoned notes is necessary, and nothing in the further suggestion that a change of policy has taken place involving more rapid destruction of currency, and therefore the need of greater ability to produce currency within a limited time. Some motive other than the one assigned must be looked to for the reason for the making of the change.

Mr. Johnson further says that Congress expects that the work will be executed "at the lowest possible cost, attaining at the same time the highest quality of work." Neither Mr. Johnson nor anybody else has ever professed to believe that the best work was performed or could be performed upon the steam presses. In a recent interview in the Washington Post Mr. Johnson has stated that "the latticework on the back can be done more evenly by steam than by hand;" but an investigation of the recent issues, particularly of the silver certificates, will show that the so-called "latticework" is a feature of minor importance, and an unessential detail of the engraving, the protective and at the same time the artistic features being contained in the vignettes and other specimens of ornamental engraving. It is contended on behalf of the plate printers that printing of this kind can not be done by steam presses, and this contention has never been opposed by anybody.

Mr. Johnson's present position is entirely inconsistent with his position and statements in times past, as may readily be observed by reference to his prior reports. In his report of October 1, 1894 (House Executive Document No. 2, Fifty-third Congress, third session, page 722), he says:

I consider the artistic beauty of the design for a bank note to be as essential against counterfeiting as the manner in which either the engraving or printing is executed. In fact, they must all be of the highest standard of excellence to afford perfect protection. To attain this standard of excellence I have secured the services of some of the best engravers and printers, and have received aid from some of the most talented artists of the country in preparing designs for the new issue of silver certificates, and the result, in my opinion, will be not only a creditable work from an artistic standpoint, but a series of notes which it will be beyond the skill of counterfeiters to imitate in a way which will be at all dangerous to commerce.

He now proposes to change the system of engraving on the back of notes to latticework, which may be done, as he says, more evenly by steam, and which is, because of its very uniformity, readily reproduced by photographic methods of counterfeiting. He proposes differing from his former conclusion, to discard that which, according to his own statement, "is a creditable work from an artistic standpoint," and to create, so far as the backs of the currency are concerned, a series of notes which may be readily counterfeited.

But Mr. Johnson now states that—

The claim made by the plate printers that increased danger from counterfeiting will result from the use of steam presses for the printing of the backs of bank notes is raised by them simply by way of argument, without any substantial ground whatever to stand upon.

That this is incorrect on its face the plate printers have shown, and I particularly direct attention to the testimony of Mr. J. W. Osborne, a very competent authority. The even and shallow lines produced by the steam presses are infinitely more readily counterfeited than the product of the hand presses.

But Mr. Johnson is inconsistent with himself. In his report made October 1, 1896 (House Document No. 8, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, page 564), he says:

I am of opinion that the standard established by the recent issues should be maintained. They have been produced by the employment of the best artistic talent in the country, the best engravers, the use of the best materials, and the most careful printing that can be done. All of these factors go to make up the greatest difficulties in the production of notes, even in this Bureau, where every facility for the work is furnished. Therefore if there should be an attempt to counterfeit these notes, the difficulties of the production of a successful counterfeit would be increased tenfold as compared with the regular set forms heretofore used by the Government. I most heartily recommend that in all new issues of the Government this policy be continued.

In 1896, about eighteen months ago, Mr. Johnson thought that the most careful hand printing was none too good for the Government issues. He now proposes to employ a method denounced by everyone familiar with the subject as inferior, and to meet the requirements of this inferior method he is now engaged upon engraving new plates, using more extensively than before mechanical lathe work, which is in itself expressionless and inartistic.

He is departing also from the policy indicated by his report of date October 28, 1895 (House Document No. 8, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 494), wherein he used the following language:

With your approval, it has been my policy to employ the best talent and furnish the best materials in all branches of the service, having at all times a due regard for judicious economy. This policy has been productive of the best results, and it is asserted by those who are familiar with the service that more engraved dies have been added to the stock of the Bureau during the year than in twenty preceding years.

And, Mr. President, it will be understood that during the time this testimony was given by this gentleman at the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing no hand work was being done in the great Bureau over which he presides.

Mr. Johnson has also cruelly attacked the personnel of those under his direction. I regret exceedingly that this policy has been resorted to. Such course is not only demoralizing to his employees and destructive to the best interests of the Government, but it is not borne out by former communications addressed by him to the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Johnson says in the memorandum attached to a letter addressed to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] of date April 2, 1898:

We now have over 300 plate printers upon our rolls. Out of their number there are at least 50 men who can not or do not do good work, who will remain absent without leave, thus causing the Bureau the loss of the product of their presses, and who each pay day, if they report for duty, show evidence of excessive drinking and nervousness that virtually incapacitates them for good work.

To get rid, therefore, of the alleged incapable or dissipated men to whom he has chosen to give employment in the past, he recommends the use of steam presses.

Mr. President, I hesitate not to assert that the above assertion of Mr. Johnson is an entirely gratuitous libel upon the men under him, and a statement not justified by the fact, not justified by his former reports, and which, if true, would reflect upon his own competency as a director. Only six months previous to the writing of this letter, on October 1, 1897, in House Document No. 8, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, he reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that—

In conclusion it seems proper for me to say that the Bureau is in better working order and is more capable of furnishing all the branches of the Government with the securities desired than it has ever been. The officers and employees of the Bureau seem anxious to maintain and improve the standard of the work, rendering at all times proper cooperation with this office. With this condition prevailing and the continuance of your confidence, the honor of which I fully appreciate, I see no reason why the Bureau of Engraving and Printing should not continue to be classed as the most perfect manufacturing establishment in this country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I beg for order in the Chamber. I wish to hear the very interesting statements which are being made, and I wish that other Senators could hear them; but there is a continual loud conversation all along the outer walls of this Chamber, so that it is practically impossible to conduct the public business properly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair hopes order will be preserved in the Chamber, that Senators will be seated and suspend audible conversation. [A pause.] The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not flatter myself that in the statement I am making, which is, of course, dry and uninteresting, I would have the attention of very many members of the Senate. I will appreciate, however, the order that comes from Senators retiring from the Chamber when they desire to engage in audible conversation. I do not, of course, ask them to listen to me.

I am therefore forced to the conclusion that in attacking the personnel of his office Mr. Johnson has vainly endeavored to discover some argument which will justify his present action. If he was pleased with the personnel in October, 1897, surely there has been no material deterioration since and no reason for the change of opinion.

Certainly, Mr. President, there can not be any valid reason for Mr. Johnson putting on record a statement that fifty of the employees of that Bureau are men who indulge in habits of intoxication and who are unworthy to be retained in the Bureau in which they have long been at work, and concerning whom six months ago Mr. Johnson himself gave the testimony which I have read.

If in October, 1897, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was "more capable of furnishing all the branches of the Government with the securities desired than it had ever been," surely out of his own mouth he has proven the absence of necessity or excuse for the employment of steam presses, and it can not now be true as he states in his memorandum, that "the physical force of this Bureau is becoming inadequate to meet the requirements of the Government."

But Mr. Johnson says:

The available space in the building is also becoming inadequate to meet the gradual increase of the work.

And to prove this he refers to the fact that his office has—recommended year after year during my administration, as well as that of my predecessor, and even prior to his incumbency, an appropriation for additional buildings in which to place our ink mill, rag laundry, storeroom, etc., with the expectation that the main building would be relieved, so that more space might be made in that way, but without avail.

In this statement Mr. Johnson has been to the highest degree disingenuous. It is true that in his reports made in 1896 and 1897 he asked for an appropriation for buildings in which to operate the machinery of the laundry and the ink mill with safety and to proper advantage, and in his report for 1896 he contended that the frame buildings in use for that purpose were entirely insufficient in size for the end desired, and were dangerous because of dilapidation. He did not in his report intimate that the main building was too crowded for the purpose for which it was intended, or ask more room for the business carried on therein. He would now have Congress believe that the space in the main building is inadequate. If this were true, why did he not in October, 1897, ask for an increase in its size? He made no such request, and the only request made in his report is for a building in which to operate the machinery of the laundry and ink mill with safety and to proper advantage. He said:

The further use of the present wooden sheds is not only disadvantageous to the service, but very dangerous to the surrounding property. They contain combustible material which is liable to fire, and in the case of the laundry, which has already been injured to a considerable extent by fire, it is becoming so decayed as to be dangerous to the lives of the men working therein. I most earnestly request your assistance in securing from Congress a sufficient appropriation to construct such buildings as are needed to make this branch of the service creditable and safe.

The operations for which he asked a new building were not and are not carried on in the main building; it is safe, therefore, to assume that the crowding of the building had nothing whatever to do with the employment of steam presses—not simply because of the fact that such crowding was never discovered until Mr. Johnson's proposed use of the steam presses was challenged, but also because of the fact that any saving of space by the employment of the dozen steam presses he desires would be entirely immaterial. Each steam press takes up the space of between two and three hand presses, while doing the work of, at the outside, not more than four hand pressmen. The saving, therefore, to result from the difference between the space occupied by 12 steam presses and 48 hand presses is too immaterial to justify argument.

As to the quality of our currency and the necessity for exercising the greatest possible care to make counterfeiting as difficult as possible, I call attention to the fact that Mr. Brooks, who was Chief of the Secret Service for nearly a quarter of a century and who was an expert of experts in detecting counterfeit money, gave testimony in favor of hand work, as did also Mr. Bell, who succeeded him. They both gave positive and explicit testimony before the House committee against the use of steam presses, and they readily picked out from the samples the steam-printed ones.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made a suggestion on another point which is worthy of some consideration. As I remember the matter, he called the attention of the Senate to the fact that we were on the verge of a war; that very likely we were to have war with the Kingdom of Spain. He suggested that in that emergency it might be very important that we should have facilities in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for turning out more currency and internal-revenue stamps than can be done by hand presses. Well, Mr. President, that suggestion is entitled to consideration, and I presume it influenced to a certain extent the minds of Senators who heard the statement from the lips of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I have made some inquiry concerning that matter, and I think that that is a danger which we need not apprehend.

In 1861 a steam press such as for a time was used in that Bureau, and which it is now proposed to reintroduce, was unknown; it had not been invented. We went through the great war from 1861 to 1865, and I take it we printed more paper money than we shall print in the little war of a week, or two, or three, or four, or five, or six weeks that we are going to have with Spain. I take it we printed then more internal-revenue stamps than we are going to be called on to print if we conclude to increase the tax on beer or on some other of the luxuries in which the American people indulge. I say I take it for granted that we printed infinitely more of paper money and of internal-revenue stamps from 1861 to 1865 than we shall be called upon to print during the coming war, if war shall come to this country; and yet, Mr. President, the hand presses were adequate to do the work during the four years of that terrible conflict, and the hand presses will be adequate to do the work in any emergency, in my judgment, that may come upon the people of this country. I have no apprehension on that point.

There are hundreds of hand pressmen out of work to-day in the United States, men who have given long years to learn that intricate and difficult trade, who will be glad of employment by the Government of the United States if the necessity arises to ask for their employment. So I think, Mr. President, that that suggestion on the part of the Senator from Iowa, made in good faith, while it is entitled to serious consideration, need not influence the vote of a single member of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, we all admire art; we all like a real picture instead of a counterfeit picture; we all like real money instead of counterfeit money; we all like our currency, which goes into our pockets and into those of our families and our friends, to be money which the counterfeiter will find it difficult to imitate rather than easy to imitate.

I wish that every member of the Senate had had the opportunity that I have sought to examine the difference between hand plate printing and steam printing, so far as the securities and the currency of this Government are concerned. I have here, Mr. President [exhibiting], a calendar issued by the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Boston, Mass. This company did not economize in printing the calendars which they sent out to their patrons; they did not put them on steam presses that would have printed them, very likely, for one-quarter of what they paid for this beautiful specimen of hand printing.

I wish every Senator would take this calendar in his hands; I wish he would run his eye over it and see how beautifully those figures and those letters are raised. While a steam press would print an even impression, it would have none of the beautiful features which this calendar has. I submit, when we can have such work as that done upon our currency, that it is an absurdity, on the ground of economy or for any other reason, for this great

Government of ours to save a few dollars in printing $100,000 worth of money which is to go into the pockets of our people, and which is to be examined by every counterfeiter in the entire world.

Let us be wise in this matter; let us remember that there is a species of economy that is the rankest extravagance; let us see to it by our votes to-day that we ask and insist that the currency which is given to the people of this country shall be the best currency that can be turned out in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I would not say one word to-day if I did not think it a duty. I do not like to talk against Niagara.

In the line of what my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was saying a few minutes ago, I have statements from men who know what they are talking about.

It is asserted that by the use of the hand-roller press the work will be too slow for the task that may be set us. I am assured that ten men in thirty days can run out $100,000,000 of bonds. There is no difficulty about paying debts by printing, if that is to become the fashion in war times—not the slightest difficulty in the world of doing all the work by hand. Hand-roller printing is a little slower than the machine work, but it is far more excellent; sufficiently so to pay for the slight addition of time and expense.

The United States has had a very high reputation in all this matter. Much paper money has been printed for other countries, and likewise bonds, and it has been the best work done in the world. It is done in the only way that good work can be done. I explained, at quite sufficient length, the other day the matter of hand printing and the extreme care and delicate manipulation that there inevitably must be in adjusting the right of quantity of ink to each part of the picture, and especially to the more delicate parts. The light lines want but little ink in them, and the others will require more, because they are deep.

The only way on earth to do that is by the rubbing of a rag, held in the hands of a man who has learned his trade, and also, as I explained, by rubbing the ball of his hand over the plate to give the delicate touch, which can not be given in any other way. You can not find a man who is a judge of art or fine work outside of the Government, a dealer in elegant engravings, who will say we ought to think of doing this work by the new steam press. Suppose a plate passes along very rapidly and the rag is guided by the machine; it will take the ink, but it may take it all out of the part where the lines are very light. There is danger of taking the ink out of those delicate parts, and the face of the note may become daubed where there are deep cuts in the plate.

They have done some work by steam presses which they profess is very good indeed, but how do you think it is done? In some cases it is done in this way. They sacrifice the rapidity of execution. They stop each plate and let a plate printer take the rag in his hands and delicately distribute the ink. They go over each plate in the hand-roller way and say that is steam-press printing.

This subject has been investigated very thoroughly here over and over again. A very thorough investigation took place ten years ago, when, after laborious investigation, a committee of the House of Representatives reported as follows:

> But the committee can not agree that the mere question of economy in printing the obligations and securities of the Government merits consideration in this connection. In their opinion there is but one point in issue in considering this bill, and that is the duty of the Government to afford the citizen the greatest attainable security against counterfeit notes; and being satisfied that this security can be obtained in greater degree by using the hand-roller press exclusively, they are unanimously of the opinion that the steam presses should be discarded.

I wish also to quote a little bit from men who are recognized authorities in this matter. Mr. Logan C. Murray, president of the National Bankers' Association of America, said:

> Referring to a conversation had with you in Washington, I would say that at all times the bankers of the country will not be satisfied unless the methods of printing, numbering, and issuing securities of the United States will approach the nearest to absolute security against error and fraud, even though such methods be more expensive, and Congress should make such appropriation as will secure this end.

I read now from Mr. Lorenzo J. Hatch, formerly a prominent engraver of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, afterwards an employee of the Western Bank-Note Company, of Chicago, Ill. I do not know whether or not he is living now. He was considered an expert and a judge.

> In answer to your request for my opinion of steam-power plate printing, I would say that steam presses, such as are now in use, can have no proper place in the production of Government securities if it is the policy of the Government to depend upon excellence of work for its protection. The high standard of work which the United States Government has demanded in the past has developed the professions of engraving, transferring, and printing bank notes to a perfection that has attracted repeated orders and millions of dollars from other countries. If the standard is lowered, the professions must follow, just as surely as they rose to meet the high demand.
> While realizing that steam printing, if the work could be done properly, would be an advantage to engravers, inasmuch as it would, by reducing the cost, open a larger field for the adaptation of the art, I do not believe that machines ever can do the work equally well, if hand printing were done under the best conditions possible, and I can not but feel disheartened at the growing tendency to substitute poorer methods of giving expression to so noble an art, and that the feeling of "good enough" should be creeping into a business that has earned this country a world-wide reputation.

There was very careful evidence given in that same investigation by Mr. Bartas P. Newman, an engraver and plate printer, who was in business outside of the Government office. He was asked:

> Q. Can plate printing be properly done by steam presses?
> A. In my opinion it can not. Plate printing, from the nature of the work, can not be adapted to steam process and produce good results.
> Q. Do you think a machine can fill in a plate properly?
> A. No; for the reason that upon the proper distribution of the ink upon the roller depends the proper filling in of the plate.
> Q. Is it necessary to fill in some parts heavy and other parts light?
> A. If the above question refers to filling in the plate with ink, I would say it is indispensable that the plate should be evenly covered with ink, the amount of ink to be regulated by the depth of the work to be printed.
> Q. Can any machine handle a rag properly and wipe certain parts full and other parts light, according to the nature of the engraving?
> A. No machine can fill the conditions named in the above question. The wiping of a machine must be of a hard scraping character, thinning out the line, effacing the fine turning work of a plate, that makes up the finish of an engraving, and makes it a protection against counterfeiting.

I heard a remark made when this debate began some days ago about the walking delegate. The walking delegate has nothing to do with this question. I am not talking for him. I am not talking because I desire any particular number of plate printers to be employed. I am speaking for the credit of the art of the country and for its protection against easy counterfeiting. That is what I am speaking for; and I sincerely hope the amendment may pass.

A single word as to what can be done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and how much can be printed there. They can get out in an emergency, such as may come upon us now, whatever work may be required. There are recorded at the Bureau to-day the names of some 70 or 80 of the best plate printers in the United States, who have so recorded their names there because they think that under the circumstances there may be a chance of their getting employment. The work can be done well—excellently well; there are plenty of men, and there is nothing in the world in the way except the false notions of economy, which can no more produce good currency than a chromo maker can produce a work of ancient or modern high art in painting.

Go to the loan exhibition in the old Corcoran Art Gallery, and see if you suppose a machine running along like the presses which run daily issues of our newspapers can produce a fine painting or anything more than a machine chromo performance. Go to a fine gallery of engravings and etchings, and see whether you think a machine can do such work as that. No, sir. It will be degrading to the character of our Government, running a risk of counterfeiting, and doing injustice to ourselves in every respect if we fail to pass this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word, Mr. President, on this question. I agree substantially with everything the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] have said. Certainly, our paper money, our postage stamps, and our internal-revenue stamps should be printed in the best style of the art of printing, but the difficulty with me is that I do not think the Senate of the United States and the other House should by direction say how this work shall be done. To force a particular policy or a particular method upon an executive officer of the Government is to distrust that officer as to his ability to execute the powers assigned to him. It is for the executive power to deal with such questions.

I can not conceive that any Secretary of the Treasury would be willing that any of the notes or bonds or even postage stamps executed under his direction should be imperfectly executed. Here is a proposed statutory limitation on our part to deal with this question. That is my chief objection to the amendment. To suppose that he will use steam presses in order to throw upon the public imperfect currency, currency which can easily be counterfeited, seems to me impossible.

The Senator from New Hampshire took occasion to make an observation upon the remarks I made a few days ago respecting what is very likely to occur within a day or two, and he cited the experience of 1861 to 1865. Mr. President, in 1861–1865, take the simple item of postage stamps, and there was not, in my belief, one postage stamp used then where there are a hundred used now.

Mr. GALLINGER. This does not touch that.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, but I am speaking of this question generally. I remember when I first entered this Chamber I was placed upon the Committee on Appropriations, where I was assigned to the Post-Office appropriation bill. In 1873 the total revenues of the Post-Office Department for the prior year were $22,000,000, of which, if I remember aright, only about three-fifths was for postage stamps, at three cents each; yet last year there was realized from the sale of postage stamps alone more than $65,000,000, if my memory serves me correctly. So with beer stamps, so with all the stamps we have issued, and that we are to issue. We have increased the number very largely year by year.

My criticism is only that we have not now enough force to print a sufficient amount of currency and stamps to meet the present needs of the Government, and yet we propose to restrict the Secretary of the Treasury when it is possible that this work will soon be largely increased. That is all I mean to say.

I have no personal wish about this matter at all. I think it is bad policy for us legislatively to say that we shall not use good machines in the work of the Government if we have good machines; and to suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury would use bad machines for the execution of any work of this kind, it seems to me, can not be possible.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator think, in view of the statements which I have read from the printed testimony and the letters, that Secretaries of the Treasury and Superintendents of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing can be relied upon not to make mistakes?

Mr. ALLISON. I had not quite finished, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator had concluded his remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I had not. I had not quite finished; but, in reply to the Senator, I may say I know that executive officers will make mistakes; we all make them; but the criticism I make is that we are legislatively undertaking to correct any mistakes which those officers may make. I think it is not probable that the Secretary of the Treasury is likely to throw out upon the public imperfect money which can be easily counterfeited. That is all I maintain. I have no personal care about the subject one way or the other. If it is desired to restrict the Secretary of the Treasury or any of the Departments of this Government by legislation as to how they shall do their work, that is for the Senate to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I say we have a right to instruct executive officers as to any part of their work, particularly when we find that they have been introducing deficient processes. Although the Senator says they will not do that, they have done it, and they are now proposing to do more of it. Hence this amendment.

The Secretary of the Treasury is not always a man capable of judging how work should be done in all of the branches under him. Perhaps he has not studied this matter as thoroughly as the artists have, or as much as some other people in the world have, or as much as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has, or as much even as I have. I doubt if the Secretary of the Treasury has paid anything like the amount of attention to it that I have.

The present Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was not brought up to this business, and when you go outside and select the head of one of these offices for political reasons, no matter how worthy he may be as an active and practical business man, it does not follow that he becomes immediately a master of the finer parts of what ought to be very good artistic work.

When the order was given to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for $50,000,000 in 4 per cent bonds, Mr. Johnson gave instructions to the chief of the engraving division to get up new designs for the back and tint of the thousand-dollar coupon bond, saying at the same time that he wanted to produce the most artistic bond that had ever been turned out by the Government.

That is laudable ambition. I do not think he can surpass some produced there long ago. The plates were engraved according to his directions and issued to the printers with instructions to print them in the most careful manner. When the bonds were nearly ready to be issued, Mr. Johnson discovered he had made an error in giving the order for new designs of the back and tint. He at once issued an order that the printing of the bonds should cease, because the backs of the former issue were printed by the typographic process and by putting them on the hand presses it would change the nature of the bonds.

When the order was given to cease printing the bonds from hand-roller presses, there were from eighty to one hundred thousand impressions printed, which was a great loss to the Government, as they were very expensive. The back paid $30 a thousand for the printing; the tint, $32 a thousand; the face, $35 a thousand. There were about 50,000 backs, from thirty to forty thousand tints, and at least 10,000 faces printed. After stopping the printing of the bonds Mr. Johnson gave orders to have the backs of the whole issue reprinted from typographic presses, as stated in his letter.

This enormous loss is not for printing alone and does not include engraving of plates or material, such as paper, inks, and labor to prepare the same.

This vast number of bonds that were printed by mistake were kept in the vaults of the Bureau for several months and finally destroyed.

There is the capable manager of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. We desire simply to bar out a very bad style of printing in what should be our best, because he is about to introduce these very presses that are spoken of.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Iowa lays great stress upon the fact that we use a great many more postage stamps now than we did in 1861, and on that point there is no difference of opinion. But as I remarked the other day, postage stamps cost so little and it is so utterly impossible for any citizen in this country to carry around postage stamps that have been counterfeited and find parties who will purchase them—detection being absolutely sure—that no question has been raised as to the continuance of printing those stamps on the steam presses. That cuts no figure in the controversy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will my colleague allow me to suggest on this point that postage stamps do not pass for years through the hands of the people of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are put on envelopes and that is the end of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is an added reason. We make no contention on that point. Postage stamps are being printed on the steam press and they will continue to be printed on steam presses, so that it cuts no figure in this controversy.

The present Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, as the Senator from Connecticut has stated, was not educated in this business. I presume he has learned a great deal since he took his place. At any rate, he has learned enough to make a claim that he is under the civil service, and he has been kept in the Bureau as a relic of the last Administration. I care, however, nothing particularly about that, except that I would dispose of him as I would dispose of a great many other men if I had my way in getting rid of this bogus, so-called civil-service reform.

The Senator from Iowa says we are short of help in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. If that be true, it is a remarkable circumstance that somewhere from 30 to 50 skilled engravers were recently dismissed. The fact is, as I stated a moment ago, that there are hundreds of these men out of employment in the country—skilled men who have given a great many years to learn this business and who would be glad of employment by the Government if the Government needs their services.

That is all I care to say about it. I have no personal interest in this question, but, having studied it a good many years ago and having reached conclusions which have not been changed by anything that has occurred since, I do most sincerely trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I sympathize with these skilled mechanics; but I do not see how it is possible for me to vote for a proposition to prohibit the use of machinery by Government officers.

Mr. HAWLEY. In certain things only; it is limited.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see how I can vote for an amendment that prohibits the use of machinery which the Secretary of the Treasury and the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing say will do the work or certain parts of it just as well as hand work, and that it is of better use and enables them to do more business, and that it is in the interest of the public service.

I shall vote against the amendment. If there is anything wrong about the system, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will be responsible. I am willing to trust them. The Government can not afford at this late day to prohibit the use of machinery.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator ought not to say "prohibit the use of machinery," for everybody knows that a large body of work will be done by the machines. I merely say there are some things in this world that can not be done by machinery.

Mr. WHITE. I know nothing of this subject except what has been suggested in the course of the debate, and I am very much interested. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether there is any dispute that the work done by the hand process is better than other work? Is there any dispute as to that proposition?

Mr. ALLISON. Certain work, of course, can only be done by the hand press, and that work is done by the hand press. Certain other work may be done just as well, and perhaps better, by the steam press.

Mr. HAWLEY. Never better.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps never better, but quite as well.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are only a few things limited here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend to enable the Senate to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 110) authorizing the National Reunion

Monument Association to erect a monument in the city of Washington to the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of the rebellion.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent No. 20694 to Mary J. Day, inventor;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 175) for a survey of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wis.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 227) providing for the compilation and printing of parliamentary precedents of the House of Representatives.

The message further announced that the House had agreed with amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to finish my sentence. It is not intended by this amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend for a moment. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Allison,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Roach,
Bacon,	Frye,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Spooner,
Berry,	Gear,	Martin,	Stewart,

Caffery,	Gray,	Mills,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Turley,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Turner,
Chandler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Clark,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Vest,
Clay,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Penrose,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	White,
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Davis,	Kenney,	Pettus,	Wolcott.
Debee,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.
Elkins,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,
Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Quay,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives in relation to House joint resolution No. 233.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 18, 1898.

Resolved, That the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein," with the following amendments:

Line 1, strike out "are, and."

Line 2, strike out all after "independent" down to and including "Island," in line 4.

Amend title so as to read: "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry this resolution into effect."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in my anxiety to secure the speediest possible action upon this great question I have refrained from taking any part in the debate until the present time, and now desire to say a few words.

The joint resolution as it comes from the House and is now before us adopts precisely, with the exceptions which I will notice in a moment, the joint resolution which was reported from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, with the addition of the amendment prepared by the Senator from Colorado and proposed by me. The exceptions are striking out the words "are, and" in the joint resolution as reported from the Senate committee, and in striking out what is known as the Turpie amendment, recognizing the present independence of the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. President, this whole question has been subject to much debate, to much controversy, and to several ultimatums. In the meantime the indignity inflicted upon this nation by the destruction of the Maine has remained unchastised; in the meantime many lives have passed away, while we have been debating over this question; in the meantime a perilous and distressing conflict of opinion as to the powers of this Government has arisen respecting the powers of the President and the powers of the Congress. We have now arrived at a time when it is most important to have the utmost conciliation of views and temperateness of feeling; we have arrived at a time when in twenty minutes we can settle this entire question and relieve the situation of the exasperating suspense which it has imposed upon the American people.

In regard to the question of the recognition of the independence of Cuba, I think no man doubts, I think no man has any right to doubt, that, as the result of the intervention of this Government, the independence of that republic will follow immediately and that (for its existence must be conceded to be a historical and also a present fact) such recognition will be of the present government, inasmuch as it is well known that 80 per cent of the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba are in its favor.

But, now, Mr. President, appealing to that desire which we all have that the action of this great Government shall be no longer delayed, that we shall not pause to embarrass ourselves and this great controversy in perilous contradictions of the various powers of the executive and legislative departments of the Government, realizing perfectly well that the desire which everybody entertains that the question of recognition shall be settled at the earliest possible moment, and that it can be settled to-morrow or the next day, or in a week from now, or whenever necessary, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is true that this question might be settled speedily, but it is quite as important that it should be settled rightly. The hostility of the Administration and the former Administration to the patriots of Cuba is clearly marked out by the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. They there declare unanimously that we have not been neutral, but that we have given aid and comfort to Spain all the time, which is a new departure in the history of this Government. Whatever may be the relative powers of Congress and of the Executive in this matter, whatever obiter dicta there may be, one thing is certain. In every case, when the President has been dealing with such a matter, he has submitted the question to Congress and refused to himself any arbitrary power. It would be interesting to know how Mr. Monroe treated a question like this, and contrast it with the way we are treating it. I will be excused for reading a passage or two from his first annual message to Congress in 1817, when he used the following significant words:

It was anticipated at an early stage that the contest between Spain and the colonies would become highly interesting to the United States. It was natural that our citizens should sympathize in events which affected their neighbors. It seemed probable also that the prosecution of the conflict along our coast and in contiguous countries would occasionally interrupt our commerce and otherwise affect the persons and property of our citizens. These anticipations have been realized. Such injuries have been received from persons acting under authority of both the parties, and for which redress has in most instances been withheld.

This is the important part:

Through every stage of the conflict the United States have maintained an impartial neutrality, giving aid to neither of the parties in men, money, ships, or munitions of war. They have regarded the contest, not in the light of an ordinary insurrection or rebellion, but as a civil war between parties nearly equal, having as to neutral powers equal rights. Our ports have been open to both, and every article the fruit of our soil or of the industry of our citizens which either was permitted to take has been equally free to the other. Should the colonies establish their independence, it is proper now to state that this Government neither seeks nor would accept from them any advantage in commerce or otherwise which will not be equally open to all other nations.

This was in 1817. In his third annual message he used the following language:

In the civil war existing between Spain and the Spanish provinces in this hemisphere the greatest care has been taken to enforce the laws intended to preserve an impartial neutrality. Our ports have continued to be equally open to both parties and on the same conditions, and our citizens have been equally restrained from interfering in favor of either to the prejudice of the other.

Mr. TELLER. I think there is a general feeling here that we should like to vote on this question, and I appeal to the Senator from Nevada to allow us to take a vote, if it can be taken without further debate.

Mr. STEWART. If it can be taken without further debate I will yield the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to House joint resolution No. 233.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. He is detained at home by sickness in his family. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. The senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] is necessarily absent, and stands paired with his colleague [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MONEY. My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is absent, sick.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GEAR. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], as I have stated. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 46; as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the joint resolution, as passed by it, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Let the question be divided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia has a right to have the question divided. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate insist on its amendments to the joint resolution as sent to the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Is that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DAVIS. And that the conferees be appointed by the President of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the parliamentary situation to be that now the joint resolution goes back to the House. I suppose we may request a conference if we may see fit, but the usual customary vote after insistence is that the bill goes back to the House, and the House can pass on it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is right.

Mr. TELLER. But I suppose we might do otherwise.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have never known in my experience a case where when the two Houses are at odds and a question of concurrence has been voted upon, thus disclosing the antagonism of the two Houses, that the body where the antagonism has been disclosed, as it has come from the other House, has insisted upon its position, and has further in the interest of a fair and speedy solution of the difficulty appointed conferees, but to assemble together in careful, considerate, and, it may be, solemn conference, in order to adjust the difficulties.

The whole process of conferees to act for the two bodies is in the interest of final harmony. It is to prevent deadlocks. It is each saying to the other, under the condition of developed antagonism and contrariety of opinion, the wise thing is not to have inflammatory discussion, not for either body to stand square and decline to yield, but that each House intrusts to competent conferees, appointed under rules and precedents, to consider the subject-matter and as speedily as possible emerge from the condition of antagonism.

I have never known in my experience where this has not been done. When the second body to whom the question comes has voted not to concur with the amendment put on by the other body, conferees have always been appointed. Nay, Mr. President, it has frequently been the case in this body that when an amendment is put on for the first time, as in the case of the action of the Senate on Saturday last, conferees have been appointed. But when the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, proposed then to appoint conferees, it was objected to, because it was said on the other side that we want to give the House a chance to agree to our amendment.

No man here at that time thought for a moment, when that objection was made, that if our measure went to the House and the House did not agree to it and sent it back with an amendment, it would then be insisted that there should be no conference. There is but one aim in this, Mr. President, and that is that there shall not be any body created out of which harmonious action shall be taken and the two bodies allowed to agree.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it not be harmonious if the House agrees to the Senate amendments?

Mr. HALE. There is a determination on the part of the temporary majority here to stand up squarely and dragoon everybody else into their proposition, no matter what the delay, no matter that we have propositions coming over from the other House that contain every elemental part that everybody is desirous of securing in this matter, that contain in them propositions for immediate action, for intervention, for freedom to Cuba. No matter if that is so, when we are asked to accede to the House of Representatives, that is voted down, and then we are asked not to allow a conference to be appointed. Of course, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests to me, it is indirectly an attack upon the almost solid majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, there is but one speedy way out of this. I have never been in favor of precipitating war. I recognize its calamities. I recognize its losses and horrors. I can see that the situation has arrived where, unless there is an absolute recession and abandonment of Cuba by the Spaniards, there must come the stern arbitrament of war. And, Mr. President, the sooner it is settled the better.

Mr. President, there may be here a temporary majority, but, sir, the country will see, and see speedily, that here is not now simply the disposition to aid in the freedom of Cuba, but a determination to thrust before the Executive a process and a procedure of which he is not in favor, of obliging him to conduct this matter not in the interest of speedy intervention and freedom for Cuba, but to insist upon the one thing, the recognition of the insurgent as an actual government, a question that the great parliamentarians and lawyers of this body, including my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], have made so clear and plain that no man ought to doubt. Is it worth the while, Mr. President; is it worth the while, Senators, in this great question which involves the freedom of Cuba—is it worth the while at every time and every turn to insist upon such conduct as keeps putting us in array against the House of Representatives and in array against the propositions of the President?

The people of the country will soon learn what this means. We, sir, are in favor of immediate action. We want this customary method of a committee of conference between the two Houses that shall report to each House. I have never known of a controversy, even where the question of a pension of $12 a month has to be settled, when the two Houses are at deadlock, that was not settled by a committee of conference. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TELLER. What is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is that the Senate ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, during my service in the Senate I have never known the course suggested by the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to be followed in any case of a bill of importance or of no importance. I think the Senators who make this proposition, in justice to themselves and to the Senate, ought to give us some reasons why this unusual course should be followed to-day. Do they desire that there shall be no composure of the differences between the two Houses? Do they desire that no action shall be taken upon this proposition at any time?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The House of Representatives has asked for no conference, and it seems to me there is no reason, after the Senate has insisted on its amendments, to state to the House and to the world that we are not in earnest in insisting on the amendments, but that we shall have a conference. The House has asked for no conference.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that the body which puts on the amendment does not customarily ask for a conference? The measure goes to the other body, and the body that disagrees to the amendment invariably asks for the conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Maine is wrong about that.

Mr. HALE. I certainly am not wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. You certainly are. I made a conference report this morning, and the procedure was directly opposite to what you state.

Mr. HALE. We have sometimes gone on and appointed the conferees first, but I have never known when there came over from the House a disagreement to an amendment that the Senate did not ask for a conference. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that the Senators who are in favor of this extraordinary procedure do not desire or intend to explain their motives in voting. I have had eighteen years' experience in the Senate, and I have never known a bill at this stage to pass either House with insistence upon amendments without a conference being asked for. There must be some reason somewhere for this very unusual procedure.

Mr. MILLS and others. Vote! Vote!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the Senate request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). Upon the announcement made on a previous ballot of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PASCO. I again wish to announce the pair of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] with his colleague [Mr. PLATT], and to announce that if the senior Senator from New York were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 43; as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill may be resumed, the other matter, I understand, having been disposed of for the present.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose only to finish the sentence that I was uttering when the message from the House came in. I call the attention of gentlemen who did not fairly consider this matter to the fact that there are only four classes of work for which we insist or try to insist on having hand-roller printing, "notes, bonds, checks, or internal-revenue stamps." Notes, bonds, and checks ought to be printed on hand presses, because they pass from hand to hand everywhere for a long series of years and they ought to be printed in that style which it is the least easy to counterfeit. Notes, bonds, checks, or internal-revenue stamps are to be printed on hand presses. Let the Bureau proceed to spoil as much paper as they choose with other kinds of printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "retired," in line 12, page 27, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no portion of the sum authorized to be used for plate printing shall be used for any printing of notes, bonds, checks, or internal-revenue stamps other than for printing from hand-roller presses.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say only one word in regard to the amendment. I think as a general rule the proposition is a right one. No part of the general appropriation for the support of any of the Departments ought to be used in the purchase of new machinery when Congress has heretofore practically determined the question, without having the matter brought up for consideration by the committee, and after an investigation.

The question was discussed and examined into by Congress some years ago. There has remained from that day to this the question as to whether the steam machines are equal to the hand work. I do not believe that the Treasury Department, under the circumstances, after the discussion had over it and the determination of Congress, ought to use any part of this appropriation for the purchase of the class of machines that were practically prohibited by both Houses of Congress. I do not want to delay the bill one moment, and I am not going into the question whether the work is as well done with machines as by hand. That is a very grave question. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] shakes his head. It may be one way or the other. The superintendent claims that steam presswork is equally as good; but, be that as it may, the point I make is that, Congress having once determined the question, no part of the general appropriation ought to be used for the purchase of those machines. I shall therefore support the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an amendment to offer that I feel very confident the Senator in charge of the bill will accept. I will state that it has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "dollars," in line 12, page 7, the following proviso:

Provided, That in time of war the President is authorized to use the United States marine hospitals and the hospitals and barracks at the United States quarantine stations for the care of the sick and wounded soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy, and the medical officers of the United States Marine-Hospital Service shall cooperate with the medical officers of the United States Army and Navy in the care of the sick and wounded admitted to said hospital and quarantine stations; and whenever, under these circumstances, medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are serving with medical officers of the Army and Navy they shall take rank during such service in their respective grades with the medical officers of the Army and Navy in accordance with the dates of their present commissions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will simply say that there are twenty-two marine hospitals and eleven quarantine stations in the United States. The capacity of the marine hospitals is 3,680, as shown by a document which I ask shall be printed as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The document referred to is as follows:

LIST OF MARINE HOSPITALS AND QUARANTINE STATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

There are in the United States 22 marine hospitals and 11 United States quarantine stations. The marine hospitals are located as follows:

Location.	Capacity of hospital.	Location.	Capacity of hospital.
Baltimore, Md	100	Mobile, Ala	40
Boston, Mass	150	New Orleans, La	100
Cairo, Ill	65	New York, N. Y	200
Chicago, Ill	200	Portland, Me	50
Cincinnati, Ohio	75	Port Townsend, Wash	60
Cleveland, Ohio	50	San Francisco, Cal	140
Detroit, Mich	75	St. Louis, Mo	100
Evansville, Ind	50	Vineyard Haven, Mass	40
Key West, Fla	50	Wilmington, N. C	20
Louisville, Ky	50	Hospital and barracks at Cape Charles Quarantine.	1,000
Hospital and barracks at Delaware Breakwater	1,000
Memphis, Tenn	65	Total	3,680

The United States quarantine stations are located as follows:
Reedy Island Quarantine, via Port Penn, Del.
Delaware Breakwater Quarantine, Lewes, Del.
Cape Charles Quarantine, Fort Monroe, Va.
Cape Fear Quarantine, Southport, N. C.

South Atlantic Quarantine, via Inverness, Ga.
Brunswick Quarantine, Brunswick, Ga.
Tortugas Quarantine, via Key West, Fla.
Gulf Quarantine, via Biloxi, Miss.
San Diego Quarantine, San Diego, Cal.
San Francisco Quarantine, Angel Island, Cal.
Port Townsend Quarantine, Port Townsend, Wash.

These Government hospitals are all in commission, having a full complement of officers and attendants and equipped with the best ward furniture, modern aseptic outfit for operating rooms, ambulances, etc. The nurses are trained, and the hospital discipline is similar to that in army and navy hospitals. The commissioned corps of medical officers comprises 16 surgeons, 32 passed assistant surgeons, and 22 assistant surgeons.

In case war was declared the restrictions which would be placed upon the merchant marine of the United States would greatly reduce the number of patients from merchant vessels eligible to relief in United States marine hospitals and permit of the reception of a large number of sick or wounded soldiers or sailors from the Army and Navy.

If necessary, temporary ward extensions could be made to many of the Southern hospitals with little expense, which would increase the hospital capacity. Temporary hospitals could also be erected upon some of the quarantine reservations, so isolated as to render them safe to troops who might be sent there. Patients suffering from protracted malarial diseases could be sent to the hospitals North, where the climate would benefit them, and those suffering from acute diseases or injuries requiring immediate attention could be provided for in the hospitals located upon the Gulf and South Atlantic coast. In case troops are landed in Cuba or sent South during the summer, there will be many who will become disabled from fevers incident to climate and exposure who will require hospital treatment.

If the United States marine hospitals are to be used for the reception of soldiers and naval sailors, there must be a law authorizing this to be done, and determining the relative rank of commissioned officers of the Marine-Hospital Service with that of the medical officers of the Army and Navy with whom they serve, to promote the proper administration of hospitals while they are thus used. Officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are now detailed upon United States revenue cutters, which, in times of war, are auxiliary to the naval force, and the United States statutes provide for the relative rank of the commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service with officers of the Navy while serving with them as an auxiliary to the naval force.

Mr. GALLINGER. The object of this amendment is simply to prevent any friction between the medical officers of the Army and Navy and the medical officers of these hospitals and quarantine stations. I think there can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not been able to scrutinize thoroughly the phraseology used by the Senator from New Hampshire respecting the rank of these officers and the effect it will have upon the army and navy officers, but I think the general proposition suggested by the Senator is a wise one, and therefore I will allow it to go into the bill. If we find there is any difficulty regarding it, it can be afterwards arranged.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment can be changed in conference if it shall be necessary.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if this amendment is at all necessary in order to render available the marine-hospital facilities for the care of the wounded of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will frankly say that I think in time of war the United States Government could undoubtedly take possession of the marine hospitals.

Mr. SPOONER. Then what is the necessity for the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it is very evident that there might be some degree of friction between the medical officers of the Army and Navy and the gentlemen who are in charge of the quarantine stations of marine hospitals. This amendment confers no special benefit upon the medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service beyond the fact of giving them a relative rank during the time they serve with the medical officers of the Army and the Navy, and beyond question it will prevent any friction which might otherwise arise. The amendment is not intended to permanently confer any additional authority or power upon these gentlemen.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if his committee has considered this amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would say that the amendment has been before the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, which I think is the proper committee beyond question, and was unanimously reported back from that committee by myself.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg leave to doubt somewhat whether that is the proper committee for determining the rank of medical officers in the Army or in the Navy.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not determine the rank.

Mr. SPOONER. It looks to me like an attempt to foist a little bit further and more firmly this marine-hospital outfit upon the country, although I acquit the Senator from New Hampshire of any such purpose. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he understands that the amendment is in order?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not remember whether the Senator from New Hampshire, for the committee which he represents, had the amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I had it so referred, and I did so at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa himself.

Mr. ALLISON. I asked the Senator whether that was true or not. I take it for granted the amendment is in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator from Iowa report it favorably from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not.

Mr. SPOONER. I make the point of order on the amendment as being new legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the point of order I desire simply to say that this amendment was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, and by that committee unanimously reported back and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If that does not make it in order under the rules of the Senate, then I confess that I have been laboring under a very grave misapprehension as to what those rules are.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand that that makes the amendment in order if it is new legislation.

Mr. GORMAN. And it changes existing law.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it changes existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not change existing law. That is the very point I want to make. It simply gives a certain class of men a status.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all it does. It does not change any law.

Mr. SPOONER. If it gives certain men a status which they have not now, it changes existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it does. You can not change the status of a man under existing law without changing the law. If they have that status now, there is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this amendment had been referred to the Military Committee, the very first step would have been to have consulted the War Department, and incidentally the Navy Department; and it could have been put in no safer hands than those of General Sternberg and General Van Reypen. They ought to have been consulted about it. I think the amendment should have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs; but I am not stubborn about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not relate to military affairs. It does not affect army officers a particle. What has the Military Committee got to do with a question of that kind? It simply affects the marine-hospital surgeons; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. But it proposes to give them rank which they have not now.

Mr. COCKRELL. That does not affect it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the amendment, it simply authorizes the officers in charge of the marine hospitals to admit to them soldiers and officers of the Army of the United States during a period of war. Then there is a sort of shade of legislation which provides that during such period the officers in charge shall take rank according to seniority of commission.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this amendment change existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator be kind enough to answer my question?

Mr. ALLISON. I will be kind enough to answer the question, and I was about to answer it. As I understand it, the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service have no rank at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. But would not they by virtue of existing law be in absolute control of all the marine hospitals, and would an army surgeon or a navy surgeon have any right there at all, unless there was such a law passed?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. The commanding officer could put a United States hospital wherever he pleased.

Mr. COCKRELL. He would have no legal right to do so.

Mr. HAWLEY. During the war I seized half a dozen churches for hospital uses.

Mr. COCKRELL. You may have done so, but you did not have a legal right to do it. You had a military right.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of course you did it. That is the right of might.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a dispute which has been in existence for some time; and it is easy to see how that dispute can be transferred to the Senate. I am myself perfectly willing that we shall by proper legislation authorize in time of war the marine hospitals to be used for our soldiers.

Mr. SPOONER. May they not be now?

Mr. ALLISON. I doubt whether they can be so used now, except through the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury. Of course the marine hospitals are all under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and if he sees proper to open them, I have no doubt he could open them to anybody who desired to enter them.

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of the Treasury is under the control of the President, I presume.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose so.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator from Iowa has no doubt that in a time of war, if the public interest required it, these United States hospitals could be used for the benefit of the Army and the Navy, and that the authority for using them would be very promptly forthcoming?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would.

Mr. SPOONER. What I want to know is whether the amendment does not change existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wisconsin asked me that question a moment ago.

Mr. SPOONER. And you did not answer it.

Mr. ALLISON. I explained to him that the only point in the amendment, so far as I can see, is that we direct who shall be at the head of these hospitals during a time of war, if they are used for our soldiers, and that the officers in charge shall take rank in accordance with the date of their commissions.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there any law now providing for that?

Mr. ALLISON. Not that I know of.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the amendment changes existing law, does it not?

Mr. ALLISON. Here is the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is a fine lawyer and a member of the Judiciary Committee, who has heard the amendment read, and I should rather go to him for an opinion than for him to come to me for an opinion on such a question. I think, if the Senator wants my view about it, however, that in the sense in which he speaks the amendment proposes to enact a statute as to rank which is not now on the statute books.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not take a member of the Judiciary Committee to determine the proposition that any change of law is a change of law.

Mr. ALLISON. It would seem not; neither would it seem necessary to make much inquiry about that by a member of any committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I never heard of the amendment until a moment ago, and I was only asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain the proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I have endeavored to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. I make the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have but a single word to say. I regret exceedingly, Mr. President, that in the present emergency every mention of the Marine-Hospital Service seems to excite certain members of this body. I am not here to defend the Marine-Hospital Service. It needs no defense from me or from any member of this body.

We have, if I may be permitted to say so on this question, a bill before this body in reference to national quarantine that is being antagonized very bitterly by the Senator from Wisconsin, who has a perfect right to antagonize it, and the officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are under fire in certain directions, as I believe, very unjustly. As I said, I am not here to defend those gentlemen. Their acts speak for them more eloquently than any words of mine possibly can.

I can say that I consulted the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations about this matter. He was very courteous to me about it, and himself suggested to me when it was reported back from the committee, to which I think it was properly referred—certainly it was referred to that committee by the Senate—that it should be sent to the Committee on Appropriations. It did not reach the Committee on Appropriations until after the appropriation bill had been reported to the Senate.

I said to the chairman of that committee that I trusted he would permit the amendment to go on the bill without any opposition, and then in conference consider the matter; that if it was not desirable to retain it, to drop it out, and if it was desirable to amend it in any way, to amend it. I have no pride in the matter whatever. I believe it will be well to avoid the friction that may possibly arise between medical officers of the Army and Navy and officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, who will be able to take care of 3,680 sick and wounded soldiers, if we can do so. If we can not do so, I have no objection to any action the Senate may take.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if I understand the proposed amendment, it contemplates making a provision of law to cover a subject-matter amply covered by the present law, with the exception of the extent to which it would give military rank to persons who do not now possess it. I believe that fully two-thirds of the bills referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by the chairman referred to the respective members of that committee as subcommittees, contemplate in some manner or form the gratification of the ambition of some individual to be given military rank in this country. We are now confronted with petitions from the clerical gentlemen all over the country to have the chaplains in the Army designated as captains, if you please. I doubt not that the character of the Christianity will not be thereby improved, but the pay of the chaplains will be improved.

The effort of persons who served during the war of the rebellion in one capacity to be now recognized, after the lapse of thirty-odd years, as having been of another rank, character, or capacity in that struggle, continuously surcharges the files of the committee with the personal desires of gentlemen to get that to which they are not legitimately entitled in many of the cases.

Mr. President, the natural tendency of legislation in this direction is to cheapen the military character and standing in the Army, which men in a legitimate way only acquire by honest and faithful, brave and courageous service in the ranks. To hand about military titles here and there to persons who happen to be for the time being in marine hospitals in this place or that place is to cheapen the very premium that the soldier most highly cherishes as the proper reward for meritorious and courageous service. That is the kernel in this proposed amendment. It is desired to give military rank to persons who are not entitled to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. In answer to the Senator on that point, I will say that I do not think it is going to cheapen military titles very much. If a man has been at the head of the marine hospital possibly for twenty years, who has gone through epidemics of smallpox, of yellow fever, and of every other infectious disease, and is promoted to the extent of giving him the same rank as that of a young man who perhaps graduated a month ago and got into the Army as an assistant surgeon, I do not think it has a cheapening tendency.

I believe many of the men who have given this Government their services, have endangered their lives time and time again—they are experts in the service of the Government, and to have these men displaced by a lot of young physicians who chance to get into the Army under a civil-service examination, and who never had a patient in their lives, whose first surgical operation will be an experiment, and perhaps their twenty-first an experiment. I submit it has no tendency whatever to cheapen titles, but is an act of simple and exact justice.

Mr. CARTER. The contention here made shows that the purpose of this amendment is to interfere with the regular line of promotion in the Army, and I insist that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I disclaim that as being the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not affect the rank of one of the officers or give them any permanent rank.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not one particle, and the Senator from Montana has not read the amendment or he would not make such a bold assertion.

Mr. CARTER. The contention of the Senator from New Hampshire and his own construction of his amendment constitute an admission of the very thing for which I contend.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire disclaims that. I made no such assertion.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator's words speak for themselves. My construction, I take it, is fair.

Mr. President, the marine hospitals are under the jurisdiction of the United States. It is a branch of the service under the control, for the time being, or regularly, of the Secretary of the Treasury; but the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States, if you please, the President, may, in time of war, use these marine hospitals for any purpose he pleases—for barracks, for hospitals, for quarters of any kind—or he may direct every one of them to be torn down and utterly annihilated. What is the use, therefore, of legislating that he may do this when no one questions his right?

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator from Montana understand what the use is? It is another manifestation of this eternal and never-failing and almost always successful grasp of a bureau, when it has once been created under this Government, to reach out and gain strength and power and perpetuate itself and fasten its grip on the people of the country.

Mr. CARTER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me say that I am sorry that the nightmare seems to have gotten hold of the distinguished Senators from Montana and from Wisconsin on this question. Let me read the amendment. Let us understand what the amendment is.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to relieve my friend from Missouri—for he is a very warm friend of mine—from any anxiety on account of my health. I have not the nightmare.

Mr. COCKRELL. You show all the symptoms of it. There is no question about the symptoms.

Mr. SPOONER. If I had it, I would not go to a marine hospital for the cure of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me read the amendment. It says:

And the medical officers of the United States Marine-Hospital Service shall cooperate with the medical officers of the United States Army and Navy in the care of the sick and wounded admitted to said hospitals and quarantine stations, and whenever under these circumstances medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are serving with medical officers of the Army and Navy, they shall take rank during such service in their respective grades with the medical officers of the Army and Navy in accordance with the dates of their present commissions.

Only while they are all in the hospitals together, as between themselves, they have a certain relative rank and grade; but the moment they leave the hospitals, that moment the rank and the grade leave them, and there is no permanency about it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Do they have any rank now if they serve as surgeons of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a question as to whether they would or would not. That they would have absolute control over the marine hospitals there is no question, but to prevent friction we simply give them that rank.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I do not see anything in this amendment that gives the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service while in this temporary employment of the Government any different grade from the one they have now.

Mr. SPOONER. What, then, is the object of the amendment?

Mr. CAFFERY. The object, as I understand it, is to prevent any clash between the surgeons of the Army and the Navy and the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service. That is all; and that is proper. They are to serve in their respective grades each just as they do now. The Marine-Hospital Service is a branch of the civil service, or a branch of the medical board devoted to civil cases, a branch of the Treasury Department. When the Marine-Hospital Service at quarantine stations is taken control of by the United States for temporary purposes of war—and I do hope they will not have any such use of the marine-hospital stations—then this amendment only provides that the army surgeons shall not overslaugh the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service; that each, retaining their own grades, shall serve in their respective capacities. That is what I understand the amendment to be. Is not that the understanding of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. Unquestionably.

Mr. CAFFERY. There is no new law; there is no assignment to different service by surgical work; no increase of pay; and how does the Senator from Wisconsin say that here is the ingrafting of a new law by means of this amendment? I do not think that this is any aggression of the Marine-Hospital Service to promote itself. I think it is a proper amendment to prevent unnecessary clash between these different sets of surgeons, the Army and the Navy surgeons on one side and the Marine-Hospital surgeons on the other. That is all I can see in it. There is no additional rank. They are to serve with the same rank and with no additional pay. The only thing is to keep each within their respective classes, so that one can not overslaugh the other.

I think the Senator from Wisconsin has seen spooks in this business. I do not say he has the nightmare, as the Senator from Missouri charges, but he sees the specter of some great Cæsar grasping at awful authority here. I do not see it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is perhaps because you can not see a spook.

Mr. CAFFERY. I can see through a mud hole as far as the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish I knew more about the present status of the Marine-Hospital surgeons. I do not know whether they are analogous to the surgeons in the Army and the Navy. If they are, we ought to know who they are. We have majors among the surgeons, and first lieutenants and second lieutenants. I do not know whether these officers of the Marine-Hospital Service call themselves generals, colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, or what not. I see just as much embarrassment in one direction as in the other, spoken of by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. ALLISON. They have no rank at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator says they have no rank now at all. I understand they have not what is called assimilated rank or anything of that kind; that they are civilian employees. Now, if war comes along, some young medical officer who, for aught I know, may happen to be called a major or lieutenant-colonel, may take rank over a veteran surgeon in the Navy or in the Army. I think this matter ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am distinctly convinced of it, and I insist upon the point of order that the amendment proposes new legislation. I believe that after finding out that it added something new to the statute book, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] agreed that it must be something new.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am ready that the point of order shall be decided. I simply want to say that the Senator from Connecticut is wrong in his fear that some young officer of the Marine-Hospital Service will come along and take rank over a veteran in the military or naval service. The fact is that it is the military or naval gentleman who comes to the Marine-Hospital Service, the young fellow in the military service, who is quite likely to take rank over the surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not care anything about that point. The Senator began it. I did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not very particular about it. I ask for a decision of the Chair on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). The Chair feels disinclined to pass upon the point of order, having expressed an opinion upon it upon the floor of the Senate, and therefore submits the question to the Senate. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays, so that Senators may be in their seats.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. What are we voting on, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the point of order presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on the proposed amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. The question is, Is the amendment in order? The point is made that it is new legislation.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 7, it is proposed to insert:

That in time of war the President is authorized to use the United States marine hospitals and the hospitals and barracks of the United States quarantine stations for the care of the sick and wounded soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy; and the medical officers of the United States Marine-Hospital Service shall cooperate with the medical officers of the United States Army and Navy in the care of the sick and wounded admitted to said hospitals and quarantine stations, and whenever under these circumstances medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are serving with medical officers of the Army and Navy, they shall take rank during such service in their respective grades with the medical officers of the Army and Navy in accordance with the dates of their present commissions.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not know that it is in order, but I should be glad if the Senator from New Hampshire would modify his amendment by striking out all after the words "quarantine stations," in line 10. Then, I think, there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, in line 10, after the word "stations," by striking out—and whenever under these circumstances medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service are serving with medical officers of the Army and Navy, they shall take rank during such service in their respective grades with the medical officers of the Army and Navy in accordance with the dates of their present commissions.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa if the clause which he proposes to strike out is not all there is of the proposition?

Mr. ALLISON. If that is true, then the whole provision will be struck out; but it still authorizes by law the use of the marine hospitals.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not such use now authorized by law?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; they are just as absolutely under the control of the Treasury Department as this building is under the control of Congress. Every one of these officers is under the Secretary of the Treasury just as much as the post-office is under the control of the Post-Office Department, just as part of the War Department building is under the control of the War Department; the Secretary of the Treasury can not encroach upon it; and an appropriation for the support of these places is made, by specific legislation, under the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War can not interfere with that appropriation or expend the money. This simply authorizes them to use them. Otherwise it would be comity, as a matter of course. The Secretary of the Treasury could permit any of these officers to use it, but he could not expend any of the money that is appropriated for the preservation or care unless the law authorizes it specifically. Now, this authorizes them, and either one of them can expend the money they have for the care of the wounded, in caring for them in those hospitals, and in hiring nurses and employees, and all that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Responding to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, I will say that I do not feel like modifying the amendment. I prefer that it shall either go in or out as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment in order? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I voted, but I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote. I therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that he has not voted.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. BACON. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LINDSAY (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. LINDSAY. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will take the liberty to suggest to Senators, if I may be permitted to do so, that this is not a political question, and I trust they will vote. It will be agreeable to me to have them do so.

Mr. BACON. Under the arrangement I have with the junior Senator from Rhode Island, in cases not political we are at liberty to vote, or when it is necessary to make a quorum. I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], but when I recollect that there are but few marine hospitals in that part of the United States, and feeling sure, therefore, that he will not raise any party question in the matter, I will venture to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LINDSAY. I will take the liberty to vote in order to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allen,	Davis,	McEnery,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Roach,
Cannon,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,

So the Senate decided that the amendment was not in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit another amendment, which has had the indorsement of the Committee on the District of Columbia and which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me to submit a brief statement not lasting over two or three minutes? I desire to make it at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, during the discussion of the Cuban question Saturday evening, and just before the vote was taken——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will withdraw the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLEN. During the discussion of the Cuban question Saturday evening, and just before the final vote was taken on the joint resolution then pending before the Senate, the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] took occasion to say in substance that the united action in this Chamber on the part of Democrats, Populists, and Silver Republicans was due to the recent presence of the Hon. William J. Bryan in this city.

I desire to say that the senior Senator from Maine was mistaken in that statement. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the question, but will be content with submitting as a part of my remarks and placing in the RECORD two interviews with Mr. Bryan, which I am assured are substantially authentic. I ask to have them read in the order of their dates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Extract from Washington Post of March 10, 1898.]

SHOULD ALL STAND AS ONE—W. J. BRYAN HEARTILY APPROVES THE SUPPORT GIVEN THE ADMINISTRATION.

ATLANTA, GA., March 9, 1898.

Hon. W. J. Bryan was at Atlanta to-day, en route for Macon, where he speaks to-night. When asked his opinion of the appropriation of $50,000,000 for national defense, he said:

"I am glad the House acted promptly and unanimously. In fact, it might have been better to have made it $100,000,000, to show the world that Congress and the American people without regard to political differences are ready to support the Administration in any action necessary for the honor of the nation. This appropriation will not necessarily lead to war. Instead, a prompt liberality at this time may lessen the probability of war and in the end prove a wise economy. I never believed that the recognition of belligerency would result in war, but in the present crisis it is useless to discuss what might have been. When quiet is restored the people can consider the past more calmly, but in the face of danger our people should stand as one in the nation's defense."

Mr. Bryan took occasion to compliment General Lee, saying that he had performed his duty with great ability, courage, and discretion, under trying circumstances.

[Extract from Washington Post of April 1, 1898.]

TIME TO INTERVENE—W. J. BRYAN SAYS IT IS THE DUTY OF THE UNITED STATES.

LINCOLN, NEBR., March 31, 1898.

Hon. W. J. Bryan made the following statement in answer to the question whether, in his judgment, the time had arrived for the United States to intervene in the behalf of Cuba and bring the war to an end:

"Yes, the time for intervention has arrived. Humanity demands that we shall act. Cuba lies almost within sight of our shores and the sufferings of her people can not be ignored unless we, as a nation, have become so engrossed in money making as to be indifferent to distress. Intervention may be accompanied by danger and expense, but existence can not be separated from responsibility, and responsibility sometimes leads a nation, as well as an individual, into danger. A neighbor must sometimes incur danger for a neighbor, and a friend for a friend. War is a terrible thing and can not be defended except as a means to an end, and yet it is sometimes the only means by which a necessary end can be secured. The State punishes its own citizens by imprisonment, or even death, when counsel and persuasion fail. War is the final arbiter between nations, when reason and diplomacy are of no avail.

"Spain might not resist intervention; it is to be hoped that she would recognize the right of the United States to act, and immediately withdraw from Cuba; but whether she resents intervention or not, the United States must perform a plain duty.

"Spain has only herself to blame for the condition of affairs in Cuba. If she denies to her former subjects the rights of war and calls the Cuban army a mob, let her remember the words of Victor Hugo, 'The mob is the human race in misery.' No nation can afford to make its people miserable.

"If the Cubans prefer death to Spanish rule, it must be because Spanish rule has robbed life of joy and hope. If a nation sows the wind, it must reap the whirlwind."

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I desire to ask his attention to a very small matter. On page 49 of the bill there is an appropriation of $15,000 for the purpose of establishing and constructing a fish hatchery in Georgia. This appropriation is made in pursuance of a provision in the act last year which appropriated a small sum of money to have the necessary investigations made, the selection of a site, preparation of plans, etc.

The point to which I want to ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa is this. By reason of that prior action everything is now ready; the site has been selected; the consent to the conveyance, without charge to the Government, has already been given; nothing is to be done but to execute the title. The plans have been drawn, as I understand it; the engineer has been down there, and I simply wish to ask if the Senator from Iowa will consent that this appropriation be now made immediately available? It would really not interfere in any manner with anything, and it will enable work to be immediately proceeded with, all the arrangements having been made.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator suggest the language?

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "dollars," in line 6, insert "to be immediately available."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, page 49, insert the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. MORGAN. Read the paragraph as it will read when amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station at Cold Spring, Meriwether County, in the State of Georgia, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment of the same, $15,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, consisting of about 16 acres, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, before the amendment is adopted, whether or not this provision in favor of the Georgia fish hatchery is a war measure? My reason for making the inquiry is this: When my colleague and I brought before the Senate the other day an amendment for the improvement of Mobile Harbor, which is a war measure, and which would bring down the cost of coal in the Bay of Mobile for our war ships to $1.25 a ton, the Senator from Iowa found that it was necessary for him to make objection to it, at which I felt at the time a good deal of chagrin and mortification, because it was imputed to my colleague and myself that our purpose was to sneak into this bill under the pretense of a war measure an amendment which was really intended for the improvement of the harbor of Mobile.

I understood afterwards that the honorable committee had very wisely adopted that course because of the fact that we now need all the money we can possibly raise for the supposed war about to take place between Spain and the United States, and that being true, we can not afford to trench upon the revenues of the United States in any respect at all for any purpose that is not absolutely and essentially at present a war measure. Now, we go into the Treasury of the United States, in advance of the time when this bill provides for the expenditure as a general thing, and we say in regard to the Georgia fish hatchery that it is a necessary proceeding, doubtless, and it shall come out of the Treasury at the present time, at once, not waiting until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. President, there is such a thing as fair play and fair treatment on this floor, and I have not received it, nor has my colleague in regard to this matter. I am not going to forget it, either, because I feel that there has been a great injustice done to us as Senators and to our State and to our motives in regard to this business. I intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, let him have the money, but I now call up the question and present it to the Senator from Iowa, whether or not he is content now to allow this measure to be adopted which will take the money out of the Treasury to-day, instead of waiting until the war with Spain we hope will be over, when we shall not have so much necessity for actual cash on hand as we have now.

I merely desire to call attention to it, and I shall continue to do so whenever occasion presents. I am not going to forget the treatment we have had on this floor, or the motives of it, either. I am not going to forget it until justice is done to the State of Alabama. What we wanted to do, sir, and all we wanted to do, was to furnish the supplies which our State affords so abundantly to the Navy and Army of the United States for the supply of immediate necessity. At the time we were speaking this channel which has been dug through the bay of Mobile by the Government of the United States was obstructed by an English ship that came in there in a time of storm, got into the center of the channel at the turning point, cast her anchor on the wrong side of the ship by mistake, the wind blew it around and obstructed the channel and kept it obstructed for days, and they had to go and dredge that ship out of the channel. Now, notwithstanding that, the Government of the United States, it is announced, has ordered a large body of troops to Mobile. What for? How are you going to get them out of the bay of Mobile, or how could you get them out, under such circumstances?

The Secretary of War knew about this. He knew the importance of the channel. He knew the necessity for it as a war measure. He knew that that ship had been pulled at by four tugs and could not be got straight in the channel any more, and they had to take a dredge and dredge the British ship out. He understood perfectly well that the same thing might occur again, and occur at a moment of time when it would be disastrous to the arms of the United States, when it would be impossible to find access from the camp of the soldiers at Mobile out to the bay, in order to get across to Cuba. He know it perfectly well.

Yet there was some interest here that everywhere assails this proposition, and I found out at last that it was because the Committee on Appropriations believed it was not proper that any money should be used out of the Treasury of the United States except for immediate necessity of war. I do not understand that the encouragement of a fish hatchery in Georgia is an immediate necessity of war. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. At the rate we are considering the pending bill the war will be over, whatever it may be, before the bill passes.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the first complaint I have heard on that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. But in any event, this small appropriation for a fish hatchery, if it is made immediately available, will probably not be made available for expenditure more than two or three weeks before the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. MORGAN. I am going to vote for it.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to give the Senator from Georgia the little benefit of two or three weeks in respect to the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 144, line 7, after the word "Paris," it is proposed to insert:

Not more than two of the three executive officers, and not more than one-half of the other appointees under this paragraph, shall be selected from the same political party.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not accept the amendment, which is the usual thing, I believe. It has been heretofore. It is in relation to the officers of the Government at the Paris Exposition. As the bill reads, there is no provision made that they shall not be of one party, while it is usual to have such a provision. I desire to call attention to the bill reported from the special committee of which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] is chairman, which passed the Senate July 15. In this bill it was provided that not more than three of the commission of five should be of the same party. It is obviously the right thing to do, and I hope that the honorable Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill will agree to the amendment. It involves no money or appropriation, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as the first portion of the amendment is concerned, I have no fault to find with it. I certainly think this matter ought not to be regarded in any sense as a party matter; and I have no doubt that the President will take that view. But I think it is not wise to interfere with the twelve experts who are mentioned here. Indeed, they ought to be gentlemen practically without any party alliance in this position. They ought to be familiar with the business that they will have in hand, and they ought to be selected without reference to their party views. They are to be men of special scientific fitness for the work in hand.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from Iowa will except the first, I will let the other part of the provision go.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will make no objection to the first, because those are officers in some sense.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to modify the amendment so as to read:

Not more than two of the three executive officers under this paragraph shall be selected from the same political party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment as modified is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 23, at the end of line 5, I move to insert:

And the building authorized to be erected at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition, Omaha, Nebr., by joint resolution approved December 18, 1897, for an exhibit of the United States Life-Saving Service.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It is to make provision for the Life-Saving Service at the Omaha Exposition.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is proposed in order that the Life-Saving Service may without difficulty assign the necessary employees to the Omaha Exposition during the period of the exposition. It is thought there may be some question about it. I have a letter here from the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service stating that there is question as to whether they could be so assigned unless provision is made for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course that must change existing law, but I will not make the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is the amendment to be inserted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to come in on page 23, at the end of line 5.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the whole clause be read as it will read when the amendment is inserted.

The Secretary read as follows:

For pay of crews of surfmen employed at the life-saving and life-boat stations, including the old Chicago station, and the building authorized to be erected at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition, Omaha, Nebr., by joint resolution approved December 18, 1897, for an exhibit of the United States Life-Saving Service during the period of actual employment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE. I offer an amendment, and, before the amendment which I have sent to the desk is read, I desire to say that it was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and by them favorably reported and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. However, the amendment is of such a character that I prefer to ask unanimous consent rather than take advantage of the fact that it is in order. I ask that the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 12, insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site for a public building in the city of Butte, Mont., there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000. Said site shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet. The appropriation herein made shall be available during this fiscal year for the purchase of said site.

Mr. MANTLE. In asking unanimous consent I desire to say that the bill to which this amendment relates has already passed the Senate twice, that it has been favorably recommended by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that a similar amendment to this was attached to the sundry civil appropriation bill during the last session. I may also say that the Committee on Appropriations, I think, were favorably impressed with the presentation of the facts relating to the amendment, but did not feel that they could attach it to the bill without showing a favoritism which the circumstances did not warrant. For that reason I have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. GORMAN. It is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say, as respects the proposed public building at Butte, Mont., that the item was put in the sundry civil appropriation bill two years ago and passed, as the Senator from Montana now states. It being at an important point in that State, and being exceptional in its character, I shall not make the point of order respecting it; but I will make it as respects every other public-building item that is presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent presented by the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer an amendment. On page 104, after line 10, I move to insert:

That the provisions of the river and harbor acts of August 18, 1894, and June 3, 1896, making appropriations for improving the harbor at Coos Bay, Oregon, by deepening the harbor and removing obstructions therefrom are hereby so amended as to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to expend any or all of the funds so appropriated in carrying on the required dredging and other work by contract or in any manner that in his judgment may be most economical and advantageous to the Government.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like very much to have some explanation of that amendment. What is it?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that in the river and harbor acts of 1894 and 1896, $27,390 was appropriated for dredging out the harbor in front of Marshfield, Coos Bay, Oregon. That provided for the purchase of a dredger and two barges. There is not money enough to build a dredger and two barges and do the work. There is a party ready to do the work for less than the appropriation. There is no possible objection to the amendment. It has been passed upon. The bill has passed the Senate twice, and I offer the amendment now at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment presented by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 53 I move to strike out from line 20 down to and including line 4, on page 54, and insert what I send to the desk. I will make a brief explanation. If anyone objects to the amendment I will withdraw it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will listen to the reading, he will learn what it is. It is the provision relating to recoinage, reissue, and transportation of minor coins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 19, page 53, strike out all of the bill down to and including line 4, on page 54, and insert the following:

Transportation of minor coin: For transportation of minor coin, $20,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, minor coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount of coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain the amendment briefly, and I hope Senators who are interested in this question will give me their attention. The present method of distributing minor coin is through the mint at Philadelphia. All the minor coins are sent from the mint, and all the requests for minor coins are sent to the mint. If I or anyone in my State desires a given quantity of minor coin, the currency or a draft must be sent to the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia, and the coin is shipped from there. The proposed amendment authorizes these minor coins to be kept at the different subtreasuries in the United States and distributed from that point without charge to those asking for the coins.

Mr. TURPIE. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TURPIE. In the phrase "minor coin" does the Senator include subsidiary silver, nickel, and copper coin?

Mr. ALLISON. It includes only the nickel and copper coins. The amendment is offered upon the recommendation of the new Director of the Mint, and his letter is here, as is also the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending it. I have read those letters carefully and I think that it is a wise provision to substitute. It might go at least into conference. It is certainly much easier to distribute these minor coin, and I think they will be distributed much more largely from the subtreasuries than from the mint of the United States at Philadelphia. That is the only mint from which the distribution is made under the existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the amendment authorize recoining?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not authorize recoining, because there is an ample amount of coin, if it can only be distributed. The Senator means the recoinage of old minor coins.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision here says:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to recoin any and all of the uncurrent minor coins now in the Treasury.

Does the Senator propose to strike out that part or leave it in?

Mr. ALLISON. The Director of the Mint requests that the whole of it may be stricken out. I think the amount expended for the recoinage of this minor coin is a very small part of the expenditure. I have offered the amendment in the phraseology recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, striking out the whole paragraph and inserting what has been read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 88, line 11, I ask that the comma may be stricken out after the word "buildings" at the end of the line, so as to read:

Springfield Arsenal, Springfield, Mass.: For general care, repair of quarters, of buildings and machinery not used for manufacturing purposes, $10,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the clerks to turn to page 96. I will ask the Secretary if, in line 15, the word "fifty" has been stricken out and "sixty" inserted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty" in line 15.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, page 96, before the word "thousand," strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty."

Mr. ALLISON. And in line 16, strike out the word "five."

Mr. COCKRELL. And insert what?

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a proposed change respecting military posts, which is to increase, in line 15, the $50,000 limitation to $60,000, and diminish it, in line 16, from $25,000 to $20,000.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, page 96, it is proposed to strike out "five," before the word "thousand;" so as to read:

Twenty thousand dollars for each additional battery.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a letter from the Secretary of War calling attention to the phraseology.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 96, in lieu of lines 23 and 24, which are inserted in italics, I ask that the words I send to the desk may be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 96 strike out lines 23 and 24 and insert in lieu thereof:

Toward the construction of buildings of brick or stone for a military post of Fort Meade, S. Dak., $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 134, line 12, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

The printing of said volume to be done in accordance with the provisions of section 383 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Chair to inform me where the Nicaragua Canal amendment is inserted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After line 24, page 141.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the whole of that provision may be stricken out and what I send to the desk substituted. Senators will see what is proposed by it.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the amendment after line 24, on page 141, and insert in lieu thereof the following——

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the amendment to be stricken out and then we will get at the whole question.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Secretary to read what is proposed to be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following amendment:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: The engineer member of the Nicaragua Canal Commission, appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, as authorized by the sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, shall be entitled to receive compensation in addition to his regular Army pay and allowances equal to the difference between such annual Army pay and allowances and the compensation of the other two members of the commission.

And to insert the following in lieu thereof:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: Each member of the Nicaragua Canal Commission shall receive such compensation and allowance for mileage and expenses as the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, may deem proper; and the engineer member appointed from the Corps of Engineers shall be entitled to receive compensation in addition to his regular Army pay and allowances equal to the difference between such annual Army pay and allowances and the compensation of the other two members of the commission.

Mr. ALLISON. In brief, I will state that the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that these officers can draw no money for compensation under existing statutes because these persons were appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and therefore became officers of the Government, and could not draw any pay without some provision being made by law for it. So none of the commissioners, I understand, have drawn any pay.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was there not an appropriation to pay the salaries?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation was a lump appropriation to pay the compensation of these people.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the Comptroller decides that the President can not distribute the appropriation and say what shall be paid?

Mr. ALLISON. Not until there is some authority to fix the amount which they shall be paid. The Secretary of State fixes their compensation and their mileage, or their daily compensation in lieu of mileage.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interject a remark?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. The commission is composed of a retired officer of the Army, a civilian engineer, and one officer of the Army in active service. The President fixed the pay. The retired officer of the Army is allowed to get his pay, and the civilian engineer gets his pay, but the active officer of the Army can not receive more pay without an act of Congress. That is the position.

Mr. ALLISON. Not only is that true, but it is also true that none of them can receive any pay and have their accounts allowed until some such provision as is proposed here shall be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amount that is to be paid them?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the amount is $7,500 each, without reference to the time employed. That was fixed by the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. What else will this allow those officers?

Mr. ALLISON. It allows their traveling expenses in addition; that is all, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should there not be a provision about the officers of the Navy? If what the Senator from New Jersey says is correct, if there is a naval officer there, why should there not be such a provision?

Mr. SEWELL. The naval officer is a retired officer.

Mr. COCKRELL. He can not draw anything but his retired pay.

Mr. SEWELL. As I understand it, he can. It has been customary to give retired officers additional pay for additional service; but the army officer is in active service and can not draw any more pay.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Comptroller hold that the retired officers can draw extra pay?

Mr. SEWELL. So I am informed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 13, on page 136.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 136, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the clerks of the United States district and circuit courts in the districts of South Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall receive the same fees and compensation for services performed by them as are provided by law to similar officers performing like services in the districts of Idaho, North Dakota, and Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, on page 71, after the word "ninety," it is proposed to insert:

And such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States, except railroad land grants and such indemnity lands as the several States may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes, which may have been sold or included in some reservation, or otherwise disposed of.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 137, line 2, after the word "dollars."

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 2, on page 137, it is proposed to insert:

The commissioners appointed by the President to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States shall, in the execution of their work, act jointly as a commission, and the expenses of the commissioners heretofore appropriated, including compensation of assistants and necessary office rent, shall be paid by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice, on vouchers certified by the chairman of said commission and approved by the Attorney-General. With the consent of the presiding officers of the two Houses of Congress unoccupied rooms in the Capitol may be assigned, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, for the use of the commission.

The said commissioners shall prepare, as a part of their work, a brief code of criminal procedure of the United States circuit and district courts, the same to be submitted to Congress for final action thereon.

The work of said commission shall, under the direction of the chairman thereof, be printed at the Government Printing Office, and when completed shall, together with the stereotyped plates, be the property of the United States.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I could not hear very well the reading of the amendment, but I infer from what I understood of the reading that rooms are to be assigned in this Capitol Building for some commission.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, a year ago Congress in an appropriation act provided for the appointment of three commissioners to codify the criminal laws of the United States. They were appointed. Judge Culberson, of Texas, was one, Governor Botkin, of Montana, was another, and, I think, Mr. Thompson, of Ohio, was another. The Comptroller of the Treasury held that it was not a commission, and that they must discharge their duties separately, which, of course, is absurd. They could not without constant consultation codify the laws of the United States.

This amendment in the form of a bill was introduced, it was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and passed the Senate, and has been favorably reported in the other House, but has not yet been considered by the House.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator to insert the words "in the new Library Building," instead of "in the Capitol." There is only one part of this building that can be assigned, and that is the old Library rooms, and there is a controversy between the two Houses as to them.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin, in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, will strike that particular provision out of the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection whatever to doing so.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator does not think that is legislation, does he?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; it is not legislation. It is clearly—and any lawyer would say so—to carry out an existing law which has been misconstrued beyond any possible question.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment changes existing law.

Mr. SPOONER. No; it does not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment after the word "Attorney-General," in line 9, by striking out:

With the consent of the presiding officers of the two Houses of Congress, unoccupied rooms in the Capitol may be assigned, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, for the use of the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that motion is put I desire—and it will be the last time I will do so—to call attention to the fact that we are constantly putting new legislation on appropriation bills. This is beyond question new legislation, and I presume obnoxious to the rules of the Senate. I think we ought to be extremely careful about that matter.

I notice that there was a good deal of talk about a little matter that I offered, which possibly was in the nature of new legislation, and it was ruled out of order. The frequency with which this thing is done and the persistency with which it is done certainly encourage those of us who have had less service in this body to feel that we might be permitted now and then to do what the older members of the Senate are constantly doing in this regard.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not a case in which my friend from New Hampshire can draw upon me the lex talionis, because this is not a new provision of law. The Judiciary Committee is of the opinion that it simply carries out the existing law and nothing else.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit that the general law does not give these gentlemen quarters in the Capitol Building.

Mr. SPOONER. That has been stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg pardon. Then I accept the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and am delighted to know that the older Senators see the propriety of not putting new legislation on an appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

INTERVENTION IN CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PETTUS. I call the attention of the President to the fact that a messenger from the House of Representatives is waiting at the door.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference, and that the resolution be committed to a committee of conference, to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the message be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives. The Chair hears no objection, and the message will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 18, 1898.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its amendments to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 233) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to intervene to stop the war in Cuba, and for the purpose of establishing a stable and independent government of the people therein, and asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. ADAMS, Mr. HEATWOLE, and Mr. DINSMORE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for a division of the question on the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has the right to have the question divided.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for a division of the question on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House, accede to the request for a conference, and that the resolution be committed to a committee of conference.

Mr. BACON. It has been impossible for any of us on this side of the Chamber to hear what the Senator said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion, as the Chair understands it, is that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives, accede to the conference asked for by the House, and that the committee of conference be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. PASCO. That is not the motion. The motion is that the Senate disagree to the amendment and accede to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. FAULKNER. And that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the motion as he understood it to have been made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for a division of the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator——

Mr. ALLEN. The rule of the Senate requires the Senate itself to appoint the conferees. That is the question I want to submit now for their action.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have stated the motion we are to vote upon. I do not understand exactly the way the Senator wants us to vote on the proposition.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the motion is that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and accede to the request for a conference, and that the committee of conference be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. If I heard the Senator from Minnesota aright, he repeats his motion that the Senate agree to the conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees. Now, I call for a division of that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the motion to be that the Senate still further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and accede to the request of the House for a conference committee.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the first proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That proposition is before the Senate. The Senator has the right to have it divided. The question is on that branch of the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I move that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, as to the appointment of conferees, I call attention to the rule of the Senate and object to the request of the Senator from Minnesota; and on that I desire to be heard just for a moment.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a question of order. This is a very important matter, and it is impossible on this side to hear a single word that the Senator from Nebraska is saying. I shall either be compelled to ask to have order or that the Senator from Nebraska strengthen his voice.

Mr. ALLEN. I will try and overcome that difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say that I want it distinctly understood that I do not object, individually, to the Vice-President making the appointment on the supposition that there will be anything unfair in the selection of the conferees; but this is a very important matter, and I think it is one of those questions where we should adhere strictly to the rule. The only rule we have on the subject is Rule XXIV, which is in the following language:

In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee——

Mr. HAWLEY. I again renew the request made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. We are well acquainted with the Senator from Nebraska, and know that he can be heard not only within but without the building, if he desires, and we can not hear him now.

Mr. ALLEN. I can not even hear the Senator from Connecticut. I know he is saying something, but I can not tell what it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will try to make the Senator hear. I say that he can not be heard; that we can not hear him.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Connecticut and the Senate will give me their attention, which I think I am entitled to, I will read the rule:

1. In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof.

Now I call attention to this sentence:

All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

That is the only rule upon the subject of the appointment of committees.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the rule for the guidance of the Senate is clear. There is a provision for the appointment of standing committees, and then the rule provides:

All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

It has been, I suppose, the custom of the Senate, unbroken from a period long preceding the recollection of the oldest of us, to intrust to the Chair the appointment of its conferees. In that case the Senate otherwise orders, and this motion is a motion for such an order, and therefore is in order. The proper mode to get at it, if the Senate refuses to pursue its unbroken custom, is to adopt the motion. If the Senate chooses to trust its presiding officer with this function, which, whatever may have been his political opinions, he and his predecessors have always exercised, in accordance with a usage of the Senate, also unbroken, to select the members of the committees of conference from the committee having the subject in charge, dividing them between the majority and the minority in the Chamber, then they will vote down this motion to proceed to elect by ballot.

Mr. STEWART. I think that there should be a qualification made in connection with that statement of the rule by the Senator from Massachusetts. I remember that until quite recently in making selection of conferees, the Chair always has in view the idea of representing the majority of the Senate upon that particular question where there is a difference, and those constituting the majority in favor of the measure are entitled to have a majority of the committee to represent their views. That has been the rule; and I have never known an exception to it until 1899.

It was stated frequently by the older members thirty years ago that that was binding in all cases. I have heard it discussed two or three times. The view was that the majority on the particular question should be represented by a majority of the committee of conference. That has been the rule; but so far as this matter is concerned, I do not think it makes much difference.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the modern rule has been as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the presiding officer, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee which has the matter in charge, makes the selection of members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate.

As a rule, the chairman of the committee is first taken and the next highest member on the committee takes a place with him; then the leading member of the opposition is put on the committee, thus making the three. That has been the custom. True, it has been the custom to allow the Chair to appoint the conferees, on the theory that these motions usually pass nemine contradicente without any controversy, and the Chair is allowed to appoint on the ground of unanimous consent, which sets aside the rule. It is not, however, always done in that way.

Occasionally the majority in the Chamber find themselves in a position that if that rule should be carried out they would be without any representative on a conference committee. We found ourselves in that position on the bankrupt bill, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who had presented an amendment to the bill reported by the committee, which finally became the bill as adopted by the Senate, was by some means—I do not know just how, for I was not here when it was done—was appointed as a member of that committee of conference with two others who had been opposed to the bill as the Senate had passed it.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] stated here, and stated to us of the committee who were disposed to raise the question whether we ought not to have two members of the committee, or a majority of it, that the universal custom had been when a committee of conference was appointed that they should stand for the Senate view of the case. He made a very strong presentation on that line, saying that the majority of the committee, although their personal views were against the bill adopted by the Senate, would feel themselves bound to stand by the Senate view until the Senate should practically release them. I think I state the case correctly. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I do not?

Mr. HOAR. I think I stated it in a form somewhat different, but I do not want to make any discussion with the Senator as to the particular phrases he has used. The substance of his statement is undoubtedly correct. As the Senator states, the conferees are persons commissioned by the Senate to carry out its views.

Mr. TELLER. That is undoubtedly true; but, as stated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], formerly, at least, it was not an unusual thing for a change to be made. There is no rule that requires the chairman of the committee which originally had a particular subject in charge to go on a conference committee, and there is no rule that the Senator who stands next to him on the committee having charge of the subject should go on the conference committee, or that the Senator who stands at the head of the opposition should go upon it. That is simply a method which has grown up here without any rule of the Senate to justify it.

It does not imply any doubt of the presiding officer to say that that is not satisfactory to the Senate, because it is understood that in the absence of a direction from the Senate the presiding officer will proceed in that way. He will first name the chairman of the committee having the subject in charge as the chairman of the conference committee, then he will take a member of the political party on that committee who stands next to the chairman, and then he will take the leading Democrat on the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is it not a fact which is known to every member of the Senate that the Vice-President does not really make the selection at all, but that the Senator who makes the motion for the conference really makes the suggestion of the names of the Senators to go upon the conference committee, and makes it in the order suggested by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I would say that the almost universal rule has been for the chairman of the committee to pass up to the presiding officer the names of those whom he wants on the committee. I do not know that that has been waived in the slightest degree. I have always seen it done. He makes a memorandum and hands it to the presiding officer, and the presiding officer makes the appointment; and he makes it as a rule in the direction I have stated, unless there is some good reason why it should be changed.

Mr. CULLOM. Invariably.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the Senator's motion is.

Mr. ALLEN. I had not reached the point of making a motion. I had just reached this question——

Mr. TELLER. I suppose as the question now stands it is whether we shall order the selection by ballot.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire at this point, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit, as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that we proceed to the selection of the conferees by ballot.

Mr. President, without consuming the time of the Senate in discussing this matter, I propose to put myself upon record from start to finish on this subject on one side of it, and to leave nothing undone that I can do to make the Senate amendment recognizing the existence of the Republic of Cuba an accomplished fact.

I am not seeking a point to surrender. I shall not surrender. It was not and is not in any spirit of distrust of or disrespect to the Presiding Officer that I make this motion. I make it because it is a rule of the Senate, because as a Senator I have a right to have a vote whether we will proceed under the rule or waive it. I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but that is a habit of mine. I know of but few questions in which he and I concur.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me? There is one question on which he and I concur, I think.

Mr. ALLEN. I had forgotten it.

Mr. HOAR. I have great respect for that Senator and I know he has.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not hear that remark, but I will——

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will not agree to it.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree to it. Let me quote this language just once more:

All other committees—

That embraces conference committees—shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

Now, the Senator from Massachusetts holds that under this rule the Senate can abdicate its power to select the committeemen. That is not a proper construction of the rule at all. The rule reserves to the Senate itself the power to appoint the committee, and says the Senate can appoint by ballot or in some other manner. That does not authorize the Senate to abandon its function or power of appointment. That is the difference between the Senator from Massachusetts and me. The rule vests plenary and exclusive jurisdiction in the Senate to appoint the conferees. The Senate can not select some agent who is not a member of its organization to appoint the conferees. The Vice-President is simply a presiding officer here, with a right to cast a vote in case of tie, and with no other power than to preserve order.

While individually I would as lief trust the Vice-President and Presiding Officer of this body in the selection of the conferees as to trust myself, having the highest confidence in his fairness, this is a great question, in which all the people of the country are interested, and if we abdicate our power here it will be claimed that it was in surrender of the position we have taken within the last week or more. I am not prepared to put myself in an attitude where any gentleman can justly charge me with surrendering.

I make this motion, and I am prepared to vote.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, we find ourselves here in a contention with the House of Representatives, the Senate time after time voting for one proposition and the House of Representatives voting time after time for a different proposition. We propose to settle this difference by a conference between the two Houses. The House has already appointed its conferees, and a majority of the conferees are favorable to the proposition which the House sustains. It is proper here, in my judgment, that the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate should be composed in the same way. The majority of the committee have failed to sustain their proposition before the Senate, and they are not entitled to a majority of the conferees. The proposition of the Senate should be in the hands of its friends and not in the hands of its enemies.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. PASCO. But it has been the practice in the Senate, as has been already stated, to have the conferees appointed by the Vice-President. He has these appointments, nominally at least, in his hands. He has generally been guided by the suggestions of the chairman of the committee which has control of the bill under consideration. But in a great crisis and an important case like this, I take it that the Vice-President will act himself and be fair and wise and just, and that he will not, as a matter of course, accept the suggestions of the chairman of the committee; in this case the responsibility does not belong to the majority of the committee, because it is not in sympathy with the majority of the Senate, and the Vice-President should feel entirely at liberty to act entirely upon his own judgment and do what he thinks is right and fair and just.

During the year and more that he has presided over our councils he has acted invariably in that way, and for one I shall not vote to take away the power of appointment from him now. I shall be in favor of his exercising that power, and exercising it in accordance with his views of what is right and just and proper in this great emergency.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senate has by two votes, 14 majority each time, decided that it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should recognize the Cuban government at the head of whose military forces is Maximo Gomez, rebel, as France recognized the independence of the colonies of the Confederacy at the head of whose military forces was G. Washington, rebel.

Now, there are Senators upon this floor who are unwilling to keep the two Houses of Congress from acting to-day and within an hour by insisting upon the recognition of the present Cuban Republic. Mr. President, they are capable of making those sacrifices. The Spanish Cortes meets on Wednesday, and it is important that there should go to the Cortes if possible the unanimous voice of the American Congress in favor of Cuban freedom. I am capable of making that sacrifice, but I do ask that we may be spared the necessity of violating every principle of parliamentary law in order to accomplish this desired result.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] was the author of the clause for which the Senate has pronounced by these two votes of 14 majority, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] was the only Republican advocate of that clause, and now it is gravely proposed in the Senate that a conference committee shall be appointed upon which is neither of these Senators, a conference committee of three Senators every one of whom is against the proposition for which the Senate has twice voted.

Mr. THURSTON. And Senators who voted against it on the last vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that the enemies of Cuban freedom, who have taken charge of the movement for Cuban freedom and do not mean that it shall go forward unless it goes forward under their auspices and with their consent, ought at least to allow the decencies of parliamentary law to be observed. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this is a case where our conferees ought to have some instructions, and I desire to move, before the conferees are appointed, that they shall be instructed as follows:

The conferees on the part of the Senate are hereby instructed to consent to no report which does not recognize the republican government of Cuba.

Several SENATORS. Vote! vote!

Mr. STEWART. This is too essential to say, "Vote! vote!" I must say a few words.

In this case the issue is as between bonds and human freedom. Our State Department is filled with letters and demands in favor of our citizens against governments which have acquired territory upon which they had claims. When Chili took a part of Peru, it was held by our State Department, and held by all Europe, that the bonds issued by Peru, secured by nitrate beds, and all the obligations on the guana beds pertained to the land. There is no better-settled proposition than that where a lien is fixed upon property and it is taken by conquest the lien remains.

There are several hundred millions, alleged to be $400,000,000, of bonds and other securities secured by the Cuban revenue. If it is taken by conquest, there is no doubt about the preservation of the lien. There is no exception among the authorities. It is admitted by every one. There is but one way of freeing the Cuban people from this enormous debt incurred to deprive them of liberty. The principal animus, the cause of this war, is the enormous taxation to pay interest on the obligations fastened upon the revenues of Cuba. It was intolerable. That is what they have been fighting for. They have been fighting for liberty.

All the authorities say that a people are not bound, when they secure their liberty by fighting, to pay for the money used to attempt to suppress them. If we go upon that island denying that there is any government there, and if we, after this discussion, adopt the House resolution and go there at all, it will be said that we have considered that question. It will be asserted, and can not be denied, that we considered that question and found that there was no government there. The very resolution says we are going there to establish a government. If we go there to establish a government, the patriots do not win it and do not win their freedom. They are opposed to any intervention which does not recognize what they have won.

When the President of the United States tells us that Spain has lost Cuba and can never regain it, in the same sentence he tells us that it has been gained by the Cubans by their blood and treasure and heroism. We go forward and say, after they have obtained that right, that we will rob them of it by armed intervention, restrain them, and give them a government that shall be liable. The issue is between bonds and human rights and human liberty. That is the proposition, and to appoint a conference committee without any further discussion is mock justice. No man can challenge what I say. There is only one way to win freedom of debt and freedom of slavery, and that is by winning victories, which they have done. They never have asked us to do more than keep our hands off.

I read a little while ago from President Monroe. When he came into office in 1817, he called attention to the existing Republics of Mexico and South America. There had been revolutions in every one of them, and he stated to Congress year after year in his messages that the United States had been entirely neutral, and had given the same privileges to the insurgents that they had to Spain. That was also practiced in the case of Texas—neutrality—but in the case of Cuba your committee reports that we have not been neutral; that we have spent millions of dollars patrolling the seas; that we have refused to allow Cubans to buy in our markets; that our influence has been with the oppressors. Hostility to the insurgents has been exhibited by the Executive during the whole of this war. It is perfectly heartless. All the Cubans ask is that we acknowledge their belligerent rights and let them free themselves and not to fasten this debt upon them.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. STEWART. I have the right to stand here and plead for human liberty one moment. Every convention that has met of all parties has declared for human liberty. They have expressed the sympathy of the country. We have had admiration from every tongue for these struggling Cubans, and the President tells us that they have won their liberty. He says Spain has lost the island. All the Cubans want is a chance to proceed unmolested. If they can have the privilege accorded them which every other Spanish-American country has had, they do not ask for any further recognition.

If you acknowledge their belligerent rights, in six months they will be free; but to put a debt of four or five hundred million dollars on them will Egyptianize the country and deprive them of all the fruits of their heroism and their sacrifices. It is very well to speak of these people having committed sacrifices and having displayed heroism without parallel in modern history. It is very well to admire and sympathize with them, but it was a new departure when we refused them the same belligerent rights we accorded to Spain, when we denied them the right to trade in our markets.

The President had power to do it. He has the precedent. This is an exception. He will not accord any rights to them because the right of the Cubans is the expense of the bondholders. I do not suppose that that is his reason, but that is the reason of his advisers, no doubt. If the Cubans have rights and liberty, the bondholders have no right to sell them into slavery. I know that four or five hundred million dollars of bonds, the franchises, and the plunder of that rich island constitute a temptation to greedy speculators. I do not charge anybody connected with Congress, but Congress is influenced by papers, by bankers, by rich men, and money lenders. Before we yield to their demands and destroy these people, turn them over into bonded slavery much more degrading and horrible than the Spanish rule under which they groan, let us deliberate a little.

Do nothing and you will do better than to destroy that government whose citizens have sacrificed so much—a third of the population decimated by the barbarities of Spain. In the face of all that, can filthy lucre demand the pound of flesh just now? I suppose the members who vote for this have not studied the law; do not know the situation; do not know that if we go there denying the establishment of that Government, it is conquest; do not know that it is robbery of those people. There can be no conference here that gives away the recognition of independence that does not give away the liberties of the Cubans and make them slaves. They have not asked for it. If you will give them their belligerent rights, as you have given them to every other republic on the hemisphere, it is all they ask.

If I had time I could read to you page after page showing the treatment of Monroe and Jackson. Senators talk about this being a Presidential question. This is what the precedent is: Mr. Hamilton, when he wanted to have the Constitution adopted, belittled it. He said it was a mere matter of form. Afterwards he concluded that it involved a great many other powers. Indeed, almost the war power.

Mr. Madison answered him and showed what he had said before the Constitution was adopted. It was a mere academic discussion. When all the South American republics were up for consideration, all these cases were considered, and Mr. Monroe, after he had given them belligerent rights and they had gone on for years, finally, when he thought proper, submitted the whole question to Congress, and said he would be governed by their views; that if they concurred with him that they ought to have recognition, he suggested to them to make a proper appropriation for sending diplomatic agents there and the result would be accomplished. It was referred to the committee and was discussed here for days. The committee reported it, and I have the report here. The committee reported a resolution recommending the recognition of all those republics and making an appropriation of $100,000 to carry it into effect. Thus they were recognized as sovereign states.

The next was Texas, which was the last of the new governments recognized, and I want to tell you what General Jackson said. His name has been used in this debate in connection with the admission of States. In December, 1836, he sent a message to Congress in regard to Texas. He stated in that message that he thought it was premature to recognize Texas at that time, but he said it was a delicate question that we should receive the State at that time; that where it involved a mere question of fact he was inclined to do it, but in almost all cases it involves legislation, and frequently war, and in those cases it was improper for the President to act alone, but he should have the advice of Congress. He submitted it to them. He said that he would not do it, and he did not do it.

Then in March following Congress passed an appropriation to send a diplomatic agent or consul to Texas and the Senate passed a resolution recommending the admission of the State. He took those up and discussed them, and he said that that amounted to the approbation of Congress and upon that he recognized Texas. He said it would be very improper to have any controversy about it; that there were many cases where the President could not go it alone, or words to that effect. That is the position. The President can only do it alone where it involves no consequences but is a mere formality.

But the idea here is that the President shall recognize Cuba alone. He can recognize the belligerent rights alone, and it requires no legislation; but to recognize the independence, as Jackson said, might involve war, and the President has no right to take steps that might involve the country in war. Consequently he could not recognize Cuba. Now, because Spain is threatening war, he has no such power. It is legislative and executive power combined, and this resolution is the only method by which the Republic of Cuba can be recognized. If he is jealous of his prerogative, let him recognize it now, and not rob those people of the fruits of their dear-bought victory. That is cruel. I will stop now. When the report of the conference committee comes in, if independence is not recognized by the conferees, I will then go on with my speech.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Missouri is, I understand, in accordance with all of the precedents of this body as far as the practice is concerned for many years. It is now propcsed to sharply deviate from that practice because of the presence of an alleged exigency. There is an exigency here, but it is an exigency that requires careful, candid, deliberate treatment, and it is not an exigency that should be solved in a whirlwind of passion. I suggest that this is about the last occasion where the rules of the Senate should be departed from.

When Senators say that because it may be that two distinguished members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who are the heads of their respective parties on that committee, can not be trusted, it makes me think how little after all is service or fame; for if there are two men upon the Committee on Foreign Relations who have striven in season and out of season, and to my mind sometimes beyond the limits they ought to have trodden—I speak of this only as a matter of judgment—those two men are the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If the report of the committee of conference is not in accordance with the wishes of the Senate, the Senate can render a judgment annulling that report. Let us proceed therefore in accordance with our precedents, and act when the report comes here in accordance with the jurisdiction which we have under our well-adopted rules.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I have occupied only eight minutes of the time of the Senate since the resolution was first reported from the committee. I realize that the time has come for the appointment of a conference committee. I propose for my part to trust to the honor of a committee that will be practically selected by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senate knows how the vote was on the last test this afternoon. If that committee sees fit to select three members, all of whom voted against the wish of the Senate, well and good. I do not believe it ought to be done.

I think that the rules of parliamentary procedure and precedent require that a reasonable division of the membership of the conference committee should be made, for it is not only that the members appointed here will stand as far as they think proper in support of the Senate, but there ought to be some Senator on that committee who is prepared from his heart to argue the majority position of the Senate. But, sir, if that committee can afford to go before the country with a conference committee composed of those whose last votes were all recorded against the majority of the Senate, well and good. I shall vote to permit them to exercise their best judgment upon their honor in this case.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it so happens that I am the only Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Relations who supported in the committee and on the floor of the Senate the proposition to recognize the Republic of Cuba. It is probably in the minds of some of the Senators, in view of this fact, to take such action here as would place me on the conference committee. I want to say in answer to that suggestion, for it has been made to me, that I am perfectly satisfied to have the Chair appoint the conference committee, and I am not only satisfied to have the Chair make the appointment, but I very greatly prefer that the Chair should make the appointment. If we had more time I might say more in view of the circumstances attending us this afternoon upon the subject, but in view of the fact that I have some anxiety to hear the guns, I quit the matter with that remark.

Mr. FRYE. I suppose, Mr. President, that it is not an assumption on my part to think that perhaps the Vice-President in making the appointments might name me as one of the conferees—I being the oldest in service on the committee.

Mr. President, I am against the present recognition of the alleged republican government in Cuba. I believe that that recognition belongs to the President of the United States and not to Congress. In my judgment, in my place as conferee there should be appointed some Senator on the committee who holds views diametrically opposite to mine. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is the real father of the proposition to recognize the Cuban Republic now. He was persistent in committee, has been persistent since, and if I were Presiding Officer of the Senate, I would appoint Senator FORAKER as one of the conferees on that committee. I trust that the Presiding Officer of this body will do so and will not appoint me.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. Would you be opposed to omitting all language which would imply that there is no republican government there?

Mr. FRYE. I voted for language which implies it. I have been on a great many conferences in the Senate. Undoubtedly in a matter of this kind, whatever conferees are appointed by the Chair are in honor bound to maintain as long as they reasonably can the votes and opinions of the majority of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. No matter what——

Mr. FRYE. They are not bound to be obstinate and willful and refuse to make any sort of a compromise. If they were, then there would be nothing like a free conference.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator think it would be fair to appoint on the part of the Senate the known and open enemies of this measure?

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Maine has just said to the contrary.

Mr. FRYE. I have just said that I prefer very much indeed that some one shall take my place on the conference. I do not wish to be compelled to go into conference, and in that conference against my own judgment undertake to hold up against the House of Representatives.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. It is a surrender upon the part of the Senate the moment it appoints the enemies of this measure.

Mr. FRYE. That is not true.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought I had the floor, but I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question. It was for that reason I tried to get the floor, and I now take the liberty, with his permission, of asking him this question. He stated that he believed it was the constitutional prerogative of the President of the United States, and, I take it, the exclusive prerogative, to recognize the independence of a new state. I wish to ask him whether he believes it is the exclusive prerogative of the President of the United States to recognize the belligerency of a revolutionary power?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I have been silent all through this discussion, almost the only Senator who has not said one word, and that silence has been because I wanted action. I say, for God's sake let us do something for the people in Cuba. We claim to have been impelled to action because they were dying by the thousands, and now here we are confronted by this: There is the island, our neighbor, hundreds of thousands hungry to-day, no kindly hand to give them food, the Red Cross gone to the north, Clara Barton gone to her home, every American consul left; and every hour that we waste in discussion or in any other way is freighted with the death of some woman dying of starvation or some child perishing from hunger.

Mr. President, I wish, above all things, there may be, and I believe that within ten days, if Congress will do its duty, there will be peace in the Island of Cuba; there will be food; there will be kindly hands there to distribute it, or our cannon will be thundering at Morro Castle.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I admire the Senator from Maine, and I join with him in his sympathy for the Cuban people, but he did not answer nor pretend to answer the question I put to him.

Mr. QUAY and others. Vote!

Mr. LINDSAY. I propose to be heard. I have a right to be heard.

Mr. President, the resolution as it comes back from the House provides what? That the people of Cuba ought to be free and independent; that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to demand that Spain shall withdraw from Cuba her army and her navy and semblance of authority. Now, then, we are not to recognize that there is a Cuban government, provisional or permanent, and to demand that the only government we do recognize—the Government of Spain—shall be withdrawn and the people of Cuba left in a state of absolute anarchy. We provide in the third resolution that if Spain declines to withdraw, then we shall use the Army and the Navy to compel her withdrawal, and thereby leave those people without the shadow of government.

We have a fourth resolution, which disclaims any intention on our part to exercise sovereignty of power over the Island of Cuba except for its pacification. Who are we to pacify? We refuse to recognize the republican government; we are to break down the Spanish government; we are to leave the people without any government at all; and then we propose to pacify the people who are thus left absolutely in a state of nature.

Pacify them how? Pacify them through our Army, pacify them by military reconstruction, pacify them by setting up an American government which those people shall accept or remain without government? I ask the Senator whether he believes it is the exclusive prerogative of the President of the United States to recognize belligerency? That is a proper question, because when the conferees go out they will consider whether in the event they yield the acknowledgment of the recognition of independence they will recognize upon the recognition of belligerency.

Two years ago, when we had another President of the United States, many Senators who now think that the exclusive right to perform certain functions is in the Executive thought then that Congress might recognize a state of belligerency. A year ago these gentlemen thought that Congress might recognize a condition of belligerency. Why is it now, when we propose to destroy absolutely the preexisting government of the Island of Cuba, that we become so sensitive?

Mr. President, if the Republic of Cuba is not a free and independent government, it is certainly a belligerent power. It controls absolutely one-half of the island. The adhesion of two-thirds of the people, leaving out Havana, is given to that republic. Why, then, not acknowledge its belligerency, if we do nothing more, so that when the Spaniards yield to our demand and withdraw their army and navy and civil authorities there shall be an organized government in the island capable of bringing the people together for the formation of a permanent republican government?

These are the questions with which we have to deal. I insist that if the republic was a belligerent two years ago, when Grover Cleveland was President, it is a belligerent power to-day, now that William McKinley is President.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, everybody in the Senate, with the exception, perhaps, of half a dozen, has declared on various occasions his anxiety to do something for the struggling Cubans. We have now reached a point where we are ready to complete the final act. We have differed from the other branch of Congress, and many of us who differ with the Administration have acted in conjunction with quite a large number of those who support the Administration in all its policies excepting this. I understand they are not willing to act longer with us.

Mr. President, it is therefore apparent to me that if the vote of the Senate is taken now on that question we shall reverse the action of last Saturday. Is it not good policy; is it not good business; is it not the proper thing to do; is it not in the interest of the Cubans that we should settle that question here to-night? Why should we go through the form of putting the resolution into a conference committee and wait for a conference report if the thing is already practically settled that many Republicans who voted with us think they have voted with us long enough. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] assures me that he is prepared, in the interest of haste, to withdraw his amendment if it be necessary.

Mr. President, we might as well meet the question to-night as to meet it to-morrow or next day, after the conference committee has been in session and controverted this point one way and then another. If there is a majority here that wants now to accept the House amendment, we might just as well try that, and settle the question now. The Senator who has the resolution in charge can readily, by moving a reconsideration—and it will be given without any objection, I suppose—put the question where we can vote on it.

I speak only for myself. I do not speak for anybody else; but if any Senator thinks this is not a proper thing I do not want to press it on the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Colorado is probably not aware that the conferees appointed by the House are now in waiting to confer with the conferees to be appointed by the Senate, if any are to be appointed. I happen to know that in regard to the situation, which causes me to believe that if we could have our conferees appointed, in a very short time we could have a report from the conference committee before we adjourn, and the House has agreed to remain in session until they do hear that report. I for my part would prefer that.

The House has taken a recess until 8 o'clock, I understand They will be here at that time, and certainly by 8 o'clock—it is now quarter after 6—if the conferees are now appointed they should be ready to make a report; and I believe this whole matter could at 8 o'clock be promptly disposed of, and in a way that will be more satisfactory to many of us than it is at present.

Mr. TELLER. If I can learn that there is to be any modification of the House amendments—I have been told that there would not be; I have been told that the Republicans who voted with us would not sustain us any longer—but if there can be any modification that will help the matter, I am not opposed to the conference committee being appointed.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that there is a good chance that if the committee be appointed a conclusion can be reached that will be far more satisfactory to many of us than are the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. In view of the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], that the conference report will show an amendment more satisfactory than the House amendment, I will withdraw my proposed amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I state that as my opinion, based on information that has been given to me. I believe that is the case.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to object under those circumstances to the appointment of the conference committee. If anything can be gained by the conference committee, I am for it; but I was told a few moments ago, by what seemed to me proper authority, that there would be no change in the attitude of the House, and we would be compelled to take what has been proposed, or else to delay indefinitely and improperly this question. If there can be a modification, I do not object. If the other House has taken a recess, I will take a moment to say a word or two on this subject. I will not detain the Senate more than a very few moments.

Mr. President, I have been anxious for action. I have not delayed the Senate more than fifteen minutes for the last two months on this subject. I have had a great deal I should like to have said; I have had a great many things on my mind; I have not been satisfied with everything that has been done, but I determined in the outset that, so far as I was concerned, there should be no partisanship in this contest—there should be no attempt on my part to make political capital out of it.

Mr. President, when on Saturday night we were charged in the most offensive way by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Massachusetts with having attempted to bring in here divided counsels, I refrained then from speaking, when I might, under the rules of the Senate, have done so, because I wanted a vote; but, Mr. President, I want to say now that when this matter is disposed of, I propose to express my opinion on the floor of this Senate as to the treatment some of us have received from the friends of the Administration—treatment that we did not deserve; treatment, it seems to me, that no high-minded party would have attempted to bestow upon us. I say that so that the Senate need not be surprised if I make a speech dealing with this question on an appropriation bill or on a pension bill or on anything else.

I have refrained from speaking because I wanted action, because I believed, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says, we need action at once. I think action has been too long delayed, and if I have any criticism to make it is that we have dallied with this question too much. I want this ultimatum that we have provided for put to Spain, and I want Spain to answer it, and if she does not answer it in the affirmative, and say she will withdraw her troops from the Island of Cuba, and disclaim any sovereignty over that island, then I want to answer with the shotted guns of the American Army and the American Navy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, before we proceed to vote on this proposition I want to ask a question, and if there is anybody here who chooses to answer it I shall be glad to hear the answer.

The President of the United States has had able and eloquent defenders here who have spurned the thought, the idea, the accusation, or the insinuation that he would lend himself to any scheme of foisting the Spanish debt on the Cubans. Now I want to ask Mr. SPOONER, who so eloquently defended the President, and who told me Friday that there would be no carpetbaggers, whether he, upon his honor as a man, can give to the Senate his pledge that there will be no scheme of that sort that will be backed by the President of the United States? Will the Senator answer?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I challenge the propriety of putting to me such an interrogatory by my name. I had the honor to submit some observations to the Senate which were entirely sincere. I did not submit them as the representative of the President. I submitted them on my own account. I answered, or I endeavored to answer, politely every interrogatory which was addressed to me. I can only pledge my own opinion, and that I did without hesitation the other day.

Mr. TILLMAN. As to the carpetbaggers?

Mr. SPOONER. I said it was not to be thought of, in my opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you say that in regard to the bonds?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, I expressed my opinion about the bonds.

But I want to say now, Mr. President—only expressing my own opinion—that the suggestion to be sent out from the Senate Chamber in an exigency like this, that the President of the United States, or any man in either House who stands by him, is influenced, or could be influenced, in acting upon this subject, by any purpose commercial or financial in its character, or any attempt or wish to put upon the people of Cuba the burden of debt, is little else than an attack upon the Executive and an unfair and unjust impeachment of men who sit on this floor and are elsewhere in public life and have occasion to deal with this subject. That is my opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am thick-skinned, and therefore the question of the impropriety of my utterances does not deter me in the least if I can accomplish the purpose for which I have fought here, and that is to prevent this Senate and this Government by its action leaving the door open so that by any possibility this outrageous debt can be fastened upon those people. If I have made it so odious that men stand here and say that I am acting improperly because I am trying to make it odious, I am willing to bear the odium, provided no such infamy is ever perpetrated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is, Shall the conference committee be appointed by the Chair? [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to. The Chair appoints as the conference committee the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House has taken a recess until 8 o'clock, and will not be ready by that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to make it half past 8 o'clock. The House has taken a recess until 8 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois accept the amendment of his motion?

Mr. MASON. I accept the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I demand that before any further propositions are made, Senators take their seats and the Senate be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will Senators be kind enough to take their seats?

Mr. MASON. I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois as amended, that the Senate take a recess until half past 8 o'clock to-night. The Senator from Iowa was recognized for some observations.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is the rule, as I understand it, of the House——

Mr. HOAR. I insist on my point of order, Mr. President. I ask the Chair to enforce the rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will attempt to do so.

Mr. HOAR. More than two-thirds of the persons in this room are standing at this moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators will be in order. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is my understanding of the rules of the two Houses that where a communication is sent to one House by the other, in order to be received by that House, the two Houses must be in session; and if this conference is to begin at 8 o'clock, the Senate should be in session, formally, at least, in order that it may be in session when the House receives our message. So I hope there will be no suggestion to take a recess until a later hour than 8 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. The conference report has to be made to the Senate first.

Mr. MASON. Then I renew my motion that we take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make the inquiry whether if we take a recess the effect will be to prevent the conference committee from meeting during the recess?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair it will not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to be sure of that, Mr. President.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; they can meet informally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Deboe,	Mallory,	Quay,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	Mantle,	Rawlins,
Baker,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Roach,
Bate,	Foraker,	Mason,	Sewell,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Shoup,
Cannon,	Gear,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Teller,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clay,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Turley,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	Turpie,
Daniel,	McEnery,	Pritchard,	Warren.
Davis,	McLaurin,	Proctor,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MILITARY PUBLICATIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WARREN. I ask leave to take up the Senate joint resolution No. 150, which was temporarily laid aside for correction this morning. The chairman of the Committee on Printing, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], has authorized a substitute for the resolution, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Printing and laid over this morning?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 150) authorizing the printing of extra copies of military publications of the War Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be authorized to print, in excess of the 1,000 copies authorized by the act of January 12, 1895, such extra number of copies of the military publications of the War Department as may be necessary for the instruction of the National Guard of the various States.

Resolved, That there be printed for immediate distribution by the Secretary of War to the National Guard of the various States the following manuals, regulations, and drill books:

Three thousand copies of Infantry Drill Regulations.
One thousand copies of Cavalry Drill Regulations.
One thousand five hundred copies of Light Artillery Drill Regulations.
One thousand copies of Manual of Drill for the Hospital Corps.
Three thousand copies of Manual of Arms, Infantry Drill.
Three thousand copies of Army Regulations.
Five hundred copies of Regulations Pertaining to Uniforms.
Five hundred copies of Military Laws of the United States.
Five thousand copies of Manual for Army Cooks.
One thousand copies of Handbook of Subsistence Stores.
One thousand copies of Manual for Subsistence Department.
One thousand copies of Manual for Medical Department.
One thousand copies of Manual for Quartermaster's Department.
Five hundred copies of Paymaster's Manual.
Two hundred copies of Manual of Photography.

Also, that there be printed the following:

Three thousand copies of Infantry Drill Regulations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Six hundred copies of Cavalry Drill Regulations, of which 200 shall be for the use of the Senate and 400 for the use of the House of Representatives.

One thousand five hundred copies of Light Artillery Drill Regulations, of which 500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Two thousand copies of Manual of Arms, Infantry Drill, of which 650 shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 for the use of the House of Representatives.
